Q.

QUA

Q Is a consonant borrowed from the Latin or French, for which, though q is commonly placed in the Saxon alphabet, the Saxons generally used cp, cw; as cpellan or cwellan, to quell: qu is, in English, pronounced as by the Italians and Spaniards cu; as quail, quench, except quoit, which is spoken, according to the manner of the French, coit: the name of this letter is cue, from queue, French, tail; its form being that of an O with a tail.

QUAB. n. f. [derived, by Skinner, from gobio, the Latin name.] A sort of fish.

To QUACK. v. n. [quacken, Dutch, to cry as a goose.]

1. To cry like a duck. This word is often written quaake, to represent the sound better.

Wild-ducks quack where grasshoppers did sing. King.

2. To chatter boastfully; to brag loudly; to talk ostentatiously. Believe mechanick virtuosi Can raise them mountains in Potofi, Seek out for plants with signatures, To quack of universal cures. Hudibras, p. iii.

QUACK. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A boastful pretender to arts which he does not understand. The change, schools and pulpits are full of quacks, jugglers and plagiarists. L'Estrange.

Some quacks in the art of teaching, pretend to make young gentlemen masters of the languages, before they can be masters of common sense. Felton on the Classics.

2. A vain boastful pretender to physick; one who proclaims his own medical abilities in publick places. At the first appearance that a French quack made in Paris: a little boy walked before him, publishing with a shrill voice, "My father cures all sorts of distempers;" to which the doctor added in a grave manner, "The child says true." Addison.

3. An artful tricking practitioner in physick. Despairing quacks with curses fled the place, And vile attorneys, now an useless race. Pope.

QUACKERY. n. f. [from quack.] Mean or bad acts in physick.

QUACKSALVER. n. f. [quack and salve.] One who brags of medicines or salves; a medicalist; a charlatan. Saltimbancos, quacksalvers and charlatans deceive the vulgar in lower degrees; were Æsop alive, the piazza and the pont neuf could speak their fallacies. Brown.

Many poor country vicars, for want of other means, are driven to their shifts; to turn mountebanks, quacksalvers and empiricks. Burton on Melancholy.

QUADRAGESIMAL. adj. [quadragesimal, Fr. quadragesima, Latin.] Lenten; belonging to Lent; used in Lent. I have composed prayers out of the church collects, adventual, quadragesimal, paschal, or pentecostal. Sanderfon.

QUADRANGLE. n. f. [quadratus and angulus, Latin.] A square; a surface with four right angles. My choler being overblown With walking once about the quadrangle, I come to talk. Shakesp. Henry VI.

The escurial hath a quadrangle for every month in the year. Howel.

QUADRANGULAR. adj. [from quadrangle.] Square; having four right angles. Common salt shooteth into little crystals, coming near to a cube, sometimes into square plates, sometimes into short quadrangular prisms. Grew's Cofmol.

Each environed with a crust, conforming itself to the planes, is of a figure quadrangular. Woodward.

I was placed at a quadrangular table, opposite to the mace-bearer. Spectator, N<sup>o</sup> 617.

QUADRANT. n. f. [quadrans, Lat.]

1. The fourth part; the quarter. In sixty-three years may be lost eighteen days, omitting the intercalation of one day every fourth year, allowed for this quadrant or six hours supernumerary. Brown.

QUA

2. The quarter of a circle.

The obliquity of the ecliptick to the equator, and from thence the diurnal differences of the sun's right ascensions, which finish their variations in each quadrant of the circle of the ecliptick, being joined to the former inequality, arising from the excentricity, makes these quarterly and seeming irregular inequalities of natural days. Holder on Time.

3. An instrument with which altitudes are taken. Some had compasses, others quadrants. Tatler, N<sup>o</sup> 81.

Thin taper sticks must from one center part; Let these into the quadrant's form divide. Gay.

QUADRANTAL. adj. [from quadrant.] Included in the fourth part of a circle. To fill that space of dilating, proceed in strait lines, and dispose of those lines in a variety of parallels: and to do that in a quadrantal space, there appears but one way possible; to form all the interfections, which the branches make, with angles of forty-five degrees only. Derham's Physico-Theol.

QUADRATE. adj. [quadratus, Latin.]

1. Square; having four equal and parallel sides.

2. Divisible into four equal parts. The number of ten hath been extolled, as containing even, odd, long and plain, quadrate and cubical numbers. Brown.

3. [Quadrans, Lat.] Suited; applicable. This perhaps were more properly quadrant.

The word consumption, being applicable to a proper or improper consumption, requires a general description, quadrate to both. Harvey on Consumptions.

QUADRATE. n. f.

1. A square; a surface with four equal and parallel sides. And 'twixt them both a quadrate was the base, Proportion'd equally by seven and nine; Nine was the circle set in heaven's place, All which compacted, made a goodly diapase. Fa. Queen.

Whether the exact quadrate or the long square be the better, is not well determined; I prefer the latter, provided the length do not exceed the latitude above one third part. Wotton.

The powers militant That stood for heav'n, in mighty quadrate join'd Of union irresistible, mov'd on In silence their bright legions. Milton.

To our finite understanding a quadrate, whose diagonal is commensurate to one of the sides, is a plain contradiction. More's Divine Dialogues.

2. [Quadrat, Fr.] In astrology, an aspect of the heavenly bodies, wherein they are distant from each other ninety degrees, and the same with quartile. Ditt.

To QUADRATE. v. n. [quadro, Lat. quadrer, Fr.] To suit; to be accommodated. Aristotle's rules for Epick poetry, which he had drawn from his reflections upon Homer, cannot be supposed to quadrate exactly with the heroick poems, which have been made since his time; as it is plain, his rules would have been still more perfect, could he have perused the Æneid. Addison.

QUADRATIC. adj. Four square; belonging to a square. Ditt.

QUADRATIC equations. In algebra, are such as retain, on the unknown side, the square of the root or the number sought: and are of two sorts; first, simple quadratics, where the square of the unknown root is equal to the absolute number given; secondly, affected quadratics, which are such as have, between the highest power of the unknown number and the absolute number given, some intermediate power of the unknown number. Harris.

QUADRATURE. n. f. [quadratura, Fr. quadratura, Latin.]

1. The act of squaring. The speculations of algebra, the doctrine of infinites, and the quadrature of curves should not intrench upon our studies of morality. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

2. The

QUA

2. The first and last quarter of the moon.
It is full moon, when the earth being between the sun and moon, we see all the enlightened part of the moon; new moon, when the moon being between us and the sun, its enlightened part is turned from us; and half moon, when the moon being in the quadratures, we see but half the enlightened part. Locke.
3. The state of being square; a quadrate; a square.
All things parted by th' empyreal bounds,
His quadrature from thy orbicular world. Milton.
- QUADRENNIAL. adj. [quadrannium, from quatuor and annus, Latin.]
1. Comprising four years.
2. Happening once in four years.
- QUADRABLE. adj. [from quadra, Lat.] That may be squared.

The lives of men on earth might have continued double, treble or quadruple, to any of the longest times of the first age. Raleigh's History of the World.
Fat refreshes the blood in the penury of aliment during the winter, and some animals have a quadruple caul. Arbutnot.
- TO QUADRUPLICATE. v. a. [quadruplex, Fr. quadruplex, Lat.] To double twice; to make fourfold.
- QUADRUPLICATION. n. f. [from quadruplicate.] The taking a thing four times.
- QUADRUPLY. adv. [from quadruple.] To a fourfold quantity.
If the person accused maketh his innocence appear, the accuser is put to death, and out of his goods the innocent person is quadruply recompensed. Swift.
- QUERE. [Latin.] Enquire; seek; a word put when any thing is recommended to enquiry.
Quere, if 'tis steeped in the same liquor, it may not prevent the fly and grub. Martimer's Husbandry.
- TO QUAFF. v. a. [of this word the derivation is uncertain: Junius, with his usual idleness of conjecture, derives it from the Greek, κωφίσις in the Eolick dialect used for κωφίσις. Skinner from go off, as go off, quoff, quaff, quaff. It comes from coffer, Fr. to be drunk.] To drink; to swallow in large draughts.
He calls for wine; a health, quoth he, as if
H' ad been abroad carousing to his mates

QUA

- After a storm, quafft off the muscadei,
And threw the fops all in the sexton's face; Shakeſp.
I found the prince,
With such a deep demeanour in great sorrow,
That tyranny, which never quafft but blood,
Would, by beholding him, have wafht his knife
With gentle eye drops. Shakeſp. Henry IV. p. ii.
On flow'rs repos'd, and with rich flow'rets crown'd,
They eat, they drink, and in communion sweet Quaff immortality and joy. Milton's Par. Loſt, b. v.
- TO QUAFF. v. n. To drink luxuriously.
We may contrive this afternoon,
And quaff carouses to our miſtreſs' health. Shakeſp.
Belthazzer, quaffing in the sacred vessels of the temple, sees his fatal sentence writ by the fingers of God. South.
Twelve days the gods their solemn revels keep,
And quaff with blameless Ethiops in the deep. Dryden.
- QUAFFER. n. f. [from quaff.] He who quaffs.
- TO QUAFFER. v. n. [a low word, I suppose, formed by chance.] To feel out. 'Tis seems to be the meaning.
Ducks, having larger nerves that come into their bills than geese, quaffer and grope out their meat the most. Derham.
- QUAGGY. adj. [from quagmire.] Boggy; soft; not solid. Anſ.
This word is somewhere too in Clarissa.
- QUAGMIRE. n. f. [that is, quakemire.] A shaking marsh; a bog that trembles under the feet.
The fen and quagmire, to marsh by kind,
Are to be drained. Tuſſer.
Your hearts I'll stamp out with my horse's heels,
And make a quagmire of your mingled brains. Shakeſp.
Poor Tom! whom the foul fiend hath through ford and whirlpool, o'er bog and quagmire.
The wet particles might have easily ever mingled with the dry, and so all had either been sea or quagmire. More.
The brain is of such a clammy confidence, that it can no more retain motion than a quagmire. Glarvill's Scyll.
- QUAID. part. [of this participle I know not the verb, and believe it only put by Spenser, who often took great liberties, for quailed, for the poor convenience of his rhyme.] Crushed; dejected; depressed.
Therewith his sturdy courage soon was quaid,
And all his senses were with sudden dread dismay'd. F. Qu.
- QUAIL. n. f. [quaglia, Italian.] A bird of game.
His quails ever
Beat mine, in-hoop'd at odds. Shakeſp. Ant. and Cleop.
Hen birds have a peculiar sort of voice, when they would call the male, which is so eminent in quails, that men, by counterfeiting this voice with a quail pipe, easily drew the cocks into their snares. Ray on the Creation.
- A fresher gale
Sweeping with shadowy gust the field of corn,
While the quail clamours for his running mate. Thomson.
- QUAILPIPE. n. f. [quail and pipe.] A pipe with which fowlers allure quails.
A dish of wild fowl furnished conversation, which concluded with a late invention for improving the quailpipe. Addison's Spectator, N° 108.
- TO QUAIL. v. n. [quelen, Dutch.] To languish; to sink into dejection; to lose spirit. Spenser.
He writes there is no quailing now;
Because the king is certainly posselt
Of all our purposes. Shakeſp. Henry IV. p. i.
This may plant courage in their quailing breasts,
For yet is hope of life and victory. Shakeſp.
After Solyman had with all his power in vain besieged Rhodes, his haughty courage began to quail, so that he was upon point to have raised his siege. Knusler.
- While rocks stand,
And rivers stir, thou can't not shrink or quail;
Yea, when both rocks and all things shall disband,
Then shalt thou be my rock and tower. Herbert.
When Dido's ghost appear'd,
It made this hardy warrior quail. Wandering Pr. of Troy.
At this the errant's courage quails. Cleveland.
To pass the quailing and withering of all things by the recess, and their reviving by the recesses of the sun, the sap in trees precisely follows the motion of the sun. Hakewill.
- TO QUAIL. v. a. [cpellan, Saxon.] To crush; to quell; to depress; to sink; to overpower.
To drive him to despair, and quite to quail;
He shewed him painted in a table plain
The damned ghosts. Fairy Queen, b. i.
Three, with fiery courage, he assails;
Three, all as kings adorn'd in royal wife:
And each successive after other quails,
Still wond'ring whence so many kings should rise. Daniel.
- QUAINT. adj. [quaint, Fr. cmptus, Lat.]
1. Nice; scrupulously, minutely, superfluously exact; having petty elegance.
Each ear sucks up the words a true love scattereth,
And plain speech oft, than quaint phrase framed is. Sidney.

QUA

- You were glad to be employ'd,
To shew how quaint an orator you are. Shakeſp.
He spends some pages about two similitudes; one of mine, and another quainter of his own. Stillingfleet.
2. Subtle; artful. Obsolete.
3. Neat; pretty; exact.
But for a fine, quaint, graceful and excellent fashion, yours is worth ten on's. Shakeſp.
Her mother hath intended,
That, quaint in green, she shall be loose enrob'd
With ribbands pendent, flaring 'bout her head. Shakeſp.
I never saw a better fashion'd gown,
More quaint, more pleasing, nor more commendable. Sha.
4. Subtly excogitated; finespun.
I'll speak of frays,
Like a fine bragging youth, and tell quaint lies,
How honourable ladies sought my love,
Which I denying they fell sick and died.
He his fabrick of the heav'n's
Hath left to their disputes, perhaps to move
His laughter at their quaint opinions wide Hereafter. Milton's Par. Loſt, b. viii.
5. Quaint is, in Spenser, quailed; deprefed. I believe 'by a very licentious irregularity.
With such fair light him Guyon fail'd:
Till at the last, all breathless, weary and faint,
Him spying, with fresh onset he assail'd,
And kindling new his courage, seeming quaint,
Struck him so hugely, that through great constraint
He made him stoop. Fairy Queen, b. ii.
6. Affecting; foppish. This is not the true idea of the word, which Swift seems not to have well understood.
To this we owe those monstrous productions, which under the name of trips, spies, amusements, and other conceited appellations, have overrun us; and I wish I could say, those quaint fopperies were wholly absent from graver subjects. Sw.
- QUAINTLY. adv. [from quaint.]
1. Nicely; exactly; with petty elegance.
When was old Sherwood's hair more quaintly curl'd,
Or nature's cradle more enchas'd and pur'd. B. Johnson.
2. Artfully.
Breathe his faults so quaintly,
That they seem the taints of liberty,
The flash and outbreak of a fiery mind. Shakeſp.
3. Ingeniously with success. This is not the true sense.
As my Buxonia
With gentle finger stroak'd her milky care,
I quaintly stole a kiss. Gay.
- QUAINTNESS. n. f. [from quaint.] Nicety; petty elegance.
There is a certain majesty in simplicity, which is far above all the quaintness of wit. Pope.
- TO QUAKE. v. n. [cpacan, Saxon.]
1. To shake with cold or fear; to tremble.
Dorus threw Pamela behind a tree, where she stood quaking like the partridge on which the hawk is even ready to seize. Sidney, b. i.
If Cupid hath not spent all his quiver in Venice, thou wilt quake for this. Shakeſp.
Do such business as the better day
Would quake to look on. Shakeſp. Hamlet.
Who honours not his father,
Henry the fifth, that made all France to quake,
Shake he his weapon at us, and pass by. Shakeſp.
The mountains quake at him; and the hills melt, and the earth is burnt at his presence. Nab. i. 5.
Son of man eat thy bread with quaking, and drink thy water with trembling and carefulness. Ezek. xii. 18.
In fields they dare not fight where honour calls,
The very noise of war their souls does wound,
They quake but hearing their own trumpets found. Dryden.
2. To shake; not to be solid or firm.
Next Smedley di'd; slow circles dimpled o'er
The quaking mud, that clos'd and op'd no more. Pope.
- QUAKE. n. f. [from the verb.] A shudder; a tremulous agitation.
As the earth may sometimes shake,
For winds shut up will cause a quake;
So often jealousy and fear
Stol'n to mine heart, cause tremblings there. Suckling.
- QUAKING-GRASS. n. f. An herb.
- QUALIFICATION. n. f. [qualification, Fr. from qualify.]
1. That which makes any person or thing fit for any thing.
It is in the power of the prince to make piety and virtue become the fashion, if he would make them necessary qualifications for preferment. Swift.
2. Accomplishment.
Good qualifications of mind enable a magistrate to perform his duty, and tend to create a publick esteem of him. Atter.
3. Abatement; diminution.
Neither had the waters of the flood infused such an impurity, as thereby the natural and powerful operation of all

QUA

- plants, herbs and fruits upon the earth received a qualification and harmful change. Raleigh's History of the World.
- TO QUALIFY. v. a. [qualifier, Fr.]
1. To fit for any thing.
Place over them such governors, as may be qualified in such manner as may govern the place. Bacon's Advice to Villiers.
I bequeath to Mr. John Whiteway the sum of one hundred pounds, in order to qualify him for a surgeon. Swift's Will.
2. To furnish with qualifications; to accomplish.
That which ordinary men are fit for, I am qualified in; and the best of me is diligence. Shakeſp. King Lear.
She is of good esteem;
Her dowry wealthy, and of worthy birth,
Beside so qualified, as may becom
The spouse of any noble gentleman. Shakeſp.
3. To make capable of any employment or privilege.
The spoule of any noble gentleman.
4. To abate; to soften; to diminish.
I have heard,
Your grace hath ta'en great pains to qualify
His rigorous course. Shakeſp. Merchant of Venice.
I do not seek to quench your love's hot fire,
But qualify the fire's extreme rage,
Lest it should burn above the bounds of reason. Shakeſp.
I have drunk but one cup to-night, and that was craftily qualified too; and behold what innovation it makes here. Sha.
They would report that they had records for twenty thousand years, which must needs be a very great untruth, unless we will qualify it, expounding their years not of the revolution of the sun, but of the moon. Abbot.
It hath so pleased God to provide for all living creatures, wherewith he hath filled the world, that such inconveniences, as we contemplate afar off, are found, by trial and the witness of men's travels, to be so qualified, as there is no portion of the earth made in vain. Raleigh's Hist. of the World.
So happy 'tis you move in such a sphere,
As your high majesty with awful fear
In human breasts might qualify that fire;
Which kindled by those eyes had flamed higher. Waller.
Children should be early instructed in the true estimate of things, by opposing the good to the evil, and compensating or qualifying one thing with another. L'Estrange.
My proposition I have qualified with the word, often; thereby making allowance for those cases, wherein men of excellent minds may, by a long practice of virtue, have rendered even the heights and rigours of it delightful. Atterbury.
5. To ease; to alluage.
He balms and herbs therto apply'd,
And evermore with mighty spells them charm'd,
That in short space he has them qualify'd,
And him restor'd to health, that would have dy'd. Spenser.
6. To modify; to regulate.
It hath no larine or throttle to qualify the found. Brown.
- QUALITY. n. f. [qualitas, Lat. qualis, Fr.]
1. Nature relatively considered.
These, being of a far other nature and quality, are not so strictly or everlastingly commanded in scripture. Hooker.
Other creatures have not judgment to examine the quality of that which is done by them, and therefore in that they do, they neither can accuse nor approve themselves. Hooker.
Since the event of an action usually follows the nature or quality of it, and the quality follows the rule directing it, it concerns a man, in the framing of his actions, not to be deceived in the rule. South.
The power to produce any idea in our mind, I call quality of the subject, wherein that power is. Locke.
2. Property; accident.
In the division of the kingdom, it appears not which of the dukes he values most; for qualities are so weighed, that curiosity in neither can make choice of either's moiety. Shak.
No sensible qualities, as light and colour, heat and sound, can be subsistent in the bodies themselves absolutely considered, without a relation to our eyes and ears, and other organs of sense: these qualities are only the effects of our sensation, which arise from the different motions upon our nerves from objects without, according to their various modification and position. Bentley.
3. Particular efficacy.
O, mickle is the powerful grace, that lies
In plants, herbs, stones, and their true qualities. Shakeſp.
4. Disposition; temper.
To-night we'll wander through the streets, and note
The qualities of people. Shakeſp. Ant. and Cleopatra.
5. Virtue or vice.
One doubt remains, said I, the dames in green,
What were their qualities, and who their queen? Dryden.
6. Accomplishment; qualification.
He had those qualities of horsemanship, dancing and fencing, which accompany a good breeding. Clarendon.
7. Character.
The attorney of the dutchy of Lancaster partakes of both qualities, partly of a judge in that court, and partly of an attorney general. Bacon's Advice to Villiers.
We,

QUA

We, who are hearers, may be allowed some opportunities in the quality of standers-by. Swift.

8. Comparative or relative rank.
It is with the clergy, if their persons be respected, even as it is with other men; their quality many times far beneath that which the dignity of their place requireth. Hooker.
We lived most joyful, obtaining acquaintance with many of the city, not of the meanest quality. Bacon.
The masters of these horses may be admitted to dine with the lord lieutenant: this is to be done, what quality forever the persons are of. Temple.

9. Rank; superiority of birth or station.
Let him be so entertained, as suits with gentlemen of your knowing to a stranger of his quality. Shakefp. Cymbeline.

10. Persons of high rank. Collectively.
I shall appear at the masquerade dressed up in my feathers, that the quality may see how pretty they will look in their travelling habits. Addison's Guardian, N° 112.
Of all the fervile herd, the worst is he,
That in proud dullness joins with quality,
A constant critick at the great man's board,
To fetch and carry nonsense for my lord. Pope.

QUALM. n. f. [cpealm, Saxon, a sudden stroke of death.] A sudden fit of sickness; a sudden seizure of sickly languor.
Some sudden qualm hath struck me to the heart,
And dimm'd mine eyes, that I can read no further. Shak.
Some distill'd carduus benedictus, laid to your heart, is the only thing for a qualm. Shakefp.
Compar'd to these storms, death is but a qualm, Hell somewhat lightfome, the Bermudas calm. Donne.
I find a cold qualm come over my heart, that I faint, I can speak no longer. Howel.

All maladies
Of ghastly spasm, or racking torture, qualms
Of heart-sick agony. Milton's Par. Lost.
For who, without a qualm, hath ever look'd
On holy garbage, though by Homer cook'd. Rowson.
They have a sickly uneasiness upon them, shifting and changing from one error, and from one qualm to another, hankering after novelties. L'Estrange's Fables.
Thy mother well deserves that short delight,
The nauseous qualms of ten months and travail to requite. Dryden's Virgil.

When he hath stretch'd his vessels with wine to their utmost capacity, and is grown weary and sick, and feels those qualms and disturbances that usually attend such excesses, he resolves, that he will hereafter contain himself within the bounds of sobriety. Calany.

The qualms or ruptures of your blood
Rise in proportion to your food. Prior.

QUALMISH. adj. [from qualm.] Seized with sickly languor.
I am qualmish at the smell of leek. Shakefp.
You drop into the place,
Careless and qualmish with a yawning face. Dryden.

QUANDARY. n. f. [qu'en dirai je, Fr. Skinner.] A doubt; a difficulty; an uncertainty. A low word.

QUANTITATIVE. adj. [quantitativus, Lat.] Estimable according to quantity.
This explication of rarity and density, by the composition of substance with quantity, may peradventure give little satisfaction to such who are apt to conceive therein no other composition or resolution, but such as our senses shew us, in compounding and dividing bodies according to quantitative parts. Digby on Bodies.

QUANTITY. n. f. [quantitas, Fr. quantitas, Lat.]
1. That property of any thing which may be encreased or diminished.
Quantity is what may be increased or diminished. Cheyne.
2. Any indeterminate weight or measure.
3. Bulk or weight.
Unskill'd in hellebore, if thou shou'dst try
To mix it, and mistake the quantity,
The rules of physick wou'd against thee cry. Dryden.

4. A portion; a part.
If I were saw'd into quantities, I should make four dozen of such bearded hermits slaves as master Shallow. Shakefp.

5. A large portion.
The warm antiscorbutical plants, taken in quantities, will occasion stinking breath, and corrupt the blood. Arbutnot.

6. The measure of time in pronouncing a syllable.
The easy pronunciation of a mute before a liquid does not necessarily make the preceding vowel, by position, long in quantity; as patrem. Holder's Elements of Speech.

QUANTUM. n. f. [Latin.] The quantity; the amount.
The quantum of presbyterian merit, during the reign of that ill-advised prince, will easily be computed. Swift.

QUARANTAIN. n. f. [quarantain, Fr.] The space of forty QUARANTINE. } days, being the time which a ship, suspected of infection, is obliged to forbear intercourse or commerce. Pass your quarantine among some of the churches round this town, where you may learn to speak before you venture to expose your parts in a city congregation. Swift.

QUARREL. n. f. [querelle, Fr.]
1. A brawl; a petty fight; a scuffle.
If I can fasten but one cup upon him,
With that which he hath drank to-night already,
He'll be as full of quarrel and offence,
As my young mistress's dog. Shakefp. Othello.

2. A dispute; a contest.
The party, which in this present quarrel striveth against the current and stream of laws, was a long while nothing feared. Hooker's Dedication.
As if earth too narrow were for fate,
On open seas their quarrels they debate;
In hollow wood they floating armies bear,
And forc'd imprison'd winds to bring 'em near. Dryden.

3. A cause of debate.
I could not die any where so contented, as in the king's company; his cause being just, and his quarrel honourable. Shakefp. Henry V.
If not in service of our God we fought,
In meaner quarrel if this sword were shaken,
Well might thou gather in the gentle thought,
So fair a prince's should not be forsaken. Fairfax.

4. Something that gives a right to mischief or reproof.
He thought he had a good quarrel to attack him. Holingsh.
Wives are young men's mistresses, companions for middle age, and old men's nurses; so a man may have a quarrel to marry when he will. Bacon's Essays.

5. Objection; ill will.
Herodias had a quarrel against him, and would have killed him, but he could not. Mar. vi. 19.
We are apt to pick quarrels with the world for every little foolery. L'Estrange.
I have no quarrel to the practice; it may be a diverting way. Felton on the Claphams.

6. In Shakespeare, it seems to signify any one peevish or malicious.
Better
She ne'er had known pomp, though't be temporal;
Yet if that quarrel, fortune, do divorce
It from the bearer, 'tis a sufficient pang.
As foul and body's fevering. Shakefp. Henry VIII.

7. [From quadreau, Fr. quadrella, Italian.] An arrow with a square head.
It is reported by William Brito, that the arcuballista or arbalist was first shewed to the French by our king Richard I. who was shortly after slain by a quarrel thereof. Camden.
Twang'd the string, out flew the quarrel long. Fairfax.

TO QUARREL. v. n. [quereller, Fr.]
1. To debate; to scuffle; to squabble.
I love the sport well, but I shall as soon quarrel at it as any man. Shakefp.
Your words have taken such pains, as if they labour'd
To bring manslaughter into form, set quarrelling
Upon the head of valour. Shakefp. Timon of Athens.
Wine drunken with excess, maketh bitterness of the mind, with brawling and quarrelling. Ecclus. xxxi. 29.
Beasts called sociable, quarrel in hunger and lust; and the bull and ram appear then as much in fury and war, as the lion and the bear. Temple's Miscellanies.

2. To fall into variance.
Our discontented counties do revolt;
Our people quarrel with obedience. Shakefp. King John.

3. To fight; to combat.
When once the Persian king was put to flight,
The weary Macedons refus'd to fight;
Themselves their own mortality confess'd,
And left the son of Jove to quarrel for the rest. Dryden.

4. To find fault; to pick objections.
To admit the thing, and quarrel about the name, is to make ourselves ridiculous. Bramhall against Hobbs.
They find out miscarriages wherever they are, and forge them often where they are not; they quarrel first with the officers, and then with the prince and state. Temple.
In a poem elegantly writ,
I will not quarrel with a slight mistake. Rowson.
I quarrel not with the word, because used by Ovid. Dryd.

QUARRELLER. n. f. [from quarrel.] He who quarrels.

QUARRELOUS. adj. [querellus, Fr.] Petulant; easily provoked to enmity; quarrelsome.
Ready in gybes, quick answered, saucy, and
As quarrelous as the weazel. Shakefp. Cymbeline.

QUARRELSOME. adj. [from quarrel.] Inclined to brawls; easily irritated; irascible; choleric; petulant.
Choleric and quarrelsome persons will engage one into their quarrels. Bacon's Essays.

There needs no more to the setting of the whole world in a flame, than a quarrelsome plaintiff and defendant. L'Estr.

QUARRELSOMELY. adv. [from quarrelsome.] In a quarrelsome manner; petulantly; cholericly.

QUARRELSOMENESS.

QUA

QUARRELSOMENESS. n. f. [from quarrelsome.] Cholericness; petulance.

QUARRY. n. f. [quarrè, Fr.]
1. A square.
To take down a quarry of glass to scowre, sodder, band, and to set it up again, is three halfpence a foot. Mortimer.

2. [Quadreau, Fr.] An arrow with a square head.
The shafts and quarries from their engines fly
As thick as falling drops in April showers. Fairfax.

3. [From querrir, to seek, Fr. Skinner; from carry, Kennet.] Game flown at by a hawk.
Your wife and babes
Savagely slaughter'd; to relate the manner,
Were on the quarry of these murder'd deer
To add the death of you. Shakefp. Macbeth.
She dwells among the rocks, on every side
With broken mountains strongly fortify'd;
From thence whatever can be seen surveys,
And stooping, on the slaughter'd quarry preys. Sandys.
So scented the grim feature, and up turn'd
His nostrils wide into the murky air,
Sagacious of his quarry. Milton.

They their guns discharge;
This heard some ships of ours, though out of view,
And swift as eagles to the quarry flew.
An hollow crystal pyramid he takes,
In firmamental waters dipt above,
Of it a broad extinguisher he makes,
And hoods the flames that to their quarry strove. Dryden.
No toil, no hardship can restrain
Ambitious man inur'd to pain;
The more confin'd, the more he tries,
And at forbidden quarry flies. Dryden's Horace.
Ere now the god his arrows had not try'd,
But on the trembling deer or mountain goat,
At this new quarry he prepares to shoot. Dryden.
Let reason then at her own quarry fly,
But how can finite grasp infinity. Dryden.

4. [Quarriere, quarrel, Fr. from carrig, Irish, a stone, Mr. Lye; craige, Erse, a rock.] A stone mine; a place where they dig stones.
The same is said of stone out of the quarry, to make it more durable. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
Pyramids and tow'rs
From diamond quarries hewn, and rocks of gold. Milton.
Here though grief my feeble hands up lock,
Yet on the softest quarry would I score
My plaining verse as lively as before. Milton.
An hard and unrelenting she,
As the new-crufted Niobe;
Or, what doth more of statue carry,
A nun of the Platonick quarry. Cleveland.
He like Amphion makes those quarries leap Into fair figures from a confus'd heap. Waller.
Could necessity infallibly produce quarries of stone, which are the materials of all magnificent structures. Mare.
For them alone the heav'ns had kindly heat
In eastern quarries, ripening precious dew. Dryden.
As long as the next coal-pit, quarry or chalk-pit will give abundant attestation to what I write, to these I may very safely appeal. Woodward's Nat. Hist.

TO QUARRY. v. n. [from the noun.] To prey upon. A low word not in use.
With cares and horrors at his heart, like the vulture that is day and night quarrying upon Prometheus's liver. L'Estrange.

QUARRYMAN. n. f. [quarry and man.] One who digs in a quarry.
One rhomboidal bony scale of the needle-fish, out of Stunsfield quarry, the quarryman assured me was flat, covered over with scales, and three foot long. Woodward.

QUART. n. f. [quart, Fr.]
1. The fourth part; a quarter. Not in use.
Albanact had all the northern part,
Which of himself Albania he did call,
And Camber did possess the western quart. Fairy Queen.

2. The fourth part of a gallon.
When I have been dry, and bravely marching, it hath served me instead of a quart pot to drink in. Shakefp.
You have made an order, that ale should be sold at three halfpence a quart. Swift's Miscellanies.

3. [Quarte, Fr.] The vessel in which strong drink is commonly retailed.
You'd rail upon the hostess of the house,
And say you would present her at the leet,
Because she bought stone jugs and no seal'd quarts. Shakefp.

QUARTAN. n. f. [febris quartana, Lat.] The fourth day ague.
It were an uncomfortable receipt for a quartan ague, to lay the fourth book of Homer's Iliads under one's head. Brown.
Call her the metaphysics of her sex,
And say she tortures wits, as quartans vex Physicians. Cleveland.
Among these, quartans and tertians of a long continuance most menace this symptom. Harvey on Consumptions.

QUA

A look so pale no quartan ever gave,
Thy dwindled legs seem crawling to the grave. Dryden.

QUARTATION. n. f. [from quartus, Lat.] A chymical operation.
In quartation, which refiners employ to purify gold, although three parts of silver be so exquisitely mingled by fusion with a fourth part of gold, whence the operation is denominated, that the resulting mass acquires several new qualities; yet, if you cast this mixture into aqua fortis, the silver will be dissolved in the menstruum, and the gold like a dark powder will fall to the bottom. Boyle.

QUARTER. n. f. [quart, quartier, Fr.]
1. A fourth part.
It is an accustomed action with her, to seem thus washing her hands; I have known her continue in this a quarter of an hour. Shakefp. Macbeth.
Suppose the common depth of the sea, taking one place with another, to be about a quarter of a mile. Burnet.
Observe what stars arise or disappear,
And the four quarters of the rolling year.
Supposing only three millions to be paid, 'tis evident that to do this out of commodities, they must, to the consumer, be raised a quarter in their price; so that every thing, to him that uses it, must be a quarter dearer. Locke.

2. A region of the skies, as referred to the seaman's card.
I'll give thee a wind.
—I myself have all the other,
And the very points they blow,
And all the quarters that they know
I th' shipman's card. Shakefp. Macbeth.
His praise, ye winds! that from four quarters blow, Breathe soft or loud. Milton's Par. Lost, b. v.
When the winds in southern quarters rise,
Ships, from their anchors torn, become their sport,
And sudden tempests rage within the port. Addison.

3. A particular region of a town or country.
The like is to be said of the populousness of their coasts and quarters there. Abbot's Description of the World.
No heaven shall be seen in thy quarters. Exodus xiii. 7.
The sons of the church being so much dispersed, though without being driven, into all quarters of the land, there was some extraordinary design of divine wisdom in it. Sprat.
A bungling cobbler, that was ready to starve at his own trade, changes his quarter, and sets up for a doctor. L'Estr.

4. The place where soldiers are lodged or stationed.
Where is lord Stanley quarter'd?
—Unlefs I have mistaken his quarters much,
His regiment lies half a mile
South from the mighty power of the king. Shakefp.
The quarters of the several chiefs they shew'd,
Here Phenix, here Achilles made abode. Dryden.
It was high time to shift my quarters. Spektator.

5. Proper station.
They do best, who, if they cannot but admit love, yet make it keep quarter, and sever it wholly from their serious affairs. Bacon's Essays.
Swift to their several quarters hasted then
The cumbrous elements. Milton.

6. Remission of life; mercy granted by a conqueror.
He magnified his own clemency, now they were at his mercy, to offer them quarter for their lives, if they gave up the castle. Clarendon, b. viii.
When the cocks and lambs lie at the mercy of cats and wolves, they must never expect better quarter. L'Estrange.
Discover the opinion of your enemies, which is commonly the truest; for they will give you no quarter, and allow nothing to complaisance. Dryden.

7. Treatment shown by an enemy.
To the young if you give any tolerable quarter, you indulge them in their idleness, and ruin them. Collier.
Mr. Wharton, who detected some hundreds of the bishop's mistakes, meets with very ill quarter from his lordship. Swift.

8. Friendship; amity; concord. Not now in use.
Friends, all but now,
In quarter, and in terms like bride and groom
Divesting them for bed, and then, but now Swords out, and tilting one at other's breasts. Shakefp.

9. A measure of eight bulhels.
There may be kept in it fourteen thousand quarters of corn, which is two thousand quarters in each loft. Mortimer.

10. False quarter is a cleft or chink in a quarter of a horse's hoof from top to bottom; it generally happens on the inside of it, that being the weakest and thinnest part.
TO QUARTER. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To divide into four parts.
A thought that quarter'd, hath but one part wisdom,
And ever three parts coward. Shakefp. Hamlet.

2. To divide; to break by force.
You tempt the fury of my three attendants,
Lean famine, quartering steel, and climbing fire. Shakefp.
Mothers shall but smile, when they behold
Their infants quarter'd by the hands of war. Shakefp.

QUA

3. To divide into distinct regions.
Then sailors quarter'd heav'n, and found a name
For ev'ry fixt and ev'ry wand'ring star. Dryden.
4. To station or lodge soldiers.
When they hear the Roman horses neigh,
Behold their quarter'd fires,
They will waste their time upon our notes,
To know from whence we are. Shakefp. Cymbeline.
Where is lord Stanley quarter'd?
—His regiment lies half a mile south. Shakefp. Rich. III.
They o'er the barren shore pursue their way,
Where quarter'd in their camp, the fierce Thelalians lay. Dryden.
You have quartered all the foul language upon me, that could be raked out of Billingsgate. Spectator, N° 595.
5. To lodge; to fix on a temporary dwelling.
They mean this night in Sardis to be quarter'd. Shakefp.
6. To diet.
He fed on vermin;
And when these fail'd, he'd suck his claws;
And quarter himself upon his paws. Hudibras, p. i.
To bear as an appendage to the hereditary arms.
The first ordinary and natural, being compounded of argent and azure, is the coat of Beauchamp of Hack in the county of Somerset, now quartered by the earl of Hertford. Peacocks on Blazoning.
- QUARTERAGE. n. f. [from quarter.] A quarterly allowance;
He us'd two equal ways of gaining;
By hindring justice or maintaining;
To many a whore gave privileges,
And whipp'd for want of quarterage. Hudibras, p. iii.
- QUARTERDAY. n. f. [from quarter and day.] One of the four days in the year, on which rent or interest is paid.
The usurer would be very well satisfied to have all the time annihilated, that lies between the present moment and next quarterday. Addison's Spectator, N° 93.
- QUARTERDECK. n. f. [from quarter and deck.] The short upper deck.
- QUARTERLY. adj. [from quarter.] Containing a fourth part.
The moon makes four quarterly seasons within her little year or month of consecution. Holder on Time.
From the obliquity of the ecliptick to the equator arise the diurnal differences of the sun's right ascension, which finish their variations in each quadrant of the ecliptick, and this being added to the former inequality from eccentricity, makes these quarterly and seemingly irregular inequalities of natural days. Bentley.
- QUARTERLY. adv. Once in a quarter of a year.
- QUARTERMASTER. n. f. [from quarter and master.] One who regulates the quarters of soldiers.

encampment of the covering army. Tatler, N° 62.
- QUARTERN. n. f. A gill or the fourth part of a pint.
- QUARTERSTAFF. n. f. A staff of defence: so called, I believe, from the manner of using it; one hand being placed at the middle, and the other equally between the middle and the end.
His quarterstaff, which he could ne'er forsake,
Hung half before, and half behind his back. Dryden.
Immense riches he squandered away at quarterstaff
and cudgel play, in which he challenged all the country. Arbut.
- QUARTILE. n. f. An aspect of the planets, when they are three signs or ninety degrees distant from each other, and is marked thus □. Harris.
Mars and Venus in a quartile move
My pangs of jealousy for Arie's love. Dryden.
- QUARTO. n. f. [from quartus, Lat.] A book in which every sheet, being twice doubled, makes four leaves.
Our fathers had a just value for regularity and systems;
then folio's and quarto's were the fashionable sizes, as volumes in octavo are now. Watts.
- TO QUASH. v. a. [from quassen, Dutch; squacciare, Italian; quass, Latin.]
1. To crush; to squeeze.
The whales
Against sharp rocks like reeling vessels quash'd, Though huge as mountains, are in pieces dash'd. Waller.
2. To subdue suddenly.
'Twas not the spawn of such as these,
That dy'd with Punick blood the conquer'd seas,
And quash'd the stern Æacides. Roscommon.
Our the confederates keep pace with us in quashing the rebellion, which had begun to spread itself among part of the fair sex. Addison's Freeholder, N° 15.
3. [Cassus, Lat. casser, Fr.] To annul; to nullify; to make void: as, the indictment was quashed.
To QUASH. v. n. To be shaken with a noise.

to quash. Sharp's Surgery.
- QUASH. n. f. A pompion. Anjworb.

QUE

- QUATERCOUSINS. As, they are not quater-cousins, as it is commonly spoken cato-cousins, plus ne sont pas de quater cousins, they are not of the four first degrees of kindred, that is, they are not friends. Skinner.
- QUATERNARY. n. f. [from quaternarius, Lat.] The number four.
The objections against the quaternary of elements and ter-nary of principles, needed not to be oppos'd so much against the doctrines themselves. Boyle.
- QUATERNION. n. f. [from quaternio, Lat.] The number four.
Air and the elements! the eldest birth
Of nature's womb, that in quaternion run Perpetual circle, multiform; and mix'
And nourish all things; let your ceaseless change
Vary to our great maker still new praise. Milton.
I have not in this scheme of these nine quaternions of consonants, distinct known characters, whereby to express them, but must repeat the same. Holder's Elements of Speech.
- QUATERNITY. n. f. [from quaternus, Lat.] The number four.
The number of four stands much admired, not only in the quaternity of the elements, which are the principles of bodies, but in the letters of the name of God. Brown.
- QUATRAIN. n. f. [from quatrain, Fr.] A stanza of four lines rhyming alternately: as,
Say, Stella, what is love; whose fatal pow'r
Robs virtue of content, and youth of joy?
What nymph or goddess in a luckless hour
Disclos'd to light the mischief-making boy. Mr. Mulso.
I have writ my poem in quatrains or stanza's of four in alternate rhyme, because I have ever judg'd them of greater dignity for the found and number, than any other verse in use. Dryden.
- TO QUAY. v. n. [from quay, Saxon.]
1. To shake the voice; to speak or sing with a tremulous voice.
Miso sitting on the ground with her knees up, and her hands upon her knees tuning her voice with many a quavering cough, thus discours'd. Sidney, b. ii.
The division and quavering, which please so much in music, have an agreement with the glittering of light playing upon a wave. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
- Now sportive youth
Carol incoadite rhythms with suiting notes,
And quaver unharmonious. Philips.
We shall hear her quavering them half a minute after us, to some sprightly airs of the opera. Addison.
2. To tremble; to vibrate.
A membrane, stretched like the head of a drum, is to receive the impulse of the sound, and to vibrate or quaver according to its reciprocal motions. Ray on the Creation.
If the eye and the finger remain quiet, their colours vanish in a second minute of time, but if the finger be moved with a quavering motion, they appear again. Newton's Opticks.
- QUAY. n. f. [from quai, Fr.] A key; an artificial bank to the sea or river, on which goods are conveniently unladen.
- QUEAN. n. f. [from quean, Saxon, a barren cow; hopen, in the laws of Canute, a strumpet.] A worthless woman, generally a strumpet.
As fit as the nail to his hole, or as a scolding quean to a wrangling knave. Shakefp.
This well they understand like cunning queans,
And hide their nastiness behind the scenes. Dryden.
Such is that sprinkling, which some careless quean
Flirts on you from her mop. Swift.
- QUEASINESS. n. f. [from queasy.] The sickness of a nauseated stomach.
- QUEASY. adj. [of uncertain etymology.]
1. Sick with nausea.
He, queasy with his insolence already,
Will their good thoughts call from him. Shakefp.
Whether a rotten state and hope of gain,
Or to disuse me from the queasy pain
Of being belov'd and loving,
Out-pull me first. Dante.
2. Fastidious; squeamish.
I, with your two helps, will so practise on Benedick, that, in despite of his quick wit and his queasy stomach, he shall fall in love with Beatrice. Shakefp.
The humility of Gregory the great would not admit the stile of bishop, but the ambition of Boniface made no scruple thereof, nor have queasy resolutions been harboured in their successors ever since. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
Men's stomachs are generally so queasy in these cases, that it is not safe to overload them. Government of the Tongue.
Without question,
Their conscience was too queasy of digestion. Dryden.
3. Causing nausea.
I have one thing of a queasy question,
Which I must ask. Shakefp. King Lear.
- TO QUECK. v. n. To shrink; to show pain; perhaps to complain.
The lads of Sparta were accustomed to be whipped at altars, without so much as quecking. Bacon.

QUE

- QUEEN. n. f. [from queen, Saxon, a woman; the wife of a king.]
1. The wife of a king.
He was laid
In a most curious mantle, wrought by the hand
Of his queen mother. Shakefp. Cymbeline.
2. A woman who is sovereign of a kingdom.
That queen Elizabeth lived sixty-nine, and reigned forty-five years, means no more than, that the duration of her existence was equal to sixty-nine, and the duration of her government to forty-five annual revolutions of the sun. Locke.
Have I a queen
Past by my fellow rulers of the world?
Have I refus'd their blood to mix with yours;
And rais'd new kings from so obscure a race? Dryden.
- TO QUEEN. v. n. To play the queen.
A threepence bow'd would hire me,
Old as I am, to queen it. Shakefp. Henry VIII.
Of your own state take care: this dream of mine,
Being now awake, I'll queen it no inch farther,
But milk my ewes and weep. Shakefp. Winter's Tale.
- QUEEN-APPLE. n. f. A species of apple.
The queen-apple is of the summer kind, and a good cyder apple mixed with others. Mortimer's Husbandry.
Her cheeks with kindly claret spread,
Aurora like new out of bed,
Or like the fresh queen-apple's side,
Blushing at sight of Phoebus' pride. Sidney, b. ii.
- QUEENING. n. f. An apple.
The winter queening is good for the table. Mortimer.
- QUEER. adj. [Of this word the original is not known: a correspondent supposes a queer man to be one who has a queer to his name in a list.] Odd; strange; original; particular.
He never went to bed till two in the morning, because he would not be a queer fellow; and was every now and then knocked down by a constable, to signalize his vivacity. Speet.
- QUEERLY. adv. [from queer.] Particularly; oddly.
- QUEERNESS. n. f. [from queer.] Oddness; particularity.
- QUEEST. n. f. [from queest, Lat. Skinner.] A ringdove; a kind of wild pigeon.
- TO QUELL. v. a. [from quell, Saxon.] To crush; to subdue;
originally, to kill.
What avails
Valour or strength, though matchless, quell'd with pain,
Which all subdues, and makes remits the hands
Of mightiest? Milton's Par. Lost, b. vi.
- Compulsion quell'd
His best of man, and gave him up to tears
A space; till firmer thoughts restrain'd excess. Milton.
This quell'd her pride, but other doubts remain'd,
That once disdain'd, she might be disdain'd. Dryden.
He is the guardian of the publick quiet, appointed to restrain violence, to quell seditions and tumults, and to preserve that peace which preserves the world. Atterbury.
- TO QUELL. v. n. To die. Speet.
- QUELL. n. f. [from the verb.] Murder. Not in use.
What can not we put upon
His spongy followers, who shall bear the guilt
Of our great quell. Shakefp. Macbeth.
- QUELLER. n. f. [from quell.] One that crushes or subdues.
Hail son of the most high,
Queller of Satan, on thy glorious work
Now enter. Milton's Paradise Regain'd, b. iv.
- QUELQUECHOSE. [French.] A trifle; a kickshaw.
From country galls to constitures of court,
Or city's quelquechose, let not report
My mind transport. Dante.
- TO QUEME. v. n. [from queman, Saxon.] To please. An old word. Skinner.
- TO QUENCH. v. a.
1. To extinguish fire.
Since stream, air, sand, mine eyes and ears conspire,
What hope to quench, where each thing blows the fire. Sidney.
No English soul
More stronger to direct you than yourself;
If with the lap of reason you would quench,
Or but allay, the fire of passion. Shakefp. Henry VIII.
This is the way to kindle, not to quench.
A little fire is quickly trodden out,
Which, being suffer'd, rivers cannot quench. Shakefp.
The fire had power in the water, forgetting his own virtue;
and the water forgot his own quenching nature. Wisd. xix. 20.
Milk quencheth wild-fire better than water, because it entrench better. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
Subdu'd in fire the stubborn metal lies;
One draws and blows reciprocating air,
Others to quench the hissing mals prepare. Dryden.
You have already quench'd sedition's brand,
And zeal, which burnt it, only warms the land. Dryden.
When your work is forged, do not quench it in water to cool it, but throw it down upon the floor or hearth to cool of itself; for the quenching of it in water will harden it. Moxon.

QUE

2. To still any passion or commotion.
But if all aim but this be levell'd false;
The supposition of the lady's death
Will quench the wonder of her infamy. Shakefp.
3. To allay thirst.
Every draught to him, that has quenched his thirst, is but a further quenching of nature, a provision for rheum and dif-eases, a drowning of the spirits. South.
4. To destroy.
When death's form appears, the feareth not
An utter quenching or extinguishment;
She would be glad to meet with such a lot,
That so she might all future ill prevent. Davies.
Covered with skin and hair keeps it warm, being naturally very cold, and also to quench and dissipate the force of any stroke, and retund the edge of any weapon. Ray.
- TO QUENCH. v. n. To cool; to grow cool.
Dost thou think, in time
She will not quench, and let instructions enter Where folly now possesses? Shakefp. Cymbeline.
- QUE'NCHABLE. adj. [from quench.] That may be quenched.
- QUE'NCHER. n. f. [from quench.] Extinguisher; one that quenches.
- QUE'NCHLESS. adj. [from quench.] Unextinguishable.
Come, bloody Clifford, rough Northumberland,
I dare your quenchless fury to more rage. Shakefp.
The judge of torments, and the king of tears,
He fills a burnish'd throne of quenchless fire. Crawshaw.
- QUE'RELE. n. f. [from querela, Lat. querelle, Fr.] A complaint to a court.
A circumduction obtains not in causes of appeal, but in causes of first instance and simple querels only. Ayliffe.
- QUE'RENT. n. f. [from querens, Latin.] The complainant; the plaintiff.
- QUERIMONIOUS. adj. [from querimonia, Latin.] Querulous;
complaining.
- QUERIMONIOUSLY. adv. [from querimonious.] Querulously;
with complaint.
To thee, dear Thom, myself addressing,
Most querimoniously confessing. Denham.
- QUERIMONIOUSNESS. n. f. [from querimonious.] Complaining temper.
- QUERIST. n. f. [from quero, Lat.] An enquirer; an asker of questions.
I shall propose some considerations to my gentle querist. Speet.
The juggling sea god, when by chance trepan'd
By some instructed querist sleeping on the strand, Impatient of all answers, strait became A stealing brook. Swift's Miscellanies.
- QUERN. n. f. [from quern, Saxon.] A handmill.
Skim milk, and sometimes labour in the quern,
And bootless make the breathless huswife churn. Shakefp.
Some apple-colour'd corn
Ground in fair querns, and some did spindles turn. Chapm.
- QUERPO. n. f. [corrupted from cuervo, Spanish.] A dress close to the body; a waistcoat.
I would fain see him walk in querpo, like a cased rabbit, without his holy furr upon his back. Dryden.
- QUERRY, for querry. n. f. [from querry, Fr.] A groom belonging to a prince, or one conversant in the king's stables, and having the charge of his horses; also the stable of a prince. Bailey.
- QUERULOUS. adj. [from querulus, Latin.] Mourning; habitually complaining.
Although they were a people by nature hard-hearted, querulous, wrathful and impatient of rest and quietness, yet was there nothing of force to work the subversion of their state, till the time before-mentioned was expired. Hooker.
The pressures of war have cowed their spirits, as may be gathered from the very accent of their words, which they prolate in a whining kind of querulous tone, as if still complaining and crest-fallen. Hovel's Vocal Forest.
Though you give no countenance to the complaints of the querulous, yet curb the insolence of the injurious. Locke.
- QUERULOUSNESS. n. f. [from querulous.] Habit or quality of complaining mournfully.
- QU'RY. n. f. [from quere, Lat.] A question; an enquiry to be resolved.
I shall conclude, with proposing only some queries, in order to a farther search to be made by others. Newton.
This shews the folly of this query, that might always be demanded, that would impudently and absurdly attempt to tie the arm of omnipotence from doing any thing at all, because it can never do its utmost. Bentley.
- TO QU'RY. v. a. [from the noun.] To ask questions.
Three Cambridge sophs
Each prompt to query, answer and debate. Pope.
- QUEST. n. f. [from quest, Fr.]
1. Search; act of seeking.
None but such as this bold ape unblest,
Can ever thrive in that unlucky quest. Hubbard's Tale.
If lusty love should go in quest of beauty,
Where should he find it fairer than in Blanch. Shakefp.
Fair

QUE

Fair silver bukin'd nymphs,
I know this quest of yours and free intent
Was all in honour and devotion meant.
To the great mistress of your princely shrine. Milton.
An aged man in rural weeds,
Following, as seem'd, the quest of some stray ewe. Milton.
One for all
Myself expose, with lonely steps to tread
Th' unfounded deep, and the void immense
To search with wand'ring quest a place foretold Should be. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ii.
Since first break of dawn, the fiend,
Mere serpent in appearance, forth was come,
And on his quest, where likeliest he might find
The only two of mankind. Milton.
'T would be not strange, should we find Paradise at this day where Adam left it; and I the rather note this, because I see there are some so earnest in quest of it. Woodward.
There's not an African,
That traverses our vast Numidian deserts
In quest of prey, and lives upon his bow,
But better practises these boasted virtues. Addison's Cato.
We see them active and vigilant in quest of delight. Spekt.
2. [For inquest.] An empanell'd jury.
What's my offence?
Where is the evidence, that doth accuse me?
What lawful quest have given their verdict up Unto the frowning judge. Shakespeare. Richard III.
3. Searchers. Collectively.
You have been hotly call'd for,
When, being not at your lodging to be found,
The senate sent above three several quests
To search you out. Shakespeare. Othello.
4. Enquiry; examination.
O place and greatness! millions of false eyes
Are stuck upon thee; volumes of report
Run with these false and most contrarious quests
Upon thy doings. Shakespeare. Measure for Measure.
5. Request; desire; solicitation.
Gad not abroad at every quest and call
Of an untrained hope or passion. Herbert.
To QUEST. v. n. [quæter, Fr. from the noun.] To go in search.
QUESTANT. n. f. [from quester, Fr.] Seeker; endeavourer after.
See, that you come
Not to woo honour, but to wed it; when
The bravest questant thinks, find what you seek,
That fame may cry you loud. Shakespeare.
QUESTION. n. f. [questio, Fr. questio, Latin.]
1. Interrogatory; any thing enquired.
Because he that knoweth least is fittest to ask questions, it is more reason for the entertainment of the time; that ye ask me questions, than that I ask you. Bacon.
2. Enquiry; disquisition.
It is to be put to question, whether it be lawful for christian princes to make an invasive war simply for the propagation of the faith. Bacon's Holy War.
3. A dispute; a subject of debate.
There arose a question between some of John's disciples and the Jews about purifying. Jo. iii. 25.
4. Affair to be examined.
In points of honour to be try'd,
Suppose the question not your own. Swift.
5. Doubt; controversy; dispute.
This is not my writing,
Though I confess much like the character:
But out of question 'tis Maria's hand. Shakespeare.
'Tis time for him to shew himself, when his very being is called in question, and to come and judge the world, when men begin to doubt whether he made it. Tillotson.
The doubt of their being native impressions on the mind, is stronger against these moral principles than the other; not that it brings their truth at all in question. Locke.
Our own earth would be barren and desolate, without the benign influence of the solar rays, which without question is true of all the other planets. Bentley.
6. Judicial trial.
But whosoever be found guilty, the communion book hath surely deserved least to be called in question for this fault.
Hooker, b. v. f. 31.
7. Examination by torture.
Such a presumption is only sufficient to put the person to the rack or question, according to the civil law, and not bring him to condemnation. Ayliffe's Parergon.
8. State of being the subject of present enquiry.
If we being defendants do answer, that the ceremonies in question are godly, comely, decent, profitable for the church, their reply is childish and unorderly to say, that we demand the thing in question, and shew the poverty of our cause, the goodness whereof we are fain to beg that our adversaries would grant. Hooker, b. iv. f. 4.

QUE

If he had said, it would purchase six shillings and threepence weighty money, he had proved the matter in question. Locke.
Nor are these assertions that dropped from their pens by chance, but delivered by them in places where they profess to state the points in question. Atterbury's Preface.
9. Endeavour; search. Not in use.
As it more concerns the Turk than Rhodes,
So may he with more facile questum bear it;
For that it stands not in such warlike brace,
But altogether lacks the abilities
That Rhodes is dress'd in. Shakespeare.
To QUESTION. v. n. [from the noun.]
1. To enquire.
Suddenly out of this delightful dream
The man awoke, and would have question'd more;
But he would not endure the woful theme. Spenser.
He that questioneth much shall learn much, and content much; but especially if he apply his questions to the skill of the persons whom he asketh. Bacon's Essays.
2. To debate by interrogatories.
I pray you think you question with a Jew;
You may as well use question with the wolf,
Why he hath made the ewe bleat for the lamb. Shakespeare.
To QUESTION. v. a. [questionner, Fr.]
1. To examine one by questions.
Question your royal thoughts, make the case yours;
Be now the father, and propose a son;
Hear your own dignity so much prophand;
And then imagine me taking your part,
And in your pow'r to silencing your son. Shakespeare.
But hark you, Kate,
I must not have you henceforth question me,
Whither I go. Shakespeare. Henry IV, p. i.
This construction is not so undubitably to be received, as not at all to be questioned. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
2. To doubt; to be uncertain of.
O impotent estate of human life!
Where fleeting joy does lasting doubt inspire,
And most we question what we most desire. Prior.
3. To have no confidence in; to mention as not to be trusted.
Be a design never so artificially laid, if it chances to be defeated by some cross accident, the man is then run down, his counsels derided, his prudence questioned, and his person despised. South's Sermons.
QUESTIONABLE. adj. [from question.]
1. Doubtful; disputable.
Your accustomed clemency will take in good worth, the offer of these my simple labours, bestowed for the necessary justification of laws heretofore made questionable, because not perfectly understood. Hooker's Dedication.
That persons drowned float, the ninth day when their gall breaketh, is a questionable determination, both in the time and cause. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
It is questionable, whether the use of steel springs was known in those ancient times. Wilkins's Math. Magick.
It is questionable, whether Galen ever saw the dissection of a human body. Baker's Reflections on Learning.
2. Suspicious; liable to suspicion; liable to question.
Be thy advent wicked or charitable,
Thou com'st in such a questionable shape,
That I will speak to thee. Shakespeare. Hamlet.
QUESTIONARY. adj. [from question.] Enquiring; asking questions.
I grow laconick even beyond laconicism; for sometimes I return only yes or no to questionary epistles of half a yard long. Pope to Swift.
QUESTIONABLENESS. n. f. [from question.] The quality of being questionable.
QUESTIONER. n. f. [from question.] An enquirer.
QUESTIONLESS. adv. [from question.] Certainly; without doubt.
Questions hence it comes that many were mistaken. Ral.
Questions duty moves not so much upon command as promise; now that which proposes the greatest and most suitable rewards to obedience, and the greatest punishments to disobedience, doubtless is the most likely to enforce the one and prevent the other. South.
QUESTMAN. n. f. [quest, man, and monger.] Starter of QUESTMONGER. n. f. law suits or prosecutions.
Their principal working was upon penal laws, wherein they spared none, great nor small, but raked over all new and old statutes, having ever a rabble of promoters, questmongers, and leading jurors at their command. Bacon.
QUESTTRIST. n. f. [from quest.] Seeker; pursuer.
Six and thirty of his knights,
Hot questtrists after him, met him at the gate,
Are gone with him tow'rd Dover. Shakespeare. King Lear.
QUESTUARY. adj. [from questus, Lat.] Studious of profit.
Although lapidaries and questuary enquirers affirm it, yet the writers of minerals conceive the stone of this name to be a mineral concretion, not to be found in animals. Brown.
QUIB. n. f.

QUI

QUIB. n. f. A farcasm; a bitter taunt. Ans. The same perhaps with quip.
To QUIBBLE. v. n. [from the noun.] To pun; to play on the found of words.
The first service was neats tongues sliced, which the philosophers took occasion to discourse and quibble upon in a grave formal way. L'Estrange.
QUIBBLE. n. f. [from quidlibet, Latin.] A low conceit depending on the found of words; a pun.
This may be of great use to immortalize puns and quibbles, and to let posterity see their forefathers were blockheads. Add.
Quirks or quibbles have no place in the search after truth. Watts.
QUIBLER. n. f. [from quibble.] A punster.
QUICK. adj. [cpic, Saxon.]
1. Living; not dead.
They swallowed us up quick, when their wrath was kindled against us. Psaln cxiv. 3.
If there be quick raw flesh in the risings, it is an old leprosy. Lev. xiii. 10.
The quick and the dead. Common Prayer.
As the sun makes; here noon, there day, there night Melts wax, dries clay, makes flow'rs, some quick, some dead. Davies.
Thence shall come,
When this world's dissolution shall be ripe,
With glory and pow'r to judge both quick and dead. Milt.
2. Swift; nimble; done with celerity.
Prayers whereunto devout minds have added a piercing kind of brevity, thereby the better to express that quick and speedy expedition, wherewith ardent affections, the very wings of prayer, are delighted to present our suits in heaven. Hooker, b. v. f. 33.
3. Speedy; free from delay.
Oft he to her his charge of quick return Repeated. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ix.
4. Active; spritely; ready.
A man of great fagacity in business, and he preserved so great a vigour of mind even to his death, when near eighty, that some, who had known him in his younger years, did believe him to have much quicker parts in his age than before. Clarendon.
A man must have passed his noviciate in finning, before he comes to this, be he never so quick a proficient. South.
The animal, which is first produced of an egg, is a blind and dull worm; but that which hath its resurrection thence, is a quick eyed, volatile and sprightly fly. Grew's Casinol.
QUICK. adv. Nimble; speedily; readily.
Ready in gybes, quick answer'd, faucy, and
As quarrelous as the weazel. Shakespeare. Cymbeline.
This shall your understanding clear
Those things from me that you shall hear, Conceiving much the quicker. Dryden's Nymphid.
They gave those complex ideas, that the things they were continually to give and receive information about, might be the easier and quicker understood. Locke.
This is done with little notice, if we consider how very quick the actions of the mind are performed, requiring not time, but many of them crowded into an instant. Locke.
QUICK. n. f.
1. A live animal.
Peeping close into the thick,
Might see the moving of some quick,
Whose shape appeared not;
But were it fairy, fiend or snake,
My courage earned it to wake,
And manful therat shot. Spenser.
2. The living flesh; sensible parts.
If Stanley held, that a son of king Edward had still the better right, it was to teach all England to say as much; and therefore that speech touched the quick. Bacon.
Seiz'd with sudden smart,
Stung to the quick, he felt it at his heart. Dryden.
The thoughts of this disgraceful composition so touches me to the quick, that I cannot sleep. Arbutnot's Hist. of J. Bull.
Scarifying gangrenes, by several incisions down to the quick, is almost universal, and with reason, since it not only discharges a pernicious ichor, but makes way for topical applications. Sharp's Surgery.
3. Living plants.
For inclosing of land, the most usual way is with a ditch and bank set with quick. Mortimer's Husbandry.
QUICKBEAM. n. f. [quick, beam, or quickentree.]
Quickbeam or wild forb, by some called the Irish ash, is a species of wild ash, preceded by blossoms of an agreeable scent. Mortimer's Husbandry.
To QUICKEN. v. a. [cpiccan, Saxon.]
1. To make alive.
All they that go down into the dust, shall kneel before him;
and no man hath quicken'd his own soul. Psaln xxii. 30.
I will never forget thy commandments; for with them thou hast quicken'd me. Psaln cxix.

QUI

This my mean task would be
As heavy to me, as 'tis odious; but
The mistress which I serve, quickens what's dead,
And makes my labours pleasures. Shakespeare. Tempest.
To quicken with kissing; had my lips that power,
Thus would I wear them out. Shakespeare. Ant. and Cleop.
Fair soul, since to the fairest body join'd
You give such lively life, such quick'ning pow'r,
And influence of such celestial kind,
As keeps it still in youth's immortal flower. Davies.
He throws
His influence round, and kindles as he goes;
Hence flocks and herds, and men, and beasts and fowls
With breath are quicken'd, and attract their souls. Dryden.
2. To hasten; to accelerate.
You may sooner by imagination quicken or slack a motion, than raise or cease it; as it is easier to make a dog go faster, than to make him stand still. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
Others were appointed to consider of penal laws and proclamations in force, and to quicken the execution of the most principal. Hayward.
Though any commodity should shift hands never so fast, yet, if they did not cease to be any longer traffick, this would not at all make or quicken their vent. Locke.
3. To sharpen; to actuate; to excite.
Though my senses were astonish'd, my mind forced them to quicken themselves; because I had learnt of him, how little favour he is wont to shew in any matter of advantage. Stidney.
It was like a fruitful garden without an hedge, that quicken'd
the appetite to enjoy so tempting a prize. South.
They endeavour by brandy to quicken their taste already
This review he makes use of, as an argument of great force to quicken them in the improvement of those advantages to which the mercy of God had called them by the gospel. Rogers's Sermons.
The desire of fame hath been no inconsiderable motive to quicken you in the pursuit of those actions, which will best deserve it. Swift.
To QUICKEN. v. n.
1. To become alive: as, a woman quickens with child.
These hairs, which thou dost ravish from my chin,
Will quicken and accuse thee; I'm your host;
With robbers hands, my hospitable favour
You should not ruffle thus. Shakespeare. King Lear.
They rub out of it a red dust, that converteth after a while into worms, which they kill with wine when they begin to quicken. Sandys's Journey.
The heart is the first part that quicken's, and the last that dies. Ray on the Creation.
2. To move with activity.
Sees by degrees a purer blush arise,
And keener lightnings quicken in her eyes. Pope.
QUICKENER. n. f. [from quicken.]
1. One who makes alive.
2. That which accelerates; that which actuates.
Love and enmity, aversion and fear are notable whetters and quickeners of the spirit of life in all animals. More.
QUICKLIME. n. f. [calx viva, Lat. quick and lime.] Lime unquenched.
After burning the stone, when lime is in its perfect and unaltered state, it is called quicklime. Hill's Materia Medica.
QUICKLY. adv. [from quick.] Nimble; speedily; actively.
Thou com'st to use thy tongue: thy story quickly. Shak.
Pleasure dwells no longer upon the appetite than the necessities of nature, which are quickly and easily provided for;
and then all that follows is an oppression. South.
QUICKNESS. n. f. [from quick.]
1. Speed; velocity; celerity.
What any invention hath in the strength of its motion, is abated in the slowness of it; and what it hath in the extraordinary quickness of its motion, must be allowed for in the great strength that is required unto it. Wilkins.
Joy, like a ray of the sun, reflects with a greater ardour and quickness, when it rebounds upon a man from the breast of his friend. South's Sermons.
2. Activity; briskness.
The best choice is of an old physician and a young lawyer;
because, where errors are fatal, ability of judgment and moderation are required; but where advantages may be wrought upon, diligence and quickness of wit. Watson.
The quickness of the imagination is seen in the invention, the fertility in the fancy, and the accuracy in the expression.
Dryden.
3. Keen sensibility.
Would not quickness of sensation be an inconvenience to an animal, that must lie still. Locke.
4. Sharpness; pungency.
Thy generous fruits, though gather'd ere their prime, }
Still shew'd a quickness; and maturing time }
But mellow what we write to the dull sweets of rhyme. }
Dryden.
Ginger

QUI

Ginger renders it brisk, and corrects its windiness, and juice of corianders whereof a few drops tinge and add a pleasant quickness. Mortimer's Husbandry.

QUICKSAND. n. f. [quick and sand.] Moving sand; unsoft ground.

What is Edward, but a ruthless sea? Shakefp.
What Clarence, but a quicksand of deceit? Shakefp.
Undergirding the ship, and fearing lest they should fall into the quicksands, they strike sail, and so were driven. Act xvii.
But when the vessel is on quicksands cast,
The flowing tide does more the sinking haste. Dryden.
Trajan, by the adoption of Nerva, stems the tide to her relief, and like another Neptune shoves her off the quicksands. Addison on Ancient Medals.
I have marked out several of the shoals and quicksands of life, in order to keep the unwary from running upon them. Addison.

To QUICKSET. v. a. [quick and set.] To plant with living plants.

In making or mending, as needeth thy ditch,
Get set to quickset it, learn cunningly which. Tusser.
A man may ditch and quickset three poles a day, where the ditch is three foot wide and two foot deep. Mortimer.

QUICKSET. n. f. [quick and set.] Living plant set to grow.

Plant quicksets and transplant fruit trees towards the decrease. Evelyn's Kalendar.
Nine in ten of the quickset hedges are ruined for want of skill. Swift's Miscellanies.

QUICKSIGHTED. adj. [quick and sight.] Having a sharp sight.

No body will deem the quicksighted amongst them to have very enlarged views in ethics. Locke.
No article of religion hath credulity enough for them; and yet these same cautious and quicksighted gentlemen can swallow down this foolish opinion about percipient atoms. Bentley.

QUICKSIGHTEDNESS. n. f. [from quicksighted.] Sharpness of sight.

The ignorance that is in us no more hinders the knowledge that is in others, than the blindness of a mole is an argument against the quicksightedness of an eagle. Locke.

QUICKSILVER. n. f. [quick and silver; argentum vivum, Lat.] Quicksilver, called mercury by the chymists, is a naturally fluid mineral, and the heaviest of all known bodies next to gold, and is the more heavy and fluid, as it is more pure; its nature is so homogeneous and simple, that it is a question whether gold itself be more so: it penetrates the parts of all the other metals, renders them brittle, and in part dissolves them: it is wholly volatile in the fire, and may be driven up in vapour by a degree of heat very little greater than that of boiling water: it is the least tenacious of all bodies, and every smaller drop may be again divided by the lightest touch into a multitude of others, and is the most divisible of all bodies: mercury very readily mixes with gold, silver, lead and tin, by chymical operations, but not without difficulty with copper and iron; and it mixes easily with zink and bismuth among the fermetals: the specific gravity of pure mercury is to water as 14020 to 1000, and as it is the heaviest of all fluids, it is also the coldest, and when heated the hottest: of the various ores, in which mercury is found, cinnabar is the richest and most valuable, which is extremely heavy, and of a bright and beautiful red colour: native cinnabar is principally found in the mines of Friuli, belonging to the Venetians, in Italy, and some others in Spain, Hungary, and the East Indies: quicksilver is also found sometimes in its pure and fluid state lodged in cavities of hard stones in the cinnabar mines, and the purer ores are chiefly composed of cinnabar in small quantities, mixed with various other substances: the ancients all esteemed quicksilver a poison, nor was it brought into internal use till about two hundred and twenty years ago, which was first occasioned by the shepherds, who ventured to give it their sheep to kill worms, and as they received no hurt by it, it was soon concluded, that men might take it safely: in time, the diggers in the mines, when they found it crude, swallowed it in vast quantities, in order to sell it privately, when they had voided it by stool: but too free a use of so powerful a medicine cannot be always without danger: the miners seldom follow their occupation above three or four years, and then die in a most miserable condition; and the artificers, who have much dealing in it, are generally seized with paralytick disorders: however, under proper regulation, it is a most excellent medicine. Hill's Materia Medica.

Mercury is very improperly called a metal, for though it has weight and similarity of parts, it is neither dissolvable by fire, malleable nor fixed: it seems to constitute a particular class of fossils, and is rather the mother or basis of all metals, than a metal itself: mercury is of considerable use in gilding, making looking-glasses, in refining gold, and various other mechanical operations besides medicine. Chambers.

Cinnabar maketh a beautiful purple like unto a red rose; the best was wont to be made in Libia of brimstone and quicksilver burnt. Peacham on Drawing.

QUI

QUICKSILVERED. adj. [from quicksilver.] Overlaid with quicksilver.

Metal is more difficult to polish than glass, and is afterwards very apt to be spoiled by tarnishing, and reflects not so much light as glass quicksilvered over does: I would propound to use instead of the metal a glass ground concave on the fore-side, and as much convex on the backside, and quicksilvered over on the convex side. Newton's Opticks.

QUIDDAM. [Latin.] Somebody.

For envy of so many worthy quiddams, which catch at the garland, which to you alone is due, you will be persuaded to pluck out of the hateful darkness those so many excellent poems of yours, which lie hid, and bring them forth to eternal light. Spenser.

QUIDDANY. n. f. [cydonium, cydoniatum, Lat. quiddan; German, a quince.], Marmalade; confection of quinces made with sugar.

QUIDDIT. n. f. [corrupted from quiddit, Lat. or from que dit, Fr.] A subtlety; an equivocation. A low word.

Why may not that be the skull of a lawyer? where be his quiddits now? his quilllets? his cases? and his tricks? Shak.

QUIDDITY. n. f. [quidditas, low Latin.]

1. Efficacy; that which is a proper answer to the question, quid est? a scholastick term.

He could reduce all things to acts,
And knew their natures and abstracts,
Where entity and quiddity,
The ghosts of defunct bodies fly. Hudibras, p. i.

2. A trifling nicety; a cavil; a captious question.

Misnomer in our laws, and other quiddities, I leave to the professors of law. Camden's Remains.

QUIESCENCE. n. f. [from quiesco, Lat.] Rest; repose.

Whether the earth move or rest, I undertake not to determine: my work is to prove, that the common inducement to the belief of its quiescence, the testimony of sense, is weak and frivolous. Glanvill's Scaph.

QUIESCENT. adj. [quiescens, Latin.] Resting; not being in motion; not moving; lying at repose.

Though the earth move, its motion must needs be as inferrible as if it were quiescent. Glanvill's Scaph.

The right side, from whence the motion of the body beginneeth, is the active or moving side; but the snifter is the weaker or more quiescent side. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Sight takes in at a greater distance and more variety at once, comprehending also quiescent objects, which hearing does not. Holder's Elements of Speech.

If it be in some part movent, and in some part quiescent, it must needs be a curve line, and so no radius. Grew.

Prefusion or motion cannot be propagated in a fluid in right lines beyond an obstacle which stops part of the motion, but will bend and spread every way into the quiescent medium, which lies beyond the obstacle. Newton's Opticks.

QUIET. adj. [quiet, Fr. quietus, Latin.]

1. Still; free from disturbance.

Breaking off the end for want of breath,
And flying soft, as down to sleep her laid,
She ended all her woe in quiet death. Fa. Queen.

This life is best,
If quiet life is best; sweeter to you,
That have a sharper known. Shakefp. Cymbeline.

2. Peaceable; not turbulent; not offensive; mild.

Let it be in the ornament of a meek and quiet spirit. 1 Pet.

3. Still; not in motion.

They laid wait for him, and were quiet all the night. Judges xvi. 2.

4. Smooth; not ruffled.

Happy is your grace,
That can translate the stubbornness of fortune
Into so quiet and so sweet a style. Shakefp.

QUIET. n. f. [quiet, Lat.] Rest; repose; tranquillity; freedom from disturbance; peace; security.

They came into Laish unto a people that were at quiet and secure. Judges xviii. 27.

There fix'd their arms, and there renew'd their names,
And there in quiet rules. Dryden's Annals.

Indulgent quiet, pow'r serene,
Mother of joy and love. Hughes.

To QUIET. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To calm; to lull; to pacify; to put to rest.

The lowest degree of faith, that can quiet the soul of man, is a firm conviction that God is placable. Forbes.

2. To still.

Putting together the ideas of moving or quieting corporal motion, joined to substance, we have the idea of an immaterial spirit. Locke.

QUIETER. n. f. [from quiet.] The person or thing that quiets.

QUIETISM. n. f. [from quiet.]

What is called by the poets apathy or dispassion, by the scepticks indisturbance, by the Molinists quietism, by common men peace of conscience, seems all to mean but great tranquillity of mind. Temple.

QUI

QUIETLY. adv. [from quiet.]

1. Calmly; without violent emotion.

Let no man for his own poverty become more oppressing in his bargain, but quietly, modestly and patiently recommend his estate to God, and leave the success to him. Taylor.

2. Peaceably; without offence.

Although the rebels had behaved themselves quietly and modestly by the way as they went; yet they doubted that would but make them more hungry to fall upon the spoil in the end. Bacon's Henry VII.

3. At rest; without agitation.

QUIETNESS. n. f. [from quiet.]

1. Coolness of temper.

This cruel quietness neither returning to dislike nor proceeding to favour; gracious, but gracious still after one manner. Sidney, b. ii.

That which we move for our better instruction sake, turneth into anger and choler in them; they grow altogether out of quietness with it; they answer fumingly. Hooker.

2. Peace; tranquillity.

Stop effusion of our christian blood,
And 'stablish quietness on ev'ry side. Shakefp. Henry VI.

What miseries have both nations avoided, and what quietness and security attained by their peaceable union? Hayward.

3. Stillness; calmness.

QUIETSDOME. adj. [from quiet.] Calm; still; undisturbed.

Not in use.

Let the night be calm and quiet some,
Without tempestuous storms or sad affray. Spenser.

QUIETUDE. n. f. [quietudo, Fr. from quiet.] Rest; repose; tranquillity. Not in common use.

From the equal distribution of the phlegmatick humour, the proper alloy of fervent blood, will flow a future quietude and serenity in the affections. Wotton on Education.

QUILL. n. f.

1. The hard and strong feather of the wing, of which pens are made.

Birds have three other hard substances proper to them; the bill, which is of a like matter with the teeth, the shell of the egg, and their quills. Bacon's Nat. History.

2. The instrument of writing.

I will only touch the duke's own deportment in that island, the proper subject of my quill. Wotton's Buckingham.

Those lives they fail'd to rescue by their skill,
Their muse would make immortal with her quill. Garth.

From him whose quills stand quiver'd at his ear,
To him that notches sticks at Westminster. Pope.

3. Prick or dart of a porcupine.

Near these was the black prince of Monomotapa, by whose side was seen the quill darting porcupine. Arbutnot and Pope.

4. Reed on which weavers wind their threads.

The presumptuous damsel rashly dar'd
The goddess' self to challenge to the field,
Of works with loom, with needle, and with quill. Spenser.

The instrument with which musicians strike their strings.

His flying fingers and harmonious quill Strike sev'n distinguishing notes, and sev'n at once they fill. Dryden's Æneis.

QUILLET. n. f. [quidlibet, Lat.] Subtlety; nicety; fraudulent distinction.

Why may not that be the skull of a lawyer? where be his quiddits now? his quilllets? his cases? and his tricks? Shak.

A great foul weighs in the scale of reason, what it is to judge of, rather than dwell with too scrupulous a diligence upon little quilllets and niceties. Digby.

Ply her with love letters and billets,
And bait them well for quirks and quilllets. Hudibras.

QUILT. n. f. [couette, Fr. kilt, Dutch; culcita, culcitra, Lat.] A cover made by stitching one cloth over another with some soft substance between them.

Quilts of roses and spices are nothing so helpful, as to take a cake of new bread, and bedew it with a little sack. Bacon.

In both tables, the beds were covered with magnificent quilts amongst the richer fort. Arbutnot on Coins.

She on the quilt sinks with becoming woe,
Wrapt in a gown, for sickness and for woe. Pope.

To QUILT. v. a. [from the noun.] To stitch one cloth upon another with something soft between them.

The sharp steel arriving forcibly
On his horse neck before the quilted fell,
Then from the head the body fundred quite. Fairy Queen.

A bag quilted with bran is very good, but it drieth too much. Bacon's Natural History.

Entellus for the strife prepares,
Strip'd of his quilted coat, his body bares,
Compos'd of mighty bone. Dryden's Æneis.

A chair was ready,
So quilted, that he lay at ease reclin'd. Dryden.

Mayn't I quilt my rope? it galls my neck. Arbutnot.

QUINARI. adj. [quinarus, Lat.] Consisting of five.

This quinary number of elements ought to have been refrained to the generality of animals and vegetables. Boyle.

QUI

QUINCE. n. f. [coin, Fr. quiddan; German.]

1. The tree.

The quince tree is of a low stature; the branches are diffused and crooked; the flower and fruit is like that of the pear tree; but, however cultivated, the fruit is four and astrigent; and is covered with a kind of down: of this the species are six. Miller.

2. The fruit.

They call for dates and quinces in the pastry. Shakefp.

A quince, in token of fruitfulness, by the laws of Solon, was given to the brides of Athens upon the day of their marriage. Peacham on Drawing.

To QUINCH. v. n. [this word seems to be the same with quench, winch and quack.] To stir; to flounce as in resentment or pain.

Bestow all my soldiers in such sort as I have, that no part of all that realm shall be able to dare to quinch. Spenser.

QUINCUNCIAL. adj. [from quincunx:] Having the form of a quincunx.

Of a pentagonal or quincuncial disposition, Sir Thomas Brown produces several examples in his discourse about the quincunx. Ray on the Creation.

QUINCUNX. n. f. [Latin.]

Quincunx order is a plantation of trees, disposed originally in a square, consisting of five trees, one at each corner, and a fifth in the middle, which disposition, repeated again and again, forms a regular grove, wood or wilderness; and, when viewed by an angle of the square or parallelogram, presents equal or parallel alleys.

Brown produces several examples in his discourse about the quincunx. Ray on the Creation.

He whose lightning pierc'd th' Iberian lines,
Now forms my quincunx, and now ranks my vines. Pope.

QUINQUAGESIMA. [Latin.] Quinquagesima Sunday, so called because it is the fiftieth day before Easter, reckoned by whole numbers; shrove Sunday. Diet.

QUINQUANGULAR. adj. [quinque and angulus, Lat.] Having five corners.

Each talus, environed with a crust, conforming itself to the sides of the talus, is of a figure quinquangular. Woodw.

Exactly round, ordinately quinquangular, or having the sides parallel. More's Antidote against Atheism.

QUINQUARTICULAR. adj. [quinque and articulus, Lat.] Consisting of five articles.

They have given an end to the quinquarticular controversy, for none have since undertaken to lay more. Anderson.

QUINQUEFID. adj. [quinque and fides, Lat.] Cloven in five.

QUINQUEFOLIATED. adj. [quinque and folium, Lat.] Having five leaves.

QUINQUENNIAL. adj. [quinquennis, Lat.] Lasting five years; happening once in five years.

QUINCY. n. f. [corrupted from quincy.] A tumid inflammation in the throat, which sometimes produces suffocation. The throttling quincy 'tis my star appoints,
And rheumatism I send to rack the joints. Dryden.

Great heat and cold, succeeding one another, occasion pleuritis and quincies. Arbutnot on Air.

QUINT. n. f. [quint, Fr.] A set of five.

For state has made a quint
Of generals he's lifted in't. Hudibras, p. iii.

QUINTAIN. n. f. [quintain, Fr.] A post with a turning top.
See QUINTIN.

My better parts
Are all thrown down; and that, which here stands up,
Is but a quintain, a mere lifeless block. Shakefp.

QUINTESENCE. n. f. [quinta essentia, Lat.]

1. A fifth being.

From their gross matter the abstracts the forms,
And draws a kind of quintessence from things. Davies.

The ethereal quintessence of heav'n
Flew upward, spirited with various forms,
That rowl'd orbicular, and turn'd to stars. Milton.

They made fire, air, earth, and water, to be the four elements, of which all earthly things were compounded, and supposed the heavens to be a quintessence or fifth sort of body distinct from all these. Watts's Logic.

2. An extract from any thing, containing all its virtues in a small quantity.

To me what is this quintessence of dust? man delights not me, nor woman neither. Shakefp. Hamlet.

Who can in memory, or wit, or will,
Or air, or fire, or earth, or water find?
What alchymist can draw, with all his skill,
The quintessence of these out of the mind. Davies.

For I am a very dead thing,
In whom love wrought new alchymy,
For by his art he did express
A quintessence even from nothingness,
From dull privations and lean emptiness.
Paracelsus, by the help of an intense cold, teaches to separate the quintessence of wine. Boyle.

Let there be light I said God; and forthwith light
Ethereal, first of things, quintessence pure, Sprung from the deep. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. vii.

When

QUI

When the supreme faculties move regularly, the inferior passions and affections following, there arises a serenity and complacency upon the whole soul, infinitely beyond the greatest bodily pleasures, the highest quintessence and elixir of worldly delights.

South's Sermons.
QUINTESSENTIAL, adj. [from quintessence.] Consisting of quintessence.

Venturous assertions as would have puzzled the authors to have made them good, specially considering that there is nothing contrary to the quintessential matter and circular figure of the heavens; so neither is there to the light thereof. Hakew.
QUINTIN, n. f. [I know not whence derived; Minshew deduces it from quintus, Lat. and calls it a game celebrated every fifth year; palus quintanus, Lat. Ans. quintaine, Fr.] An upright post, on the top of which a cross post turned upon a pin, at one end of the cross post was a broad board, and at the other a heavy sand bag; the play was to ride against the broad end with a lance, and pass by before the sand bag coming round, should strike the tilter on the back.

At quintin he,
In honour of his bridegroom,
Hath challeng'd either wide countess;
Come cut and long tail, for there be Six batchelors as bold as he,
Adjusting to his company,
And each one hath his livery. Benj. Johnson.

QUINTUPLE, n. f. [quintuplus, Lat.] Fivefold.
In the country, the greatest proportion of mortality, one hundred and fifty-six, is above quintuple unto twenty-eight the least. Graunt's Bills of Mortality.

QUIP, n. f. [derived, by the etymologists, from whip.] A sharp jest; a taunt; a sarcasm.

Notwithstanding all her sudden quips,
The least whereof would quell a lover's hope,
Yet, spaniel like, the more she spurns my love,
The more it grows, and fawneth on her still. Shakefp.
If I sent him word his beard was not well cut, he would send me word, he cut it to please himself: this is called the quip modest. Shakefp. As You Like it.

Nymph bring with thee
Jeft and youthful jollity,
Quips, and cranks, and wanton wiles,
Nods, and becks, and wreathed smiles. Milton.

To QUIP, v. a. To rally with bitter sarcasms. Anfworth.
QUIRE, n. f. [chœur, Fr. choro, Italian.]

1. A body of singers; a chorus.
The trees did bud and early blossoms bore,
And all the quire of birds did sweetly sing,
And told that garden's pleasures in their caroling. Fa. Qu.

Myself have lim'd a bush for her,
And plac'd a quire of such enticing birds,
That she will light to listen to their lays. Shakefp.

At thy nativity a glorious quire
Of angels in the fields of Bethlehem sung
To shepherds watching at their folds by night,
And told them the Messiah now was born. Milton.

I may worship thee
For ay, with temples vow'd and virgin quires. Milton.
As in beauty she surpass'd the quire,
So nobler than the rest was her attire. Dryden.

2. The part of the church where the service is sung.
I am all on fire,
Not all the buckets in a country quire
Shall quench my rage. Cleveland.

Some run for buckets to the hallow'd quire,
Some cut the pipes, and some the engines play. Dryden.
The fox obscene to gaping toms retires,
And wolves with howling fill the sacred quires. Pope.

3. [Cabier, Fr.] A bundle of paper consisting of twenty-four sheets.

To QUIRE, v. n. [from the noun.] To sing in concert.
There's not the smallest orb which thou behold'st,
But in his motion like an angel sings,
Still quiring to the young-ey'd cherubims. Shakefp.

My throat of war be turn'd
Which quird with my drum, into a pipe
Small as an eunuch, or the virgin's voice
That babies lull asleep. Shakefp. Coriolanus.

QUIRISTER, n. f. [from quire.] Chorister; one who sings in concert, generally in divine service.

The coy quiristers, that lodge within,
Are prodigal of harmony. Thomson's Spring.

QUIRK, n. f. [of this word I can find no rational derivation.]
1. Quick stroke; sharp fit.
I've felt so many quirks of joy and grief,
That the first face of neither on the start,
Can woman me unto't. Shakefp.

2. Smart taunt.
Some kind of men quarrel purposely on others to taste their valour; belike, this is a man of that quirk. Shakefp.
I may chance to have some odd quirks and remnants of wit broken on me. Shakefp.

QUI

Conceits, puns, quirks or quibbles, jests and repartees may agreeably entertain, but have no place in the search after truth.

3. Subtlety; nicety; artful distinction.
Most fortunately he hath achiev'd a maid,
That paragon description and wild fame,
One that excels the quirks of blazoning pens. Shakefp.

Let a lawyer tell them he has spied some defect in an entail; how solicitous are they to repair that error, and leave nothing to the mercy of a law quirk? Decay of Piety.

Ply her with love letters and billets,
And bait them well for quirks and quilllets. Hudibras.
There are a thousand quirks to avoid the stroke of the law. L'Estrange's Fables.

4. Loose light tune.
Now the chappel's silver bell you hear,
That summons you to all the pride of pray'r;
Light quirks of musick, broken and uneven. Pope.

To QUIR, v. a. part. pass. quit; pret. I have quit or quitted. [quiter, Fr. quitaré, Italian; quitar, Spanith.]
1. To discharge an obligation; to make even.
We will be quit of thine oath, which thou hast made us to swear. Jos. ii. 20.

By this act, old tyrant,
I shall be quit with thee; while I was virtuous,
I was a stranger to thy blood, but now
Sure thou wilt love me for this horrid crime. Denham.

To John I ow'd great obligation;
But John, unhappily, thought fit
To publish it to all the nation;
Sure John and I are more than quit. Prior.

2. To set free.
Thou art quit from a thousand calamities; therefore let thy joy, which should be as great for thy freedom from them, as is thy sadness when thou feelest any of them, do the same cure upon thy discontent. Taylor.

Henceforth I fly not death, nor would prolong Life much: bent rather how I may be quit
Fairest and easiest of this cumbrous charge. Milton.

To quit you wholly of this fear, you have already looked death in the face; what have you found so terrible in it. Woke.

3. To carry through; to discharge; to perform.
Never worthy prince a day did quit
With greater hazard, and with more renown. Daniel.

4. To clear himself of an affair.
Samson hath quit himself
Like Samson, and heroically hath finish'd
A life heroic, on his enemies
Fully reveng'd hath left them years of mourning. Milton.

5. To repay; to requite.
He fair the knight saluted, louting low,
Who fair him quitted, as that courteous was. Fa. Queen.

Enkindle all the sparks of nature,
To quit this horrid act. Shakefp. King Lear.

6. To vacate obligations.
For our reward,
All our debts are paid; dangers of law,
Actions, decrees, judgments against us quitted. B. Johnson.

One step higher
Would set me highest, and in a moment quit
The debt immense of endless gratitude. Milton.

7. To pay any obligation; to clear a debt; to be tantamount.
They both did fail of their purpose, and got not so much as to quit their charges; because truth, which is the secret of the most high God, whose proper handy-work all things are, cannot be compassed with that wit and those senses which are our own. Holker, b. i.

Far other plaints, tears and laments
The time, the place, and our estates require,
Think on thy sins, which man's old foe presents
Before that judge that quits each soul his hire. Fairfax.

Does not the air feed the flame? and does not the flame at the same time warm and enlighten the air? and does not the earth quit scores with all the elements in the noble fruits that issue from it. South's Sermons.

Still I shall hear, and never quit the score, Stunn'd with hoarse Codrus' Theleid o'er and o'er. Dryd.
Iron works ought to be confined to certain places, where there is no conveyance for timber to places of vent, so as to quit the cost of the carriage. Temple's Miscellanies.

8. [Contracted from acquit.] To absolve; to acquit.
Nor further seek what their offences be,
Guiltless I quit, guilty I set them free. Fairfax.

9. To abandon; to forsake.
Their father,
Then old and fond of issue, took such sorrow,
That he quit being. Shakefp. Cymbeline.

Honours are promis'd
To all will quit 'em; and rewards propos'd
Even to slaves that can detect their courtes. Benj. Johnson.

Such

QUO

Such variety of arguments only distract the understanding, such a superficial way of examining is to quit truth for appearance, only to serve our vanity. Locke.

10. To resign; to give up.
The prince, renown'd in bounty as in arms,
With pity saw the ill-conceal'd distress,
Quitted his title to Campaspe's charms,
And gave the fair one to the friend's embrace. Prior.

QUITCHGRASS, n. f. [spice, Saxon.] Dog grass.
They are the best corn to grow on grounds subject to quitchgrass or other weeds. Mortimer's Husbandry.

QUITE, adv. [this is derived, by the etymologists, from quitté, discharged, free, Fr. which however at first appearance unlikely is much favoured by the original use of the word, which was, in this combination, quite and clean; that is, with a clean riddance: its present signification was gradually introduced.] Completely; perfectly.

Those latter exclude not the former quite and clean as unnecessary. Holker, b. i.
He hath sold us, and quite devoured our money. Gen. xxxi.
If some foreign ideas will offer themselves, reject them, and hinder them from running away with our thoughts quite from the subject in hand. Locke.

The same actions may be aimed at different ends, and arise from quite contrary principles. Addison's Spectator.

QUITTENT, n. f. [quit and rent.] Small rent reserved.
Such a tax would be insensible, and pass but as a small quittent, which every one would be content to pay towards the guard of the seas. Temple's Miscellanies.

My old master, a little before his death, wish'd him joy of the estate which was falling to him, desiring him only to pay the gifts of charity he had left as quittents upon the estate. Addison's Spectator, N<sup>o</sup> 517.

QUITS, interj. [from quit.] An exclamation used when any thing is repaid and the parties become even.

QUITTANCE, n. f. [quittance, Fr.]
1. Discharge from a debt or obligation; an acquittance.
Now I am rememb'ed, he scorn'd at me!
But that's all one; omittance is no quittance. Shakefp.

2. Recompence; return; repayment.
Mine eyes saw him in bloody state,
Render'ing faint quittance, wearied and outbreath'd,
To Henry Monmouth. Shakefp. Henry IV. p. ii.

Plutus, the god of gold,
Is but his steward; no meed but he repays
Sevenfold above itself; no gift to him
But breeds the giver a return exceeding
All use of quittance. Shakefp. Timon of Athens.

We shall forget the office of our hand,
Sooner than quittance of desert and merit. Shakefp.

To QUITTANCE, v. a. [from the noun.] To repay; to recompense. A word not used.
Embrace me then this opportunity,
As fitting best to quittance their deceit. Shakefp.

QUITTER, n. f.
1. A deliverer. Anfworth.
2. Scoria of tin. Anfworth.

QUITTERBONE, n. f.
Quitterbone is a hard round swelling upon the coronet, between the heel and the quarter, and grows most commonly on the inside of the foot. Farrier's Dict.

QUIVER, n. f. [this word seems to be corrupted from couvrir, Fr. or cover.] A case for arrows.
As Dianne hunted on a day,
She chanc'd to come where Cupid lay,
His quiver by his head,
One of his shafts the stole away,
And one of hers did close convey
Into the other's stead;
With that love wounded my love's heart,
But Dianne boasts with Cupid's dart.
Diana's nymphs would be arrayed in white, their arms and shoulders naked, bows in their hands, and quivers by their sides. Peuchan on Drawing.

Her sounding quiver on her shoulder ty'd,
One hand a dart, and one a bow supply'd,
QUIVER, adj. Nimble; active. Dryden.

There was a little quiver fellow, and he would manage you his piece thus; and he would about and about. Shakefp.

To QUIVER, v. n.
1. To quake; to play with a tremulous motion.
The birds chaunt melody on every bush,
The green leaves quiver with the cooling wind. Shakefp.

O'er the pommel cast the knight,
Forward he flew, and pitching on his head,
He quiver'd with his feet, and lay for dead.
With what a spring his furious soul broke loose,
And left the limbs still quivering on the ground. Addison.

Eurydice with quivering voice he mourn'd,
And Heber's banks Eurydice return'd.
Dancing sun beams on the waters play'd,
And verdant alders form'd a quivering shade. Gay's Trivia.

Pope.

QUO

The dying gales that pant upon the trees,
The lakes that quiver to the curling breeze. Pope.
2. To shiver; to shudder.
Zelmane would have put to her helping hand, but she was taken with such a quivering, that she thought it more wisdom to lean herself to a tree and look on. Sidney, b. ii.

QUIVERED, adj. [from quiver.]
1. Furnished with a quiver.
'Tis chastity,
She that has that, is clad in compleat steel,
And like a quiver'd nymph with arrows keen,
May trace huge forests and unharbour'd heaths,
Infamous hills, and perilous sandy wilds. Milton.

2. Sheathed as in a quiver.
From him whose quills stand quivered at his ear,
To him who notches sticks at Westminster. Pope.

To QUO, v. n. [a low word.] To move as the embryo does in the womb; to move as the heart does when throbbing.
QUODLIBET, n. f. [Latin.] A nice point; a subtilty.
He who reading on the heart,
When all his quodlibets of art
Could not expound its pulse and heat, Swore, he had never felt it beat. Prior.

QUODLIBETARIAN, n. f. [quodlibet, Lat.] One who talks or disputes on any subject. Diët.
QUODLIBETICAL, adj. [quodlibet, Lat.] Not restrained to a particular subject: in the schools theses or problems, anciently proposed to be debated for curiosity or entertainment, were so called. Diët.

QUOIF, n. f. [coiffe, Fr.]
1. Any cap with which the head is covered. See COIF.
Hence thou fickle quoif,
Thou art a guard too wanton for the head,
Which princes, flesh'd with conquest, aim to hit. Shakefp.

2. The cap of a serjeant at law.
To QUOIF, v. a. [coiffer, Fr.] To cap; to dress with a head-dress.

She is always quoiffed with the head of an elephant, to show that this animal is the breed of that country. Addison.
QUOIFFURE, n. f. [coiffure, Fr.] Head-dress.
The lady in the next medal is very particular in her quoiffure. Addison on Ancient Medals.

QUOIL, n. f. See COIL.
QUOIN, n. f. [coin, Fr.]
1. Corner.
A sudden tempest from the desert flew
With horrid wings, and thundered as it blew,
Then whirling round, the quoins together strook. Sandys.

Build brick houses with strong and firm quoins or columns at each end. Mortimer's Husbandry.

2. An instrument for raising warlike engines. Anfworth.
QUOIR, n. f. [coete, Dutch.]
1. Something thrown to a great distance to a certain point.
He plays at quits well. Shakefp. Henry IV.
When he played at quits, he was allowed his breeches and stockings. Arbutnot and Pope.

2. The discus of the ancients is sometimes called in English quoit, but improperly; the game of quits is a game of skill; the discus was only a trial of strength, as among us to throw the hammer.

To QUOIR, v. n. [from the noun.] To throw quits; to play at quits. Dryden uses it to throw the discus. See the noun.
Noble youths for mastery should strive
To quit, to run, and steeds and chariots drive. Dryden.

To QUOIR, v. a. To throw.
Quit him down, Bardolph, like a shove-groat filling. Shak.
QUONDAM, [Latin.] Having been formerly. A ludicrous word.

This is the quondam king, let's seize upon him. Shakefp.
What lands and lordships for their owner know
My quondam barber, but his worship now. Dryden.

QUOOK, preterite of quake. Obsolete.
Freely up those royal spoils he took,
Yet at the lion's skin he inly quook. Spenser.

QUORUM, n. f. [Latin.] A bench of justices; such a number of any officers as is sufficient to do business.
They were a parcel of mummery, and being himself one of the quorum in his own country, he wondered that none of the Middlesex justices took care to lay some of them by the heels. Addison's Freeholder, N<sup>o</sup> 44.

QUOTTA, n. f. [quatus, Lat.] A share; a proportion as assigned to each.

Scarce one in this list but engages to supply a quota of brisk young fellows, equip with hats and feathers. Addison.

QUOTATION, n. f. [from quote.]
1. The act of quoting; citation.
2. Passage adduced out of an author as evidence or illustration.

He, that has but ever so little examined the citations of writers, cannot doubt how little credit the quotations deserve, where the originals are wanting.

He rang'd his tropes, and preach'd up patience, Back'd his opinion with quotations. Prior.

To QUOTE.

QUO

TO QUOTE. v. a. [quotere, Fr.] To cite an author or passage of an author; to adduce by way of authority or illustration the words of another.
The second chapter to the Romans is here quoted only to paint the margin.
St. Paul quotes one of their poets for this saying. Stillingfl.
He changed his mind, say the papers, and quote for it Melchior Adams and Holpinian. Atterbury.
He quoted texts right upon our Saviour, though he expounded them wrong. Atterbury.
He will, in the middle of a session, quote passages out of Plato and Pindar. Swift's Miscellanies.
QUOTER. n. s. [from quote.] Citer; he that quotes.
I proposed this passage entire, to take off the disguise which its quater put upon it. Atterbury.
QUOTH. verb. imperfect. [this is only part of quodan, Saxon, retained in English, and is now only used in ludicrous language. It is used by Sidney irregularly in the second person.] Quoth I, say I or said I; quoth he, says he or said he.
Enjoying quoth you. Sidney, b. ii.
Shall we, quoth he, so basely brook
This paltry ass. Hudibras.

QUO

QUOTIDIAN. adj. [quotidian, Fr. quotidianus, Latin.] Daily; happening every day.
Quotidian things, and equidistant hence Shut in for man in one circumference. Donne.
Nor was this a short fit of shaking, as an ague, but a quotidian fever, always increasing to higher inflammation. King Charles.
QUOTIDIAN. n. s. [febris quotidiana, Lat.] A quotidian fever; a fever which returns every day.
If I could meet that fancymonger, I would give him some good counsel; for he seems to have the quotidian of love. Shakespeare.
QUOTIENT. n. s. [quotient, Fr. quoties, Latin.]
In arithmetick, quotient is the number produced by the division of the two given numbers the one by the other. Cocker.
To make all the steps belonging to the same pair of stairs of an equal height, they consider the height of the room in feet and inches, and multiply the feet by twelve, whose product, with the number of odd inches, gives the sum of the whole height in inches, which sum they divide by the number of steps they intend to have in that height, and the quotient shall be the number of inches and parts that each step shall be high. Moxon's Mechanical Exercises.

R.

R.

RAB

R, Is called the canine letter, because it is uttered with some resemblance to the growl or snarl of a cur: it has one constant sound in English, such as it has in other languages; as red, rose, more, mutinious: in words derived from the Greek, it is followed by an h, rhapsody: r is never mute, unless the second r may be accounted mute, where two rr are used; as myrrh.
TO RABATE. v. n. [rabatre, Fr.] In falconry, to recover a hawk to the fist again. Ainsworth.
TO RABBIT. v. a. [rabatre, raboter, Fr.] To pare down pieces of wood so as to fit one another.
The rabbit plane is to cut part of the upper edge of a board straight or square down, that the edge of another board, cut down in the same manner, may join into the square of the first; and this lapping over of two boards is called rabbiting. Moxon's Mechanical Exercises.
The window frame hath every one of its lights rabbetted on its outside about half an inch into the frame, and all these rabbets, but that on the ground-fell, are grooved square. Moxon's Mechanical Exercises.
RABBIT. n. s. [from the verb.] A joint made by paring two pieces so that they wrap over one another.
Having drove in the hooks, they set the rabbets of the door within the rabbets of the door-post. Moxon's Mechan. Exer.
RABBI. n. s. A doctor among the Jews.
The Hebrew rabbis say, that nature hath given man, for the pronouncing of all letters, the lips, the tongue, the palate and throat. Camden's Remains.
Be not ye called rabbi; for one is your master, even Christ, and all ye are brethren. Mat. xxiii. 8.
RABBIT. n. s. [robbe, rabbekin, Dutch.] A furry animal that lives on plants, and burrows in the ground.
I knew a wench married, as he went to the garden for parsley to stuff a rabbit. Shakespeare's Taming of the Shrew.
A company of scholars, going to catch conies, carried one with them which had not much wit, and gave in charge, that if he saw any, he should be silent for fear of scaring of them; but he no sooner espied a company of rabbits, but he cried aloud, ecce multi cuniculi; which he had no sooner said, but the conies ran to their burrows; and he being checked by them for it, answered, who would have thought that the rabbits understood Latin? Bacon's Apophthegms.
RABBLE. n. s. [rabula, Lat. rabulari, low Lat.] A tumultuous crowd; an assembly of low people.
Countrymen, will ye relent, and yield to mercy,
Or let a rabble lead you to your deaths? Shakespeare.
Go bring the rabble here to this place. Shakespeare.
Of these his several ravishments, betrayings, and stealing away of men's wives, came in all those ancient fables, and all that rabble of Grecian forgeries. Raleigh.
The better sort abhors scurrility,
And often censures what the rabble like. Roscommon.
That profane, atheistical, epicurean rabble, whom the whole nation so rings of, are not the wisest men in the world. South's Sermons.
To gratify the barbarous audience, I gave them a short rabble scene, because the mob are represented by Plutarch and Polybius with the same character of baseness and cowardice. Dryden's Preface to Cleomenes.
In change of government,
The rabble rule their great oppressors fate,
Do foreign justice and revenge the state. Dryden.
His enemies have been only able to make ill impressions upon the low and ignorant rabble, and to put the dregs of the people in a ferment. Addison's Freeholder, N. 24.
RABBLEMENT. n. s. [from rabble.] Crowd; tumultuous assembly of mean people.
A rude rabblement,
Whose like he never saw, he durst not bide,
But got his ready steed, and fast away 'gan ride. Fa. 2u.

RAC

The rabblement houted, clap'd their chopt hands, and uttered a deal of stinking breath. Shakespeare's Julius Caesar.
There will be always tyrants, murderers, thieves, traitors, and other of the same rabblement. Camden's Remains.
RABID. adj. [rabidus, Lat.] Fierce; furious; mad.
RABINET. n. s. A kind of smaller ordnance. Ainsworth.
RACE. n. s. [race, Fr. from radice, Lat.]
1. A family ascending.
2. Family descending.
He in a moment will create
Another world; out of man, a race
Of men innumerable, there to dwell. Milton.
Male he created thee, but thy comfort
Female for race. Milton.
High as the mother of the gods in place,
And proud like her of an immortal race. Dryden.
Hence the long race of Alban fathers come. Dryden.
3. A generation; a collective family.
A race of youthful and unhandled colts,
Fetching mad bounds. Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.
4. A particular breed.
Instead
Of spirits malign, a better race to bring Into their vacant room. Milton.
In the races of mankind and families of the world, there remains not to one above another the least pretence to have the right of inheritance. Locke.
5. RACE of ginger. [rayz de gengibre, Spanish.] A root or sprig of ginger.
6. A particular strength or taste of wine, applied by Temple to any extraordinary natural force of intellect.
Of gardens there may be forms wholly irregular, that may have more beauty than of others; but they must owe it to some extraordinary dispositions of nature in the seat, or some great race of fancy or judgment in contrivance. Temple.
7. [Ras, Islandick.] Contest in running.
To describe races and games
Or tilting furniture. Milton.
8. Course on the feet.
The flight of many birds is swifter than the race of any beasts. Bacon.
9. Progress; course.
It suddenly fell from an excess of favour, which many examples having taught them, never slopt his race till it came to a headlong overthrow. Sidney.
My race of glory run, and race of shame.
Their ministry perform'd, and race well run. Milton.
The great light of day yet wants to run
Much of his race though steep.
He safe return'd, the race of glory past,
New to his friends embrace. Pope's Odyssey.
10. Train; process.
An offensive war is made, which is unjust in the aggressor; the prosecution and race of the war carrieth the defendant to invade the ancient patrimony of the first aggressor, who is now turned defendant; shall he sit down, and not put himself in defence?
The race of this war fell upon the loss of Urbin, which he re-obtained. Bacon.
RACEHORSE. n. s. [race and horse.] Horse bred to run for prizes.
The reason Hudibras gives, why those, who can talk on trifles, speak with the greatest fluency, is, that the tongue is like a racehorse, which runs the faster the less weight it carries. Addison.
RACEMATION. n. s. [racemus, Lat.] Cluster, like that of grapes.
A cock will in one day fertilitate the whole racemation or cluster of eggs, which are not excluded in many weeks after. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
RACEMI'FEROUS. adj. [racemus and fero, Latin.] Bearing clusters.
RACER.

RAC

RA'CER. n. f. [from race.] Runner; one that contends in speed.
His stumbling founder'd jade can trot as high
As any other pegasus can fly;
So the dull eel moves nimbler in the mud,
Than all the swift-finn'd racers of the flood. Dorset.
A poet's form the plac'd before their eyes,
And bade the nimblest racer seize the prize. Pope.
RA'CINESS. n. f. [from racy.] The quality of being racy.
RACK. n. f. [racke, Dutch, from racken, to stretch.]
1. An engine to torture.
Vex not his ghost; O let him pass! he hates him
That would, upon the rack of this rough world, Stretch him out longer. Shakefp. King Lear.
Did ever any man upon the rack afflict himself, because he had received a cross answer from his mistress. Taylor.
Let them feel the whip, the sword, the fire,
And in the tortures of the rack expire. Addison.
2. Torture; extreme pain.
A fit of the stone puts a king to the rack, and makes him as miserable as it does the meanest subject. Temple.
A cool behaviour sets him on the rack, and is interpreted as an instance of aversion or indifference. Addison.
3. Any instrument by which extension is performed.
These bows, being somewhat like the long bows in use amongst us, were bent only by a man's immediate strength, without the help of any bender or rack that are used to others. Wilkins's Mathematical Magick.
4. A distaff; commonly a portable distaff, from which they spin by twirling a ball.
The sisters turn the wheel,
Empty the woolly rack, and fill the reel. Dryden.
5. [Racke, Dutch, a track.] The clouds as they are driven by the wind.
That, which is now a horse, even with a thought
The rack dissolves, and makes it indistinct
As water is in water. Shakefp. Antony and Cleopatra.
The great globe itself,
Yea, all, which it inherits, shall dissolve;
And, like this insubstantial pageant, faded,
Leave not a rack behind. Shakefp. Tempest.
We often see against some form,
A silence in the heav'ns, the rack stand still,
The bold winds speechless, and the orb below
As hush as death. Shakefp. Hamlet.
The winds in the upper region, which move the clouds above, which we call the rack, and are not perceived below, pass without noise. Bacon's Natural History.
As wintry winds contending in the sky,
With equal force of lungs their titles try;
They rage, they roar: the doubtful rack of heav'n Stands without motion, and the tide undriv'n. Dryden.
6. [Japaca, the occiput, Saxon; racca, Ilandick, hinges or joints.] A neck of mutton cut for the table.
7. A grate.
8. A wooden grate in which hay is placed for cattle.
Their bulls they send to pastures far,
Or hills, or feed them at full racks within. May's Virgil.
The best way to feed cattle with it, is to put it in racks, because of the great quantity they tread down. Mortimer.
He bid the nimble hours
Bring forth the steeds; the nimble hours obey:
From their full racks the generous steeds retire. Addison.
9. Arrack; a spirituous liquor. See ARRACK.
To RACK. v. n. [from the noun.] To stream as clouds before
the wind.
Three glorious suns, each one a perfect sun,
Not separated with the racking clouds,
But sever'd in a pale clear-shining sky. Shakefp.
To RACK. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To torment by the rack.
Hold, O dreadful Sir,
You will not rack an innocent old man. Dryden and Lee.
2. To torment; to harass.
Th' apostate angle, though in pain,
Vaunting aloud, but rack'd with deep despair. Milton.
3. To harass by exaction.
The landlords there shamefully rack their tenants, exacting of them, besides his covenants, what he pleaseth. Spenser.
The commons ha't thou rack'd; the clergy's bags
Are lank and lean with thy extortions. Shakefp.
He took possession of his just estate,
Nor rack'd his tenants with increase of rent. Dryden.
4. They racking and stretching scripture further than by God was meant, are drawn into sundry inconveniences. Hooker.
The wisest among the heathens rack'd their wits, and cast about every way, managing every little argument to the utmost advantage. Tillotson's Sermons.
5. To stretch; to extend.
Nor have I money nor commodity
To raise a present sum;
Try what my credit can in Venice do,
That shall be rack'd even to the uttermost. Shakefp.

RAD

6. To defecate; to draw off from the lees. I know not whence this word is derived in this sense; rein, German, is clear, pure, whence our word to rinse; this is perhaps of the same race.
It is common to draw wine or beer from the lees, which we call racking, whereby it will clarify much the sooner.
Bacon.
Some roll their cask about the cellar to mix it with the lees, and, after a few days refetlement, rack it off. Mortimer.
RACK-RENT. n. f. [rack and rent.] Rent raised to the utter-most.
Have poor families been ruined by rack-rents, paid for the lands of the church? Swift's Miscellanies.
RACK-RENT. n. f. [rack and rent.] One who pays the utmost rent.
Though this be a quarter of his yearly income, and the publick tax takes away one hundred; yet this influences not the yearly rent of the land, which the rack-renter or under-tenant pays. Locke.
RACKET. n. f. [of uncertain derivation; M. Casaubon derives it, after his custom, from gaxia, the dash of fluctuation against the shore.]
1. An irregular clattering noise.
That the tennis court keeper knows better than I, it is a low ebb of linen with thee, when thou keep'st not racket there. Shakefp. Henry IV. p. ii.
2. A confused talk, in burlesque language.
Ambition hath removed her lodging, and lives the next door to faction, where they keep such a racket, that the whole parish is disturbed and every night in an uproar. Swift.
3. [Raquette, Fr.] The instrument with which players strike the ball. Whence perhaps all the other senses.
When we have match'd our rackets to these balls,
We will in France play a set,
Shall strike his father's crown into the hazard. Shakefp.
The body, into which impression is made, either can yield backward or it cannot: if it can yield backward, then the impression made is a motion; as we see a stroke with a racket upon a ball, makes it fly from it. Digby on the Soul.
He talks much of the motives to do and forbear, how they determine a reasonable man, as if he were no more than a tennis-ball, to be tossed to and fro by the rackets of the second causes. Bramhall against Hobbs.
RA'CKING. n. f.
Racking pace of a horse is the same as an amble, only that it is a swifter time and a shorter tread; and though it does not rid so much ground, yet it is something easier. Far. Dict.
RA'CKOON. n. f.
The rackoon is a New England animal, like a badger, having a tail like a fox, being clothed with a thick and deep fur: it sleeps in the day time in a hollow tree, and goes out at nights, when the moon shines, to feed on the sea fide, where it is hunted by dogs. Bailey.
RA'CY. adj. [perhaps from rayz, Spanish, a root.] Strong;
flavorous; tasting of the foil.
Rich rac verses in which we
The foil, from which they come, taste, smell, and see. Cowley.
From his brain that Helicon distill,
Whose rac liquor did his offspring fill. Denham.
The cyder at first is very luscious, but if ground more early, it is more rac. Mortimer's Husbandry.
The hospitable fage, in sign
Of social welcome, mix'd the rac wine,
Late from the mellowing cask restor'd to light,
By ten long years refin'd, and rosy bright. Pope.
RAD. the old pret. of read. Spenser.
RAD. red, and rad, differing only in dialect, signify counsel; as Conrad, powerful or skilful in counsel; Ethelred, a noble counsellor; Rodbert, eminent for counsel; Eubulus and Thrasylbulus have almost the same sense. Gilpin.
RA'DDOCK, or ruddock. n. f. A bird.
The raddock would,
With charitable bill, bring thee all this. Shakefp.
RA'DIANCE. n. f. [radiare, Lat.] Sparkling lustre; glitter.
By the sacred radiance of the sun,
By all the operations of the orbs,
Here I disclaim all my paternal care, Shakefp. K. Lear.
Whether there be not too high an apprehension above its natural radiance, is not without just doubt; however it be granted a very splendid gum, and whose sparkles may somewhat resemble the glances of fire. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
The son
Girt with omnipotence, with radiance crown'd
Of majesty divine. Milton.
A glory surpassing the sun in its greatest radiance, which,
though we cannot describe, will bear some resemblance.
Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
The rapid radiance instantaneous strikes
Th' illum'd mountain. Thomson's Spring.
RA'DIANT.

RAD

RA'DIANT. adj. [radians, Lat.] Shining; brightly sparkling; emitting rays.
There was a fun of gold radiant upon the top, and before,
a small cherub of gold with wings displayed. Bacon.
Mark what radiant state the spreads,
In circle round her shining throne,
Shooting her beams like silver threads,
This, this is the alone. Milton's Arcades.
Virtue could see to do what virtue would
By her own radiant light, though fun and moon
Were in the flat sea funk. Milton.
I see the warlike host of heaven,
Radiant in glittering arms and beamy pride,
Go forth to succour truth below. Milton.
To RA'DIATE. v. n. [radio, Lat.] To emit rays; to shine;
to sparkle.
Though with wit and parts their possessors could never engage God to send forth his light and his truth; yet now that revelation hath disclosed them, and that he hath been pleas'd to make them radiate in his word, men may recollect those scatter'd divine beams, and kindling with them the topics proper to warm our affections, enflame holy zeal. Boyle.
Light radiates from luminous bodies directly to our eyes, and thus we see the sun or a flame; or it is reflected from other bodies, and thus we see a man or a picture. Locke.
RA'DIATED. adj. [radiatus, Lat.] Adorned with rays.
The radiated head of the phoenix gives us the meaning of a passage in Aulonius. Addison.
RA'DIATION. n. f. [radiatio, Lat. radiation, Fr.]
1. Beamy lustre; emission of rays.
We have perspective houses, where we make demonstrations of all lights and radiations, and of all colours. Bacon.
Should I say I liv'd darker than were true,
Your radiation can all clouds subdue,
But one; 'tis best light to contemplate you. Dome.
2. Emission from a center every way.
Sound paralleth in many things with the light, and radiation of things visible. Bacon's Natural History.
RA'DICAL. adj. [radical, Fr. from radix, Latin.]
1. Primitive; original.
The differences, which are secondary and proceed from these radical differences, are, plants are all figurate and de-terminate, which inanimate bodies are not. Bacon.
Such a radical truth, that God is, springing up together with the essence of the soul, and previous to all other thoughts, is not pretended to by religion. Bentley.
2. Implanted by nature.
The emission of the loose and adventitious moisture doth betray the radical moisture, and carrieth it for company. Bac.
If the radical moisture of gold were separated, it might be contrived to burn without being consumed. Wilkins.
The fun beams render the humours hot, and dry up the radical moisture. Arbutnot.
3. Serving to origination.
RA'DICALITY. n. f. [from radical.] Origination.
There may be equivocal seeds and hermaphroditical principles, that contain the radicality and power of different forms; thus, in the seeds of wheat, there lieth obscurely the feminality of dandel. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
RA'DICALLY. adv. [from radical.] Originally; primitively.
It is no easy matter to determine the point of death in insects, who have not their vitalities radically confined unto one part. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
These great orbs thus radically bright,
Primitive founts, and origins of light
Enliven worlds deny'd to human sight. Prior.
RA'DICALNESS. n. f. [from radical.] The state of being radical.
To RA'DICATE. v. a. [radicatus, from radix, Lat.] To root; to plant deeply and firmly.
Meditation will radicate these seeds, fix the transient gleam of light and warmth, confirm resolutions of good, and give them a durable confidence in the soul. Hammond.
Nor have we let fall our pen upon discouragement of unbelief, from radiated beliefs, and points of high prescription. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
If the object stays not on the sense, it makes not impression enough to be remembered; but if it be repeated there, it leaves plenty enough of those images behind it, to strengthen the knowledge of the object: in which radiated knowledge, if the memory confist, there would be no need of referring those atoms in the brain. Glanvill's Defence.
RA'DICATION. n. f. [radication, Fr. from radicate.] The act of fixing deep.
They that were to plant a church, were to deal with men of various inclinations, and of different habits of sin, and degrees of radiation of those habits; and to each of these some proper application was to be made to cure their souls.
Hammond's Fundamentals.
RA'DICLE. n. f. [radicle, Fr. from radix, Lat.] Radicle is that part of the seed of a plant, which, upon its vegetation, becomes its root. Quincy.

RAG

RA'DISH. n. f. [rædic, Sax. radis, raifort, Fr. raphanus, Lat.]
A root.
The flower of the radish consists of four leaves, which are placed in the form of a cross; out of the flower-cup rises the pointal, which afterward turns to a pod in form of an horn, that is thick, spongy, and furnished with a double row of roundish seeds; of that which is commonly cultivated there are five species; of that which is commonly cultivated in the kitchen-gardens for its root, there are several varieties; as the small topped, the deep-red, and the long topped stripped radish. Müller.
RA'DIUS. n. f. [Latin.]
1. The semi-diameter of a circle.
2. A bone of the fore-arm, which accompanies the ulna from the elbow to the wrist.
To RAFF. v. a. To sweep; to huddle; to take hastily without distinction.
Their causes and effects I thus raff up together. Carew.
To RA'FFLE. v. n. [raffler, to snatch, Fr.] To cast dice for a prize, for which every one lays down a stake.
Letters from Hampstead give me an account, there is a late institution there, under the name of a raffing shop. Tatler.
RA'FFLE. n. f. [raffe, Fr. from the verb.] A species of game or lottery, in which many stake a small part of the value of some single thing, in consideration of a chance to gain it.
The toy, brought to Rome in the third triumph of Pompey, being a pair of tables for gaming, made of two precious stones, three foot broad, and four foot long, would have made a fine raffle. Arbutnot on Coins.
RAFT. n. f. [probably from rat, Latin.] A frame or float made by laying pieces of timber cross each other.
Where is that son
That floated with thee on the fatal raft. Shakefp.
Fell the timber of yon lofty grove,
And form a raft, and build the rising ship. Pope.
RAFT. part. pass. of raff or raff. Spenser. Torn; rent.
RA'FTER. n. f. [ræfter, Sax. rafter, Dutch; corrupted, says
Junius, from roof tree.] The secondary timbers of the house; the timbers which are let into the great beam.
The rafters of my body, bone,
Being fill with you, the muscle, sinew and vein;
Which tile this house, will come again. Donne.
Shepherd,
I trust thy honest offer'd courtesy,
Which oft is sooner found in lowly sheds
With smoky rafters, than in tap'stry halls. Milton.
On them the Trojans cast Stones, rafters, pillars, beams. Denham.
From the East, a Belgian wind
His hostile breath through the dry rafters sent;
The flames impell'd. Dryden.
The roof began to mount aloft,
Aloft rose every beam and rafter,
The heavy wall climb'd slowly after. Swift's Miscel.
RA'FTERED. adj. [from rafter.] Built with rafters.
No raft'ered roofs with dance and tabor found,
No noon-tide bell invites the country round. Pope.
RAG. n. f. [Japacobe, torn, Saxon; gax, I.]
1. A piece of cloth torn from the rest; a tatter.
Cows, hoods and habits, with their wearers tost,
And flutter'd into rags. Milton.
Rags are a great improvement of chalky lands. Mortimer.
2. Any thing rent and tattered; worn out cloaths.
Fathers that wear rags,
Do make their children blind;
But fathers that bear bags,
Shall see their children kind. Shakefp. King Lear.
Worn like a cloth;
Gnawn into rags by the devouring moth. Sandys.
Content with poverty, my foul I arm;
And virtue, though in rags, will keep me warm. Dryden.
3. A fragment of drefs.
He had first matter seen undrest;
He took her naked all alone, Hudibras, p. i.
Before one rag of form was on.
RAGAMUFFIN. n. f. [from rag and I know not what else.]
I have led my ragamuffins where they were pepper'd; there's not three of my hundred and fifty left alive; and they are for the town's end to beg during life. Shakefp. Henry IV.
Shall we brook that paltry ass
And feeble scoundrel, Hudibras,
With that more paltry ragamuffin,
Ralpho, vapouring and huffing. Hudibras, p. i.
Attended with a crew of ragamuffins, he broke into his house, turned all things topsy-turvy; and then set it on fire. Swift.
RAGE. n. f. [rage, Fr.]
1. Violent anger; vehement fury.
This tiger-footed rage, when it shall find
The harm of unkind'd swiftness, will, too late,
Tie leaden pounds to's heels. Shakefp. Coriolanus.

RAI

Desire not
To allay my rages and revenges with Your colder reasonings. Shakefp.
Argument more heroic than the rage
Of Turnus for Lavinia disposs'd. Milton.
3. Vehemence or exacerbation of any thing painful.
The party hurt who hath been in great rage of pain, till the weapon was re-anointed. Bacon's Natural History.
Torment and loud lament and furious rage. Milton.
The rage of thirst and hunger now suppress'd. Pope.
To RAGE. v. n. [from the noun.]
1. To be in fury; to be heated with excessive anger.
Wine is a mocker, strong drink is raging; and whosoever is deceived thereby, is not wise. Prov. xx. 1.
Why do the heathen rage.
At this he only rag'd, and as they talk'd,
Smote him into the midriff. Milton.
Heart-rending news,
That death should license have to rage among
The fair, the wife, the virtuous. Waller.
3. To act with mischievous impetuosity.
The chariots shall rage in the streets, they shall jostle one against another, seem like torches, and run like the light-enings. Nab. ii. 4.
The madding wheels of brazen chariots rag'd. Milton.
After these waters had rag'd on the earth, they began to lessen and shrink, and the great fluctuations of this deep being quieted by degrees, the waters retired. Burnet.
RA'GEFUL. adj. [rage and full.] Furious; violent.
This courtesy was worse than a baltinado to Zelmane; so that again with rag'd eyes she had him defend himself; for no less than his life would answer it. Sidney, b. ii.
A popular orator may represent vices in so formidable appearances, and set out each virtue in so amiable a form, that the covetous person shall scatter most liberally his beloved idol, wealth, and the rag'd person shall find a calm. Hamm.
RA'GED. adj. [from rag.]
1. Rent into tatters.
How like a prodigal,
The scarfed bark puts from her native bay,
Hugg'd and embraced by the trumpet wind;
How like the prodigal doth she return
With over-weather'd ribs and rag'd sails,
Lean, rent, and beggar'd by the trumpet wind. Shakefp.
As I go in this rag'd tattered coat, I am hunted away from the old woman's door by every barking cur. Arbutnot.
2. Uneven; consisting of parts almost disjointed.
The earl of Warwick's rag'd staff is yet to be seen pour-trayed in their church steeple. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.
That some whirlwind bear
Unto a rag'd, fearful, hanging rock,
And throw it thence into the raging sea. Shakefp.
The moon appears, when looked upon with a good glass, rude and rag'd. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
3. Dressed in tatters.
Since noble arts in Rome have no support,
And rag'd virtue not a friend at court. Dryden.
4. Ragged; not smooth.
The wolf would barter away a rag'd coat and a raw-boned carcass, for a smooth fat one. L'Estrange.
What shepherd owns those rag'd sheep? Dryden.
RA'G'DNESS. n. f. [from rag'd.] State of being dressed in tatters.
Poor naked wretches, where'er you are,
That bide the pelting of this pitiless storm!
How shall your houseless heads and unfed sides,
Your loop'd and window'd rag'dness defend you. Shakefp.
RA'G'INGLY. adv. [from raging.] With vehement fury.
RA'GMAN. n. f. [rag and man.] One who deals in rags.
RAGOUT. n. f. [French.] Meat stewed and highly seasoned.
To the stage permit
Ragouts for Tereus or Thyestes dress,
'Tis talk enough for thee to expose a Roman feast. Dryden.
No fish they reckon comparable to a ragout of snails. Add.
When art and nature join, th' effect will be
Some nice ragout, or charming fricafly. King's Cookery.
RA'GWORT. n. f. [rag and wort.] A plant.
Ragwort hath a radiated flower, the tube of which is almost of a cylindrical figure, and the seeds are fastened to a down; the leaves are deeply lacinated or jagged. Miller.
RA'GSTONE. n. f. [rag and stone.]
1. A stone so named from its breaking in a ragged, uncertain, irregular manner. Woodward on Fossils.
2. The stone with which they smooth the edge of a tool new ground and left ragged.
RAIL. n. f. [riegel, German.]
1. A cross beam fixed at the ends in two upright posts.
If you make another square, and also a tenant on each untenanted end of the files, and another mortise on the top and bottom rails, you may put them together. Moxon.
2. A series of posts connected with beams, by which any thing is inclosed: a pale is a series of small upright posts rising above the cross beam, by which they are connected: a rail is a series of cross beams supported with posts, which do not rise much above it.

RAI

A man, upon a high place without rails, is ready to fall. Bacon's Natural History.
A large square table for the commissioners, one side being sufficient for those of either party, and a rail for others which went round. Clarendon.
3. A kind of bird.
Of wild birds Cornwall hath quail, rail, partridge and pheasant. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.
4. [jangle, Saxon.] A woman's upper garment. This is preserved only in the word nightrail.
To RAIL. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To inclose with rails.
The hand is square, with four rounds at the corners; this should first have been planched over, and railed about with ballisters. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.
As the churchyard ought to be divided from other profane places, so it ought to be fenced in and railed.
Sir Roger has given a handsome pulpit-cloth, and railed in the communion-table. Addison's Spectator, N° 112.
2. To range in a line.
They were brought to London all railed in ropes, like a team of horses in a cart, and were executed some of them at London and Wapping, and the rest at divers places upon the sea coast. Bacon's Henry VII.
To RAIL. v. n. [railler, Fr. rallen, Dutch.] To use insolent and reproachful language; to speak to, or to mention in opprobrious terms.
Your husband is in his old luns again; he so rails against all married mankind, curies all Eve's daughters. Shakefp.
What a monstrous fellow art thou? thus to rail on one,
that is neither known of thee, nor knows thee. Shakefp.
'Till thou can't rail the seals from off my bond,
Thou but offend'st thy lungs to speak so loud. Shakefp.
He tript me behind; being down, insulted, rail'd,
And put upon him such a deal of man,
That worthied him. Shakefp. King Lear.
Of words cometh railings and evil furnishings. 1 Tim. vi.
Angels bring not railing accusation against them. 2 Pet. ii.
If any is angry, and rails at it, he may securely. Locke.
Thou art my blood, where Johnlon has no part;
Where did his wit on learning fix a brand,
And rail at arts he did not understand? Dryden.
Lest for ever on me rails,
To talk of me she never fails. Swift.
RAI'LER. n. f. [from rail.] One who insults or defames by opprobrious language.
If I build my felicity upon my reputation, I am as happy as long as the railer will give me leave. South's Sermons.
Let no presuming impious railer tax Creative wisdom. Thomson's Summer.
RAI'LER. n. f. [raillerie, Fr.] Slight satire; satirical merriment.
Let railery be without malice or heat. Benj. Johnson.
A quotation out of Hudibras shall make them treat with levity an obligation wherein their welfare is concerned as to this world and the next: railery of this nature is enough to make the hearer tremble. Addison's Freeholder, N° 6.
Studies employed on low objects; the very naming of them is almost sufficient to turn them into railery. Addison on Ancient Medals.
To these we are solicited by the arguments of the subtle, and the raileries of the prophane. Rogers's Sermons.
RAI'MENT. n. f. [for arraiment, from array.] Vesture; vestment; cloaths; dress; garment. A word now little used but in poetry.
His raiments, though mean, received handfomeneſs by the grace of the wearer. Sidney.
O Protheus, let this habit make thee blush!
Be thou asham'd, that I have took upon me
Such an immodest raiment. Shakefp.
Living, both food and raiment she supplies. Dryden.
To RAIN. v. n. [reiman, Saxon; regeren, Dutch.]
1. To fall in drops from the clouds.
Like a low-hung cloud, it rains so fast,
That all at once it falls. Dryden's Knight's Tale.
The wind is South-West, and the weather lowering, and like to rain. Locke.
2. To fall as rain.
The eye marvelleth at the whiteness thereof, and the heart is astonish'd at the raining of it. Ecclesi. xliii. 18.
They sat them down to weep; nor only tears
Rain'd at their eyes, but high winds rose within. Milton.
3. It RAINS. The water falls from the clouds.
That which serves for gain,
And follows but for form,
Will pack when it begins to rain,
And leave thee in the storm. Shakefp. King Lear.
To RAIN. v. a. To pour down as rain. Shak.
It rain'd down fortune, show'ring on your head. Rain

RAI

Rain sacrificial whips rings in his ear,
Make sacred even his stirrup. Shakefp. Timon of Athens.
Israel here had famish'd, had not God
Rain'd from heav'n manna. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ii.
RAIN. n. f. [jen, Saxon.] The moisture that falls from the clouds.
When shall we three meet again;
In thunder, lightning, or in rain. Shakefp.
With strange rains, hails, and showers were they perpe-cuted. Wisdom xvi. 16.
The loft clouds pour
Into the sea an useless show'r,
And the vex'd sailors curl the rain,
For which poor farmers pray'd in vain. Waller.
Rain is water by the heat of the sun divided into very small parts ascending in the air, till encountering the cold, it becomes condensed into clouds, and descends in drops. Ray.
RAINBOW. n. f. [rain and bow.] The iris; the femicircle of various colours which appears in showery weather.
Casting of the water in a most cunning manner, makes a perfect rainbow, not more pleasant to the eye than to the mind, so sensibly to see the proof of the heavenly iris. Sidney.
To add another hue unto the rainbow. Shakefp.
The rainbow is drawn like a nymph with large wings dispend in the form of a femicircle, the feathers of sundry colours. Peach.
They could not be ignorant of the promise of God never to drown the world, and the rainbow before their eyes to put them in mind of it. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
This rainbow never appears but where it rains in the sunshine, and may be made artificially by spouting up water, which may break aloft, and scatter into drops, and fall down like rain; for the sun, shining upon these drops, certainly causes the bow to appear to a spectator standing in a true position to the rain and sun: this bow is made by refraction of the sun's light in drops of falling rain. Newton's Opticks.
The dome's high arch reflects the mingled blaze,
And forms a rainbow of alternate rays. Pope.
RAINDEER. [pnanay, Saxon; rangifer, Latin.] A deer with large horns, which, in the northern regions, draws sledges through the snow.
RAININESS. n. f. [from rainy.] The state of being showery.
RAIN-WATER. n. f. [rain and water.] Water not taken from springs, but falling from the clouds.
Court holy water in a dry house, is better than the rainwater out o' doors. Shakefp. King Lear.
We took distilled rain-water. Boyle.
Rain-water is to be preferred before spring-water. Mort.
RAIN. adj. [from rain.] Showery; wet.
Our gayneſs and our gilt are all besmirch'd,
With rainy marching in the painful field. Shakefp. Hen. V.
A continual dropping in a very rainy day, and a contentious woman are alike. Prov. xxvii. 15.
To RAISE. v. a. [reſa, Swedish; reiser, Danish.]
1. To lift; to heave.
The elders went to raise him up from the earth. 2 Sam. xii.
Such a bulk as no twelve bards could raise Twelve starv'ling bards. Pope.
2. To set upright: as, he raised a mast.
3. To erect; to build up.
Take his carcass down from the tree, cast it at the entering of the gate, and raise thereon a heap of stones. Jof. viii.
4. To exalt to a state more great or illustrious.
Counsellors may manage affairs, which nevertheless are far from the ability to raise and amplify an estate. Bacon.
Thou so pleas'd,
Can't raise thy creature to what height thou wilt Of union. Milton.
5. To amplify; to enlarge.
That cyclops head of thine was first fram'd flesh,
To raise my fortunes. Shakefp. King Lear.
6. To increase in current value.
The plate-pieces of eight were raised three-pence in the piece. Temple's Miscellan. es.
7. To elevate; to exalt.
The Peritians gazing on the sun,
Admir'd how high 'twas plac'd, how bright it shone;
But as his pow'r was known, their thoughts were rais'd,
And soon they worship'd, what at first they prais'd. Prior.
8. To advance; to promote; to prefer.
This gentleman came to be raised to great titles. Clarend.
9. To excite; to put in action.
He raiseth the stormy wind. Psalms cvii. 28.
He might taint
Th' animal spirits, that from pure blood arise, Thence raise distemper'd thoughts. Milton.
Gods encountering gods, Jove encouraging them with his thunders, and Neptune raising his tempests. Pope.
10. To excite to war or tumult; to stir up.
He first rais'd head against usurping Richard. Shakefp.
They neither found me in the temple disputing with any man, neither raising up the people. Acts xxiv. 12.
Æneas then employs his pains
In parts remote to raise the Tufcan swains. Dryden.

sacrifices, were raised. Sandys's Journey.
These are spectres, the understanding raises to itself, to flatter its own laziness. Locke.
15. To bring from death to life.
He was delivered for our offences, and raised again for our justification. Romans iv. 25.
It is fown in dishonour, it is raised in glory; it is fown in weakness, it is raised in power. 1 Cor. xv. 23.
16. To occasion; to begin.
Raise not a false report. Exodus xxiii. 1.
The common ferryman of Egypt, that waited over the dead bodies from Memphis, was made by the Greeks to be the ferryman of hell, and solemn stories raised after him. Bro.
Wantonness and pride
Raise out of friendship hostile deeds in peace. Milton.
17. To set up; to utter loudly.
All gaze, and all admire, and raise a shouting sound. Dry.
Soon as the prince appears, they raise a cry. Dryden.
18. To collect; to obtain a certain sum.
Britain, once despis'd, can raise
As ample sums, as Rome in Cæsar's days. Arbutnot.
I should not thus be bound,
If I had means, and could but raise five pound. Gay.
19. To collect; to assemble; to levy.
He out of smallest things could without end
Have rais'd incessant armies. Milton.
20. To give rise to.
Higher argument
Remains, sufficient of itself to raise
That name, unless years damp my wing. Milton.
21. To RAISE PASTE. To form paste into pies without a dish.
Miss Liddy can dance a jig, and raise paste. Spectator.
RAI'SER. n. f. [from raise.] He that raises.
Then shall stand up in his estate a raiser of taxes. Dan. xi.
They that are the first raisers of their houses, are most indulgent towards their children. Bacon.
He that boasts of his ancestors, the founders and raisers of a family, doth confess that he hath less virtue. Taylor.
Raiser of human kind! by nature cast,
Naked and helpless. Thomson's Autumn.
RAI'SIN. n. f. [racemus, Lat. raisin, Fr.]
Raisins are the fruit of the vine suffered to remain on the tree till perfectly ripened, and then dried either by the sun or the heat of an oven: grapes of every kind, preserved in this manner, are called raisins, but those dried in the sun are much sweeter and pleasanter than those dried in ovens; they are called jar raisins, from their being imported in earthen jars: the finest are the fruit of the vitis Damascena. Hill's Materia Med.
Dried grapes or raisins, boiled in a convenient proportion of water, make a sweet liquor, which, being betimes distilled, afford an oil and spirit much like the raisins themselves. Boyle.
RAKE. n. f. [rastrum, Lat. pace, Sax. racche, Dutch.]
1. An instrument with teeth, by which the ground is divided, or light bodies are gathered up.
At Midsummer down with the brembles and brakes,
And after abroad with thy forks and thy rakes. Tusser.
O that thy bounteous deity wou'd please
To guide my rake upon the chinking found
Of some vast treasure hidden under ground. Dryden.
He examines his face in the stream, combs his rufal locks with a rake. Garth.
2. [Racaille, Fr. the low rabble; or rekel, Dutch, a worthless cur dog.] A loose, disorderly, vicious, wild, gay, thoughtless fellow; a man addicted to pleasure.
The next came with her son, who was the greatest rake in the place, but so much the mother's darling, that she left her husband for the sake of this graceless youth. Addison.
Rakes hate sober grave gentlewomen.
Men, some to bus'ness, some to pleasure take;
But ev'ry woman is at heart a rake. Pope.
The fire saw smiling his own virtues wake;
The mother begg'd the blessing of a rake. Pope.
To RAKE. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To gather with a rake.
Mow barlie, and rake it, and set it on cocks. Tusser.
Harrow iron teeth shall every where Rake helmets up. May's Virgil's Georgicks.

R A L

If it be such a precious jewel as the world takes it for, yet they are forced to rake it out of dunghills; and accordingly the apottle gives it a value suitable to its extract. South.
 2. To clear with a rake.
 As they rake the green appearing ground,
 The ruffet hay-cock rises. Thomson.
 3. To draw together by violence.
 An eager desire to rake together whatsoever might prejudice or any way hinder the credit of apocryphal books, hath caused the collector's pen so to run as it were on wheels, that the mind, which should guide it, had no leisure to think. Hooker, b. v. f. 20.

What piles of wealth hath he accumulated!
 How, i' th' name of thrift,
 Does he rake this together. Shakespeare, Henry VIII.
 A sport more formidable
 Had rak'd together village rabble. Hudibras, p. i.
 Ill-gotten goods are squandered away with as little conscience as they were raked together. L'Estrange.
 4. To scour; to search with eager and vehement diligence.
 The statesman rakes the town to find a plot. Swift.
 5. To heap together and cover.
 Here i' th' sands
 They'll rake up, the post unfancied
 Of murth'rous lechers. Shakespeare, King Lear.
 The blazing wood may to the eye seem great,
 But 'tis the fire rak'd up that has the heat,
 And keeps it long. Suckling.

TO RAKE. v. n.
 1. To search; to grope. It has always an idea of coarseness or noisiness.
 If you hide the crown
 Ev'n in your hearts, there will he rake for it. Shakespeare.
 It is as offensive, as to rake into a dunghill. South.
 Another finds the way to dye in grain;
 Or for the golden ore in rivers rakes,
 Then melts the mafs. Dryden's Persius.
 One is for raking in Chaucer for antiquated words, which are never to be reviv'd, but when found or significance is wanting. Dryden.
 After having made essays into it, as they do for coal in England, they rake into the most promising parts. Addison.

2. To pass with violence.
 When Pas hand reached him to take,
 The fox on knees and elbows tumbled down:
 Pas could not stay, but over him did rake,
 And crown'd the earth with his first touching crown. Sidn.
 The Belgians tack upon our rear,
 And raking chafe-guns through our sterns they fend. Dryd.
 RA'KER. n. f. [from rake.] One that rakes.
 RA'KEHEL. n. f. [of this word the etymology is doubtful: as it is now written, it is apparently derived from rake and hell, and may aptly represent a wretch whose life is passed in places of lewdness and wickedness: Skinner derives it from racaille, French, the rabble; Junius, from rekel, Dutch, a mongrel dog.] A wild, worthless, dissolute, debauched, sorry fellow.
 Out of the fric of these rakehell horse-boys, growing up in knavery and villainy, are their kern supplied. Spenser.
 The king, when he heard of Perkins's siege of Exeter, laid in sport, that the king of rakebells was landed in the West, and that he hoped now to see him. Bacon.
 A rakehell of the town, whose character is set off with excessive prodigality, prophaneness, intemperance and lust, is rewarded with a lady of great fortune to repair his own, which his vices had almost ruined. Swift.

RA'KEHELLY. adv. [from rakehell.] Wild; dissolute.
 I scorn the rakehell rout of our ragged rhimers, which without learning boast, without judgment jangle, and without reason rage and foam. Spenser's Pastorals.
 No breaking of windows or glasses for spight,
 And spoiling the goods for a rakehell prank. Benj. Johnson.
 RA'KISH. adj. [from rake.] Loose; lewd; dissolute.
 There seldom can be peculiarity in the love of a rakish heart. Clarissa.

TO RA'LLY. v. a. [rallier, Fr.]
 1. To put disordered or dispersed forces into order.
 With rallied arms to try what may be yet Regain'd in heav'n. Milton.
 Publick arguing serves to whet the wits of hereticks, and by shewing weak parts of their doctrines, prompts them to rally all their sophistry to fortify them with fallacy. D. of Pie.
 Luther deters men from solitariness; but he does not mean from a sober solitude, that rallies our scattered strengths, and prepares us against any new encounters from without. Atterb.

2. [Rallier, Fr.] To treat with slight contempt; to treat with satirical merriment.
 Honeycomb has not lived a month, for these forty years, out of the smoke of London, and rallies me upon a country life. Addison's Spectator.
 If after the reading of this letter, you find yourself in a humour rather to rally and ridicule, than to comfort me, I desire you would throw it into the fire. Addison.

R A M

Strephon had long confes'd his am'rous pain;
 Which gay Corinna rally'd with disdain. Gay.
 TO RA'LLY. v. n.

1. To come together in a hurry.
 If God should shew this perverse man a new heaven and a new earth, springing out of nothing, he might say, that innumerable parts of matter chanced just then to rally together, and to form themselves into this new world. Tillotson.
 2. To come again into order.
 The Grecians rally, and their pow'rs unite;
 With fury charge us. Dryden's Æneis.

3. To exercise satirical merriment.
 RAM. n. f. [ram, Saxon; ram, Dutch.]
 1. A male sheep; in some provinces, a tup.
 The ewes, being rank, turned to the rams. Shakespeare.
 An old sheep-whistling rogue, a ram tender. Shakespeare.
 You may draw the bones of a ram's head hung with strings of beads and ribbands. Peascham on Drawing.
 A ram their off'ring, and a ram their meat. Dryden.
 The ram, having pass'd the sea, serenely shines,
 And leads the year. Creuch's Manilius.

2. An instrument with an iron head to batter walls.
 Antony,
 Let not the piece of virtue, which is set
 As the cement of our love,
 To keep it builded, be the ram to batter
 The fortrefs of it. Shakespeare, Antony and Cleopatra.
 Judas calling upon the Lord, who without any rams or engines of war did cast down Jericho, gave a fierce assault against the walls. 2 Mac. xii. 15.

TO RAM. v. a. [from the noun.]
 1. To drive with violence, as with a battering ram.
 Ram thou thy faithful tidings in mine ears,
 That long thou have been barren. Shakespeare.
 Having no artillery nor engines, and finding that he could do no good by ramming with logs of timber, he set one of the gates on fire. Bacon's Henry VII.
 The charge with bullet, or paper wet and hard stopp'd, or with powder alone rammed in hard, maketh no great difference in the loudness of the report. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
 A mariner loading his gun, while he was ramming in a cartridge, the powder took fire. Wiseham's Surgery.
 Here many poor people roll in vast balls of snow, which they ram together, and cover from the sun shine. Addison.
 A ditch drawn between two parallel furrows, was filled with some found materials, and rammed to make the foundation solid. Arbutnot on Coins.

2. To fill with any thing driven hard together.
 As when that devilish iron engine wrought
 In deepest hell, and fram'd by furies skill,
 With windy nitre and quick sulphur freight,
 And ramm'd with bullet round ordain'd to kill. Fa. Queen.
 He that proves the king,
 To him will we prove loyal; till that time,
 Have we ramm'd up our gates against the world. Shakespeare.
 They mined the walls, laid the powder, and rammed the mouth, but the citizens made a countermine. Hayward.
 This into hollow engines, long and round,
 Thick ramm'd, at th' other bore with touch of fire
 Dilated and infuriate, shall send forth
 Such implements of mischief, as shall dash
 To pieces. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. vi.
 Leave a convenient space behind the wall to ram in clay. Mortimer's Husbandry.

TO RAMBLE. v. n. [rammelen, Dutch, to rove loosely and irregularly; to wander.]
 Shame contracts the spirits, fixes the ramblings of fancy, and gathers the man into himself. South.
 He that is at liberty to ramble in perfect darkness, what is his liberty better than if driven up and down as a bubble by the wind. Locke.
 Chapman has taken advantage of an immeasurable length of verse, notwithstanding which, there is scarce any paraphrase to loose and rambling as his. Pope.
 Never ask leave to go abroad, for you will be thought an idle rambling fellow. Swift's Directions to Postmen.
 O'er his ample sides the rambling sprays Luxuriant shoot. Thomson's Spring.

RA'MBLE. n. f. [from the verb.] Wandering irregular excursion.

Milton.
 Men, from the qualities they find united in them, and wherein they observe several individuals to agree, range them into forts for the convenience of comprehensive signs. Locke.
 A certain form and order, in which we have long accustomed ourselves to range our ideas, may be best for us now, though not originally best in itself.
Watts.
 2. To rove over.
 To the copse thy lesser spaniel take,
 Teach him to range the ditch and force the brake.
Gay.
 To RANGE. v. n.
 1. To rove at large.
 Caesar's spirit ranging for revenge,
 With Ate by his side come hot from hell,
 Shall in these confines, with a monarch's voice,
 Cry havoc, and let slip the dogs of war.
Shakefp.
 'Tis better to be lowly born,
 And range with humble livers in content,
 Than to be perk'd up in a glistering grief,
 And wear a golden sorrow.
Shakefp. Henry VIII.
 I saw him in the battle range about;
 And watch'd him, how he singled Clifford forth. Shakefp.
 As a roaring lion and a ranging bear; so is a wicked ruler over the poor people.
Prov. xxviii. 15.
 Other animals unactive range,
 And of their doings God takes no account.
Milton.
 Thanks to my stars, I have not rang'd about
 The wilds of life, e're I could find a friend.
Addison.
 2. To be placed in order.
 That is the way to lay the city flat,
 To bring the roof to the foundation,
 And bury all which yet distinctly ranges
 In heaps of ruin.
Shakefp. Coriolanus.
RANGE. n. f. [rangee, Fr. from the verb.]
 1. A rank; any thing placed in a line.
 You fled
 From that great face of war, whose several ranges
 Frighted each other.
Shakefp. Antony and Cleopatra.
 The light, which passed through its several interstices, painted so many ranges of colours, which were parallel and contiguous, and without any mixture of white.
Newton.
 From this walk you have a full view of a huge range of mountains, that lie in the country of the Grifons.
Addison.
 These ranges of barren mountains, by condensing the vapours and producing rains, fountains and rivers, give the very plains that fertility they boast of.
Bentley's Sermons.
 2. A class; an order.
 The next range of beings above him are the immaterial intelligences, the next below him is the sensible nature. Hale.
 3. Excursion; wandering.
 He may take a range all the world over, and draw in all that wide circumference of sin and vice, and center it in his own breast.
South's Sermons.
 4. Room for excursion.
 A man has not enough range of thought, to look out for any good which does not relate to his own interest. Addison.
 5. Compass taken in by any thing excursive, extended, or ranked in order.
 Far as creation's ample range extends,
 The scale of sensual mental pow'rs ascends.
Pope.
 Judge we by nature? habit can efface;
 Affections? they still take a wider range.
Pope.
 6. Step of a ladder.
 The liturgy, practised in England, would kindle that jealousy, as the prologue to that design, and as the first range of that ladder, which should serve to mount over all their customs.
Clarendon.

R A N

7. A kitchen grate.
 Its door forth right to him did open,
 Therein an hundred ranges were nigh,
 And hundred furnaces all burning bright.
Fairy Queen.
 It was a vault ybuilt for great dispende,
 With many ranges rear'd along the wall,
 And one great chimney.
Fairy Queen.
 The buttry must be visible, and we need for our ranges, a more spacious and luminous kitchen. Watts's Architect.
 The implements of the kitchen are spits, ranges, coblons and pots. Bacon's Physical Remains.
 He was bid at his first coming to take off the range, and let down the cinders. L'Estrange.
RANGER. n. f. [from range.]
 1. One that ranges; a rover; a robber.
 They walk not widely, as they were wont,
 For fear of rangers and the great hoont,
 But privily pralling to and fro. Spenser's Pastorals.
 Come, says the ranger, here's neither honour nor money to be got by staying.
 2. A dog that beats the ground.
 Let your obsequious ranger search around,
 Nor will the roving spy direct in vain,
 But numerous coveys gratify thy pain. Gay's Rural Sports.
 3. An officer who tends the game of a forest.
 Their father Tyrreus did his fodder bring,
 Tyrreus chief ranger to the Latian king.
Dryden.
RANK. adj. [from range.]
 1. High growing; strong; luxuriant.
 Down with the grass,
 That groweth in shadow so ranke and so stout.
Tupper.
 Is not thilk fame gotheard proud,
 That sits in yonder bank,
 Whose straying heard themselves shrowde
 Among the bushes rank.
Spenser.
 Who would be out, being before his beloved mistress?
 —That should you, if I were your mistress, or I should think my honesty ranker than my wit.
Shakefp.
 In which disguise,
 While other jests are something rank on foot,
 Her father hath commanded her to slip Away with Slender. Shakefp. Merry Wives of Windsor.
 Seven ears came up upon one stalk, rank and good. Gen.
 They fancy that the difference lies in the manner of ap-pulte, one being made by a fuller or ranker appulte than the other. Holder's Elements of Speech.
 The most plentiful season, that gives birth to the finest flowers, produces also the rankest weeds.
Addison.
 2. Fruitful; bearing strong plants.
 Seven thousand broad-tail'd sheep graz'd on his downs;
 Three thousand camels his rank pastures fed.
Sandys.
 Where land is rank, 'tis not good to sow wheat after a fallow. Mortimer's Husbandry.
 3. [Rancidus, Lat.] Strong scented; rancid.
 Rank smelling rue, and cummin good for eyes. Spenser.
 In their thick breaths,
 Rank of gross diet, shall we be enclouded,
 And forc'd to drink their vapour. Shakefp. Cymbeline.
 The ewes, being rank,
 In the end of Autumn turned to the rams.
Shakefp.
 The drying marthes such a stench convey,
 Such the rank steams of reeking Albula. Addison.
 Hircina, rank with sweat, perfumes
 To censure Phillis for perfumes. Swift's Miscellanies.
 4. High tasted; strong in quality.
 Such animals as feed upon flesh, because such kind of food is high and rank, qualify it; the one by swallowing the hair of the beasts they prey upon, the other by devouring some part of the feathers of the birds they gorge themselves with.
Ray on the Creation.
 Divers sea fowl taste rank of the fish on which they feed. Boyl.
 5. Rampant; highgrown.
 For you, most wicked Sir, whom to call brother
 Would infect my mouth, I do forgive Thy rankest faults. Shakefp. Temp.
 This Epiphanius cries out upon as rank idolatry, and the device of the devil, who always brought in idolatry under fair pretences. Stillington's Def. of Discourse on Roman Idol.
 'Tis pride, rank pride, and haughtiness of soul,
 The Romans call it stoicism. Addison's Cato.
 6. Gross; coarse.
 My wife's a hobby-horse, deserves name
 As rank as any flax-wench, that puts to Before her troth-plight. Shakefp. Winter's Tale.
 This power of the people in Athens, claimed as the undoubted privilege of an Athenian born, was the rankest encroachment and the grossest degeneracy from the loim Solon left. Swift.
 7. The iron of a plane is set rank, when its edge stands so flat below the sole of the plane, that in working it will take off a thick shaving. Mason's Mechanical Exercises.
 RANK.

R A N

RANK. n. f. [rang, Fr.]
 1. Line of men placed a-breast.
 Fierce fiery warriors fight upon the clouds,
 In *rank*s, and squadrons, and right form of war,
 Which drizzled blood upon the capitol. Shakefp.
 I have seen the cannon,
 When it hath blown his *rank*s into the air. Shakefp.
 Is't not pity,
 That we, the sons and children of this ile,
 Fill up her enemies *rank*s? Shakefp. King John.
 If you have a station in the file,
 And not in the worst rank of manhood, say it. Shakefp.
 2. A row.
 West of this place down in the neighbour bottom,
 The rank of officers, by the murmuring stream,
 Left on your right hand brings you to the place. Shakefp.
 A sylvan scene, and as the *rank*s ascend
 Shade above shade, a woody theatre. Milton.
 If the walk, in even *rank*s they stand,
 Like some well-marshall'd and obsequious band. Waller.
 He could through *rank*s of ruin go,
 With storms above and rocks below. Dryden's Horace.
 3. Range of subordination.
 The wisdom and goodness of the maker plainly appears in the parts of this stupendous fabrick, and the several degrees and *rank*s of creatures in it. Locke.
 4. Class; order.
 The enchanting power of prosperity over private persons is remarkable in relation to great kingdoms, where all *rank*s and orders of men, being equally concerned in publick blefsings, equally join in spreading the infection. Atterbury.
 5. Degree of dignity.
 Her charms have made me man, her ravish'd love
 In rank shall place me with the blest above. Dryden.
 These all are virtues of a meaner rank,
 Perfections that are plac'd in bones and nerves. Addison.
 Lepidus's house, which in his consulate was the finest in Rome, within thirty-five years was not in the hundredth rank. Arbutnot on Coins.
 6. Dignity; high place: as, he is a man of rank.
 To RANK. v. a. [ranger, Fr. from the noun.]
 1. To place a-breast.
 In view stood rank'd of seraphim another row. Milton.
 2. To range in any particular class.
 If four wee delights in fellow-ship,
 And needily will be rank'd with other griefs;
 Why follow'd not, when the said Tybalt's dead,
 Thy father or thy mother. Shakefp.
 He was a man
 Of an unbounded stomach, ever ranking
 Himself with princes. Shakefp. Henry VIII.
 Hereby is ranked with idolatry and witchcraft.
Decay of Piety.
 I have ranked this diversion of christian practice among the effects of our contentions. Decay of Piety.
 Poets were ranked in the class of philosophers, and the ancients made use of them as preceptors in music and morality. Broom's Notes on the Odyssey.
 3. To arrange methodically.
 Who now shall rear you to the sun, or rank
 Your tribes. Milton.
 Ranking all things under general and special heads, renders the nature or uses of a thing more easy to be found out, when we seek in what rank of beings it lies. Watts's Logic.
 To RANK. v. n. To be ranged; to be placed.
 Let that one article rank with the rest;
 And thereupon give me your daughter. Shakefp.
 From straggling mountaineers, for publick good,
 To rank in tribes, and quit the savage wood. Tate.
 To RANKLE. v. n. [from rank.]
 To fester; to breed corruption; to be inflamed in body or mind.
 As when two boars with rankling malice met,
 Their gory sides fresh bleeding fiercely fret. Fa. Queen.
 I little smart did feel;
 But soon it fore increased,
 And now it rankleth more and more,
 And inwardly it festereth fore. Spenser's Pastorals.
 The grief thereof him wondrous sore diseased,
 Ne might his rankling pain with patience be appeased. Fairy Queen.
 That fresh bleeding wound
 Whilome doth rankle in my riven breast. Fairy Queen.
 Beware of yonder dog;
 Look, when he fawns, he bites; and, when he bites,
 His venom tooth will rankle to the death. Shakefp.
 The storm of his own rage the fool confounds,
 And envy's rankling sting th' imprudent wounds.
 Thou shalt feel, enrag'd with inward pains,
 The hydra's venom rankling in thy veins. Sandys.
 I have endur'd the rage of secret grief,
 A malady that burns and rankles inward.
 On the rank'd soul the fury falls. Addison.
 Rowe.
 Thomson.

R A N

RANKLY. adv. [from rank.] Coarsely; grossly.
 'Tis given out, that, sleeping in my garden,
 A serpent stung me: so the whole ear of Denmark
 Is, by a forged process of my death, Rankly abus'd. Shakefp. Hamlet.
RANKNESS. n. f. [from rank.] Exuberance; superfluity of growth.
 It bringeth forth abundantly, through too much rankness, things less profitable, whereby that which principally it should yield, being either prevented in place, or defrauded of nourishment, faileth. Hooker, b. v. f. iii.
 Begin you to grow upon me; I will phylick your rank- ness. Shakefp. As You Like it.
 Among the crowd i' th' abbey, where a finger
 Could not be wedg'd in more; I am stifled
 With the mere rankness of their joy. Shakefp. Hen. VIII.
 We'll like a bated and retired flood,
 Leaving our rankness and irregular course,
 Stoop low within those bounds, we have o'erlook'd. Shak.
 The crane's pride is in the rankness of her wing. L'Estr.
 He the stubborn foil manur'd,
 With rules of husbandry the rankness cur'd;
 Tam'd us to manners. Dryden.
RANNY. n. f. The shrewmouse.
 The mus araneus, the shrewmouse or ranny. Brown.
 To RANSACK. v. a. [nan, Saxon, and faka, Swedish, to search for or seize.]
 1. To plunder; to pillage.
 A covetous spirit,
 Warily awaited day and night,
 From other covetous fiends it to defend,
 Who it to rob and ransack did intend. Fairy Queen.
 Their vow is made to ransack Troy. Shakefp.
 Men by his suggestion taught,
Ransack'd the centre, and with impious hands
 Rifled the bowels of the earth.
 The ransack'd city, taken by our toils,
 We left, and hither brought the golden spoils. Dryden.
 The spoils which they from ransack'd houses brought,
 And golden bowls from burning altars caught. Dryden.
 2. To search narrowly.
 I ransack the several caverns, and search into the store-houses of water, to find out where that mighty mass of water, which overflowed the earth, is bestowed. Woodward.
 3. To violate; to deflower.
 With greedy force he 'gan the fort assail,
 Wherof he weened possessed soon to be,
 And with rich spoil of ransacked chastity. Fairy Queen.
RANSOME. n. f. [ranson, Fr.] Price paid for redemption from captivity or punishment.
 By his captivity in Austria, and the heavy ransom that he paid for his liberty, Richard was hindered to pursue the conquest of Ireland. Davies on Ireland.
 Ere the third dawning light
 Return, the stars of morn shall see him rise,
 The ransom paid, which man from death redeemes,
 His death for man. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xii.
 Has the prince lost his army or his liberty?
 Tell me what province they demand for ransom. Denham.
 This as a ransom Albemarle did pay,
 For all the glories of so great a life. Dryden.
 To adore that great mystery of divine love, God's sending his only son into this world to save sinners, and to give his life a ransom for them, would be noble exercise for the pens of the greatest wits. Tillotson's Sermons.
 Th' avenging pow'r
 Thus will persist, relentless in his ire,
 Till the fair slave be render'd to her fire,
 And ransom free restor'd to his abode. Dryden.
 To RANSOME. v. a. [ransonner, Fr.] To redeem from captivity or punishment.
 How is't with Titus Lartius?
 —Condemning some to death and some to exile,
Ransoming him, or pitying, threatening the other. Shakefp.
 I will ransom them from the grave, and redeem them from death. Hosea xiii. 14.
 He'll dying rise, and rising with him raise
 His brethren, ransom'd with his own dear life. Milton.
RANSOMELESS. adj. [from ransome.] Free from ranfome.
Ransomeless here we let our prisoners free. Shakefp.
 Deliver him
 Up to his pleasure ransomeless and free. Shakefp.
 To RANT. v. n. [randen, Dutch, to rave.] To rave in violent or high sounding language without proportionable dignity of thought.
 Look where my ranting host of the garter comes; there is either liquor in his pate, or money in his purse, when he looks so merrily. Shakefp. Merry Wives of Windsor.
 Nay, an thoult mouth, I'll rant as well as thou. Shak.
 They have attacked me; some with piteous moans, others grinning and only shewing their teeth, others ranting and hectoring, others scolding and reviling. Stillington's RANT.

RAP

RANT. n. f. [from the verb.] High sounding language unsupported by dignity of thought.

Dryden himself, to please a frantick age,
Was forc'd to let his judgment stoop to rage,
To a wild audience he conform'd his voice,
Comply'd to custom, but not err'd through choice;
Deem then the people's, not the writer's sin,
Almanzor's rage, and rants of Maximin. Granville.
This is a floical rant, without any foundation in the nature of man or reason of things. Atterbury's Preface.

RANTER. n. f. [from rant.] A ranting fellow.
RANTIPOLE. adj. [this word is wantonly formed from rant.]
Wild; roving; rakish. A low word.

What at years of discretion, and comport yourself at this rantipole rate! Congreve's Way of the World.
RANTIPOLE. v. n. To run about wildly. It is a low word.
The eldest was a termagant imperious wench; she used to rantipole about the house, pinch the children, kick the servants, and torture the cats and dogs. Arbutnot.

RANULA. n. f. [Latin.]
Ranula is a sort swelling, possessing those salivary under the tongue: it is made by congestion, and its progress filleth up the space between the jaws, and maketh a tumour externally under the chin. Wijeman's Surgery.

RANUNCULUS. n. f. Crowfoot.
Ranunculuses excel all flowers in the richness of their colours: of them there is a great variety. Mortimer.
To RAP. v. n. [hæppan, Saxon.] To strike with a quick smart blow.

Knock me at this gate
And rap me well, or I'll knock your knave's pate. Shakefp.
With one great peal they rap the door,
Like footmen on a visiting day. Prior.
He was provoked in the spirit of magistracy, upon discovering a judge, who rapped out a great oath at his footman.
Addison.

To RAP. v. a. [from rapio extra sc. Lat.]
1. To affect with rapture; to strike with extasy; to hurry out of himself.

These are speeches of men, not comforted with the hope of that they desire, but rapped with admiration at the view of enjoyed bliss. Hooker.

Beholding the face of God, in admiration of so great excellency, they all adore him; and being rapt with the love of his beauty, they cleave inseparably for ever unto him. Hook.

What, thus raps you? are you well? Shakefp.
The government I cast upon my brother,
And to my fate grew stranger, being transported
And rapt in secret studies. Shakefp.

You're rapt in some work, some dedication
To the great lord. Shakefp. Timon of Athens.

I'm rapt with joy to see my Marcia's tears. Addis. Cato.
It is impossible duly to consider these things, without being rapt into admiration of the infinite wisdom of the divine architect. Cheyne's Philosophical Principles.

Rapt into future times, the bard begun,
A virgin shall conceive, a virgin bear a son!
Let heav'n seize it, all at once 'tis fir'd,
Not touch'd, but rapt; not waken'd, but inspir'd. Pope.

2. To snatch away.
He leaves the welkin way most beaten plain,
And rapt with whirling wheels, inflames the skyen,
With fire not made to burn, but fairly for to thynce. F. 2.
Underneath a bright sea flow'd
Of Jasper, or of liquid pearl, whereon
Who after came from earth, sailing arriv'd
Wafted by angels, or flew o'er the lake
Rap'd in a chariot drawn by fiery steeds. Milton.

Standing on earth, not rapt above the pole. Milton.
To RAP and rend. [more properly rap and ran; næpan, Saxon, to bind, and rapa, Islandick, to plunder.] To seize by violence.

Their husbands robb'd, and made hard shifts
T' administer unto their gifts
All they could rap and rend and pilfer,
To scraps and ends of gold and silver. Hudibras, p. ii.

RAP. n. f. [from the verb.] A quick smart blow.
How comest thou to go with thy arm tied up? has old Lewis given thee a rap over thy fingers ends? Arbutnot.

RAPACIOUS. adj. [rapace, Fr. rapax, Lat.] Given to plunder; seizing by violence.
Well may thy Lord, appeas'd,
Redeem thee quite from death's rapacious claim. Milton.

Soon heighten'd by the diamond's circling rays,
On that rapacious hand for ever blaze? Pope.

RAPACIOUSLY. adv. [from rapacious.] By rapine; by violent robbery.

RAPACIOUSNESS. n. f. [from rapacious.] The quality of being rapacious.

RAPACITY. n. f. [rapacitas, Lat. rapacitas, Fr. from rapax.]
Addictedness to plunder; exercise of plunder; ravenousness.

RAP

Any of these, without regarding the pains of churchmen, grudge them those small remains of ancient piety, which the rapacity of some ages has scarce left to the church. Sprat.

RAPÉ. n. f. [rapt, Fr. raptus, Latin.]
1. Violent deformation of chastity.

You are both decypher'd
For villains mark'd with rape. Shakefp. Titus Andronicus.
Rape call you it, to seize my own,
My true betroth'd love. Shakefp. Titus Andronicus.

The parliament conceived, that the obtaining of women by force into possession, howsoever afterwards assent might follow by allurements, was but a rape drawn forth in length, because the first force drew on all the rest. Bacon's Henry VII.

Witness that night
In Gibeah, when the hospitable door
Expos'd a matron, to avoid worse rape. Milton.

The haughty fair,
Who not the rape ev'n of a god could bear.
Tell Thracian tyrant's alter'd shape,
And dire revenge of Philomela's rape. Dryden.

2. Privation; act of taking away.
Pear grew after pear,
Fig after fig came; time made never rape
Of any dainty there. Chapman's Odyssey.

3. Something snatched away.
Sad widows by thee rifled, weep in vain,
And ruin'd orphans of thy rapes complain. Sandys.

Where now are all my hopes? oh never more Shall they revive! nor death her rapes restore! Sandys.

4. The juice of grapes is drawn as well from the rape, or whole grapes pluck'd from the cluster, and wine pour'd upon them in a vessel, as from a vat, where they are bruised. Rap.

5. A plant, from the seed of which oil is expressed.
RAPID. adj. [rapidus, Fr. rapidus, Lat.] Quick; swift.
Part shun the goal with rapid wheels. Milton.

While you so smoothly turn and rowl our sphere,
That rapid motion does but rest appear. Dryden.

RAPIDITY. n. f. [rapiditas, Fr. rapiditas, Lat.]
Celerity; velocity; swiftness.

Where the words are not monosyllables, we make them so by our rapidity of pronunciation. Addison's Spectator.

RAPIDLY. adv. [from rapid.] Swiftly; with quick motion.

RAPIDNESS. n. f. [from rapid.] Celerity; swiftness.

RAPIER. n. f. [rapier, Fr. so called from the quickness of its motion.] A small sword used only in thrusting.

I will turn thy falsehood to thy heart,
Where it was forged, with my rapier's point. Shakefp.
A soldier of far inferior strength may manage a rapier or fire-arms so expertly, as to be an overmatch for his adversary. Pope's Essay on Homer's Battles.

RAPIER-FISH. n. f.
The rapier-fish, called xiphias, grows sometimes to the length of five yards: the sword, which grows level from the snout of the fish, is here about a yard long, at the basis four inches over, two-edged, and pointed exactly like a rapier:
he preys on fishes, having first stabbed them with this sword. Grew's Museum.

RAPINE. n. f. [rapina, Lat. rapine, Fr.]
1. The act of plundering.

If the poverty of Scotland might, yet the plenty of England cannot, excuse the envy and rapine of the church's rights. King Charles.

The logic of a conquering sword may silence, but convince it cannot; its efficacy rather breeds aversion and abhor-rence of that religion, whose first address is in blood and rapine. Decay of Piety.

2. Violence; force.
Her least action overaw'd
His malice, and with rapine sweet bereav'd
His fierceness of its fierce intent. Milton.

RAPPER. n. f. [from rap.] One who strikes.

RAPPORT. n. f. [rappat, Fr.] Relation; reference; proportion. A word introduced by the innovator, Temple, but not copied by others.

'Tis obvious what rapport there is between the conceptions and languages in every country, and how great a difference this must make in the excellence of books. Temple.

To RAPT. v. n. [this word is used by Chapman for rap improperly, as appears from the participle, which from rapt would be not rapt, but rapted.] To ravish; to put in ecstacy.

You may safe approve,
How strong in infatigation to their love
Their raptures tunes are. Chapman's Odyssey.

RAPT. n. f. [from rap.] A trance; an ecstacy.

RAPTURE. n. f.
1. Ecstacy; transport; violence of any pleasing passion; enthusiasm; uncommon heat of imagination.

Musick, when thus applied, raises in the mind of the hearer great conceptions; it strengthens devotion, and advances praise into rapture. Addison's Spectator, N° 406.

You grow correct, that once with rapture writ. Pope.

RAR

2. Rapidity; haste.

The wat'ry throng,
Wave rowling after wave, where way they found,
If steep, with torrent rapture; if through plain Soft-ebbing; nor withstood them rock or hill. Milton.

RAPTURED. adj. [from rapture.] Ravished; transported.
A bad word.

He drew
Such madning draughts of beauty to the soul,
As for a while cancell'd his raptur'd thought
With luxury too daring. Thomson's Summer.

RAPTUROUS. adj. [from rapture.] Ecstasick; transporting.
Are the pleasures of it so inviting and rapturous? is a man bound to look out sharp to plague himself? Collier.

RARE. adj. [rarus, Lat. rare, Fr. in all the senses but the last.]

1. Scarce; uncommon.
Live to be tie-flew, and gaze o' th' time;
We'll have you, as our rarer monsters are,
Painted upon a pole. Shakefp.

2. Excellent; incomparable; valuable to a degree seldom found.
This jealousy
Is for a precious creature; as she's rare,
Must it be great; and as his person's mighty,
Must it be violent. Shakefp. Winter's Tale.

On which was wrought the gods and giants fight,
Rare work, all fill'd with terror and delight.
Above the rest I judge one beauty rare. Dryden.

3. Thinly scattered.
The cattle in the fields and meadows green
Those rare and solitary, these in flocks
Pasturing at once, and in broad herds upspring. Milton.

4. Thin; subtle; not dense.
They are of so tender and weak a nature, as they affect only such a rare and attenuate substance, as the spirit of living creatures. Bacon's Natural History.

So eagerly the fiend
O'er bog or steep, through strait, rough, dense, or rare,
With head, hands, wings, or feet, pursues his way. Mil.
The dense and bright light of the circle will obscure the rare and weak light of these dark colours round about it, and render them almost insensible. Newton's Opticks.

Bodies are much more rare and porous than is commonly believed: water is nineteen times lighter, and by consequence nineteen times rarer than gold, and gold is so rare, as very readily, and without the least opposition, to transmit the magnetic effluvia, and easily to admit quicksilver into its pores, and to let water pass through it. Newton's Opticks.

5. Raw; not fully subdued by the fire. This is often pronounced rare.

New-laid eggs, with Baucis' busy care,
Turn'd by a gentle fire, and roasted rare. Dryden.

RARESHOW. n. f. [this word is formed in imitation of the foreign way of pronouncing rare show.] A show carried in a box.

The fashions of the town affect us just like a rareshow, we have the curiosity to peep at them, and nothing more. Pope.

Of rareshow he sung, and Punch's feats. Gay.
RAREFACTION. n. f. [rarefactio, Fr. from rarefy.] Extension of the parts of a body, that makes it take up more room than it did before; contrary to condensation.

The water within being rarefied, and by rarefaction resolved into wind, will force up the smoke. Wotton's Architecture.

When exhalations, shut up in the caverns of the earth by rarefaction or compression, come to be straitened, they strive every way to set themselves at liberty. Burnet.

RAREFIABLE. adj. [from rarefy.] Admitting rarefaction.

To RAREFY. v. a. [rarefier, Fr. rarus and facio, Lat. rarefy were more proper.] To make thin: contrary to condense.

To the hot equator crowding fast,
Where highly rarefied the yielding air Admits their steam. Thomson.

To RAREFY. v. n. To become thin.
Earth rarefies to dew; expanded more
The subtil dew in air begins to soar. Dryden's Fables.

RARELY. adv. [from rare.]
1. Seldom; not often; not frequently.

Rarely they rise by virtue's aid, who lie
Plung'd in the depth of helpless poverty. Dryden's Juven.

Vanilla in her bloom,
Advanc'd like Atalanta's star,
But rarely seen, and seen from far. Swift's Miscellanies.

2. Finely; nicely; accurately.
How rarely does it meet with this time's guise,
When man was will'd to love his enemies. Shakefp.

RARENESS. n. f. [from rare.]
1. Uncommonness; state of happening seldom; infrequency.

Tickling is most in the soles, arm-holes and sides: the cause is the thinness of the skin, joined with the rareness of being touched there; for tickling is a light motion of the spirits, which the thinness of the skin, the suddenness and rare-ness of touch doth further. Bacon.

RAS

For the rareness and rare effect of that petition, I'll insert it as presented. Clarendon.

Of my heart I now a present make;
Accept it as when early fruit we send,
And let the rareness the small gift commend. Dryden.

2. Value arising from scarcity.
Roses set in a pool, supported with some stay, is matter of rareness and pleasure, though of small use. Bacon.

To worthiest things,
Virtue, art, beauty, fortune, now I see
Rareness or use, not nature, value brings. Donne.

RARITY. n. f. [raritas, Fr. raritas, Lat.]
1. Uncommonness; infrequency.
So far from being fond of any one for its rarity, if I meet with any in a field which pleases me, I give it a place in my garden. Spektator.

2. A thing valued for its scarcity.
Sorrow would be a rarity most belov'd,
If all could so become it. Shakefp. King Lear.

It would be a rarity worth the seeing, could any one shew us such a thing as a perfectly reconciled enemy. South.

I saw three rarities of different kinds, which pleased me more than any other shows of the place. Addison.

3. Thinness; subtlety: the contrary to density.
Bodies, under the same outward bulk, have a greater thinness and expansion, or thickness and solidity, which terms, in English, do not signify fully those differences of quantity; therefore I will do it under the names of rarity and density. Digby.

This I do, not to draw any argument against them from the universal rest or accurately equal diffusion of matter, but only that I may better demonstrate the great rarity and tenuity of their imaginary chaos. Bentley's Sermons.

RASCAL. n. f. [rascal, Saxon, a lean beast.] A mean fellow; a scoundrel; a lorry wretch.

For the rascal commons, left he cared. Spenser.
And when him list the rascal routs appal,
Men into stones therewith he could transnew. Fa. Queen.

When Marcus Brutus grows so covetous
To lock such rascal counters from his friends:
Be ready, gods, with all your thunder-bolts,
Dash him to pieces. Shakefp. Julius Caesar.

The rascal people, thirsting after prey,
Join with the traitor. Shakefp. Henry VI. p. ii.

But for our gentlemen,
The mouse ne'er than'd the cat, as they did budge
From rascals worse than they. Shakefp.

I am accus'd to rob in that thief's company; the rascal hath remov'd my horse. Shakefp. Henry IV. p. i.

Scoundrels are insolent to their superiors; but it does not become a man of honour to contest with mean rascals. L'Estr.

Did I not see you, rascal, did I not!
When you lay snug to snap young Damon's goat? Dryden.

I have sense, to serve my turn, in store,
And he's a rascal who pretends to more. Dryden's Persius.

The poor girl provoked told him he lyed like a rascal. Sw.
RASCA'LI. n. f. [from rascal.] One of the lowest people.

That proud dame
Us'd him so like a base rascalion,
That old pig—what d'ye call him—malion,
That cut his mistress out of stone,
Had not so hard a hearted one. Hudibras, p. i.

RASCA'LI. n. f. [from rascal.] The low mean people.
Pretended philosophers judge as ignorantly in their way, as the rascality in theirs. Glanvill's Sceps.

Jeroboam having procured his people gods, the next thing was to provide priests; hereupon, to the calves he adds a commission, for the approving, trying and admitting the rascality and lowest of the people to minister in that service. South.

RASCALLY. adj. [from rascal.] Mean; worthless.
Wouldst thou not be glad to have the niggardly rascally
sheep-biter come by some notable shame. Shakefp.

Our rascally porter is fallen fast asleep with the black cloth and sconces, or we might have been tacking up by this time. Swift.

To RASE. v. a. [this word is written rase or raze: I would write rase, when it signifies to strike slightly, perfringere; and raze, when it signifies to ruin, delere; razer, Fr. rasus, Lat.]

1. To skim; to strike on the surface.
He certifies your lordship, that this night
He dreamt the boar had rased off his helm. Shakefp.

Was he not in the nearest neighbourhood to death? and might not the bullet, that rased his cheek, have gone into his head. South's Sermons.

2. To overthrow; to destroy; to root up.
Her battering engines bent to raze some city. Milton.

3. To blot out by failure; to erase.
Though of their names in heavenly records now
Be no memorial, blotted out and rased. Milton.

RASH. adj. [rash, Dutch.] Hasty; violent; precipitate; acting without caution or reflection.
This is to be bold without shame, rash without skill, full of words without wit. Afchan's Schoolmaster.

RAT

Blast her pride, O ye blest gods! so will you wish on me, when the rat mood is on me. Shakefp.
I have scarce leisure to salute you,
My matter is so rat. Shakefp. Troilus and Cressida.
Be not rat with thy mouth, and let not thine heart be hasty to utter any thing before God; for God is in heaven, and thou upon earth; therefore let thy words be few. Eclif.
Her rat hand in evil hour,
Forth reaching to the fruit, she pluck'd, she eat. Milton.
RASH. n. f. [rafia, Italian.]
1. Sattin. Minshew.
2. [Corrupted probably from rafia.] An efflorescence on the body; a breaking out.
RASH. n. f. [rafura lardi, Lat.] A thin slice of bacon.
If we grow all to be pork eaters, we shall not shortly have a rasper on the coals for money. Shakefp. Merch. of Venice.
White and black was all her homely cheer,
And raspers of fang'd bacon on the coals. Dryden.
Quenches his thirst with ale in nut-brown bowls,
And takes the hasty rasper from the coals. King.
RASHLY. adv. [from rafia.] Hastily; violently; without due consideration.
This expedition was by York and Talbot Too raspily plotted. Shakefp. Henry VI. p. i.
Men are not raspily to take that for done; which is not done. Bacon's Natural History.
He that doth any thing raspily, must do it willingly; for he was free to deliberate or not. L'Estrange's Fables.
Declare the secret villain,
The wretch so meanly base to injure Phædra,
So raspily brave to dare the sword of Theseus. Smith.
RASHNESS. n. f. [from rafia.] Foolish contempt of danger;
inconsiderate heat of temper; precipitation; temerity.
Who seeth not what sentence it shall enforce us to give against all churches in the world; in as much as there is not one, but hath had many things established in it, which though the scripture did never command, yet for us to condemn were rafines. Hooker, b. iii. f. 6.
Nature to youth hot rafines doth dispence,
But with cold prudence age doth recompence. Denham.
In so speaking, we offend indeed against truth; yet we offend not properly by falsehood, which is a speaking against our thoughts; but by rafines, which is an affirming of de-lying, before we have sufficiently informed ourselves. South.
The vain Morat by his own rafines wrought,
Too soon discover'd his ambitious thought,
Believ'd me his, because I spoke him fair. Dryden.
RASP. n. f. [raspo, Italian.] A delicious berry that grows on a species of the bramble; a raspberry.
Sorrel set amongst rasps, and the rasps will be the smaller.
Bacon's Natural History.
Now will the corinths, now the rasps supply
Delicious draughts, when prest to wines. Philips.
To RASP. v. a. [raspen, Dutch; rasper, Fr. raspare, Italian.]
To rub to powder with a very rough file.
Some authors have advised the rasping of these bones; but in this case it is needless. Wifeman's Surgery.
Having prepared hard woods and ivory for the lathe with rasping, they pitch it between the pikes. Moxon.
RASP. n. f. [from the verb.] A large rough file, commonly used to wear away wood.
Case-hardening is used by file-cutters, when they make coarse files, and generally most rasps have formerly been made of iron and case-hardened. Moxon's Mechanical Exercises.
RASPATORY. n. f. [raspator, Fr. from rasp.] A chiturgeon's rasp.
I put into his mouth a raspatory, and pulled away the corrupt flesh, and with cauteries burnt it to a crust. Wifeman's Surgery.
RASPBERRY, or Rasberry. n. f. A kind of berry.
Rasberries are of three sorts; the common wild one, the large red garden raspberry, which is one of the pleasantest of fruits, and the white, which is little inferior to the red. Mortimer's Husbandry.
RASPBERRY-BUSH. n. f. A species of bramble.
RASURE. n. f. [rafura, Lat.]
1. The act of scraping or shaving.
2. A mark in a writing where something has been rubbed out.
Such a writing ought to be free from any vituperation of rafure. Ayliffe's Parergon.
RAT. n. f. [ratte, Dutch; rat, Fr. rattia, Spanish.] An animal of the mouse kind that infests houses and ships.
Our natures do pursue,
Like rats that ravin down their proper bane. Shakefp.
Make you ready your stiff bats and clubs,
Rome and her rats are at the point of battle. Shakefp.
I have seen the time, with my long sword I would have made you four tall fellows skip like rats. Shakefp.
Thus horses will knable at walls, and rats will gnaw iron. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
In despair he goes out of the way like a rat with a dose of arsenick, why he dies nobly. Dennis.

RAT

To smell a RAT. To be put on the watch by suspicion as the cat by the scent of a rat; to suspect danger.
Quoth Hudibras, I smell a rat,
Ralpho, thou dost prevaricate. Hudibras, p. i.
RATABLE. adj. [from rate.] Set at a certain value.
The Danes brought in a reckoning of money by ores, per oras; I collect out of the abby-book of Burton, that twenty ores were ratable to two marks of silver. Camden's Remains.
RATABLY. adv. Proportionably.
Many times there is no proportion of shot and powder allowed ratably by that quantity of the great ordnance. Raleigh.
RATAFIA. n. f. A fine liquor, prepared from the kernels of apricots and spirits. Bailey.
RATAN. n. f. An Indian cane. Diid.
RATCH. n. f. In clockwork, a sort of wheel, which serves to lift up the detents every hour, and thereby make the clock strike. Bailey.
RATE. n. f. [ratu, Lat. rate, old Fr.]
1. Price fixed on any thing.
How many things do we value, because they come at dear rates from Japan and China, which if they were our own manufacture, common to be had, and for a little money, would be neglected? Locke.
I'll not betray the glory of my name,
'Tis not for me, who have preserv'd a state,
To buy an empire at so base a rate. Dryden.
The price of land has never changed, in the several changes have been made in the rate of interest by law; nor now that the rate of interest is by law the same, is the price of land every where the same. Locke.
2. Allowance settled:
His allowance was a continual allowance, a daily rate for every day. 2 Kings xxv. 30.
They obliged themselves to remit after the rate of twelve hundred thousand pounds sterling per annum, divided into many monthly payments. Addison.
3. Degree; comparative height or valour.
I am a spirit of no common rate;
The summer still doth tend upon my state. Shakefp.
I have disabled mine estate,
By shewing something a more swelling port,
Than my faint means would grant continuance;
Nor do I now make moan to be abridged
From such a noble rate. Shakefp. Merchant of Venice.
In this did his holiness and godliness appear above the rate and pitch of other mens, in that he was so infinitely merciful. Calamy's Sermons.
To which relation whatsoever is done agreeably, is morally and essentially good; and whatsoever is done otherwise, is at the same rate morally evil. South.
4. Quantity assignable.
In goodly form comes on the enemy;
And by the ground they hide, I judge their number Upon or near the rate of thirty thousand. Shakefp.
5. That which sets value.
Heretofore the rate and standard of wit was very different from what it is now-a-days: no man was then accounted a wit for speaking such things, as deserved to have the tongue cut out. South's Sermons.
A virtuous heathen is, at this rate, as happy as a virtuous christian. Atterbury.
6. Manner of doing any thing; degree to which any thing is done.
Many of the horse could not march at that rate, nor come up soon enough. Clarendon, b. viii.
Tom hinting his dislike of some trifle his mistress had said, she asked him how he would talk to her after marriage, if he talked at this rate before? Addison.
7. Tax imposed by the parish.
They paid the church and parish rate,
And took, but read not the receipt. Prior.
To RATE. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To value at a certain price.
I freely told you, all the wealth I had Ran in my veins, I was a gentleman;
And yet, dear lady,
Rating myself as nothing, you shall see How much I was a braggart. Shakefp. Merch. of Venice.
We may there be instructed, how to name and rate all goods, by those that will concentrate into felicity. Boyle.
You seem not high enough your joys to rate,
You stand indebted a vast sum to fate,
And should large thanks for the great blessing pay. Dryden.
2. [Reita, Islandick.] To chide hastily and vehemently.
Go rate thy minions, proud insulting boys,
Becomes it thee to be thus bold in terms
Before thy sovereign. Shakefp. Henry VI. p. iii.
An old lord of the council rated me the other day in the street about you, Sir. Shakefp. Henry IV. p. i.
What is all that a man enjoys, from a year's converse, comparable to what he feels for one hour, when his confidence shall take him aside and rate him by himself. South.

RAT

If words are sometimes to be used, they ought to be grave, kind and sober, representing the ill or unbecomingness of the faults, rather than a hasty rating of the child for it. Locke.
RATH. n. f. A hill. I know not whence derived.
There is a great use among the Irish, to make great as-semblies together upon a rath or hill, there to parly about matters and wrongs between townships or private persons.
Spenser on Ireland.
RATH. adv. Early.
Thus is my summer worn away and wasted,
Thus is my harvest hasten'd all too rathe,
The ear, that budded fair, is burnt and blasted,
And all my hoped gain is turn'd to scathe. Spenser.
Strong Lagean wines
Rath ripe and purple grapes there be. May's Virgil.
Rath ripe are some, and some of later kind,
Of golden some, and some of purple kind. May's Virgil.
RATH. adj. [nað, Saxon, quickly.] Early; coming before the time.
Bring the rath primrose that forsaken dies,
The tufted crow-toe and pale jessamine. Milton.
RATHER. adv. [this is a comparative from rath; nað, Saxon, soon. Now out of use. One may still say, by the same form of speaking, I will sooner do this than that; that is, I like better to do this.]
1. More willingly; with better liking.
Almighty God desireth not the death of a sinner, but rather that he should turn from his wickedness and live. Common Prayer.
2. Preferably to the other; with better reason.
'Tis rather to be thought, that an heir had no such right by divine institution, than that God should give such a right, but yet leave it undetermined who such heir is. Locke.
3. In a greater degree than otherwise.
He fought through the world, but fought in vain,
And no where finding, rather fear'd her slain. Dryden.
4. More properly.
This is an art,
Which does mend nature, change it rather, but
The art itself is nature. Shakefp. Winter's Tale.
5. Especially.
You are come to me in a happy time,
The rather for I have some sport in hand. Shakefp.
6. To have RATHER. [this is, I think, a barbarous expression of late intrusion into our language, for which it is better to say will rather.] To desire in preference.
'Tis with reluctance he is provoked by our impentence to apply the discipline of severity and correction; he had rather mankind should adore him as their patron and benefactor. Rogers's Sermons.
RATIFICATION. n. f. [ratification, Fr. from ratify.] The act of ratifying; confirmation.
RATIFIER. n. f. [from ratify.] The person or thing that ratifies.
They cry, "chuse we Laertes for our king?"
The ratifiers and props of every word,
Caps, hands and tongues applaud it to the clouds. Shakefp.
To RATIFY. v. a. [ratum facio, Latin.] To confirm; to settle.
The church being a body which dieth not, hath always power, as occasion requireth, no less to ordain that which never was, than to ratify what hath been before. Hooker.
By the help of these, with him above
To ratify the work, we may again
Give to our tables meat, sleep to our nights. Shakefp.
We have ratified unto them the borders of Judæa. 1 Mac.
God ratified their prayers by the judgment they brought down upon the head of him, whom they prayed against. South.
Tell me, my friend, from whence had'st thou the skill,
So nicely to distinguish good from ill?
And what thou art to follow, what to fly,
This to condemn, and that to ratify? Dryden.
RATIO. n. f. [Latin.] Proportion.
Whatever inclinations the rays have to the plane of incidence, the sine of the angle of incidence of every ray considered apart, shall have to the sine of the angle of refraction a constant ratio. Cheyne's Philosophical Principles.
To RATIOCINATE. v. n. [ratiocinar, Lat.] To reason;
to argue.
RATIOCINATION. n. f. [ratiocinatio, Lat.] The act of reasoning; the act of deducing consequences from premises.
In simple terms, expressing the open notions of things, which the second act of reason compoundeth into propositions, and the last into syllogisms and forms of ratioci- nation. Brown.
Can any kind of ratiocination allow Christ all the marks of the Messiah, and yet deny him to be the Messiah? South.
Such an inscription would be self-evident without any ra- tification or study, and could not fail constantly to exert its energy in their minds. Bentley.

RAT

RATIOCINATIVE. adj. [from ratiocinate.] Argumentative; advancing by process of discourse.
Some consecutions are so intimately and evidently connexed to, or found in the premises, that the conclusion is attained quasi per saltum, and without any thing of ratiocinative process, even as the eye sees his object immediately, and without any previous discourse. Hale's Origin of Mankind.
RATIONAL. adj. [rationalis, Latin.]
1. Having the power of reasoning.
2. Agreeable to reason.
What higher in her society thou find'st
Attractive, humane, rational, love still. Milton.
When the conclusion is deduced from the unerring dictates of our faculties, we say the inference is rational. Glarvill.
If your arguments be rational, offer them in as moving a manner as the nature of the subject will admit; but beware of letting the pathetic part swallow up the rational. Swift.
3. Wise; judicious: as, a rational man.
RATIONAL. n. f. [from ratio, Lat.] A detail with reasons:
as, Dr. Sparrow's Rationale of the Common Prayer.
RATIONALIST. n. f. [from rational.] One who proceeds in his disquisitions and practice wholly upon reason.
He often used this comparison; the empirical philosophers are like to pigmies; they only lay up and use their store:
the rationalists are like to spiders; they spin all out of their own bowels: but give me a philosopher, who, like the bee, hath a middle faculty, gathering from abroad, but digesting that which is gathered by his own virtue. Bacon.
RATIONALITY. n. f. [from rational.]
1. The power of reasoning.
When God has made rationality the common portion of mankind, how came it to be thy inclosure? Gov. of the Tong.
2. Reasonableness.
In human occurrences, there have been many well directed intentions, whose rationalities will never bear a rigid examination. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
RATIONALLY. adv. [from rational.] Reasonably; with reason.
Upon the proposal of an agreeable object, it may rationally be conjectured, that a man's choice will rather incline him to accept than to refuse it. South.
RATIONALNESS. n. f. [from rational.] The state of being rational.
RATSBANE. n. f. [rat and bane.] Poison for rats; arsenick.
Poor Tom! that hath laid knives under his pillow, and halts in his pew; set ratbane by his porridge. Shakefp.
He would throw ratbane up and down a house, where children might come at it. L'Estrange.
When murder's out, what vice can we advance?
Unless the new-found pois'ning trick of France;
And when their art of ratbane we have got,
By way of thanks, we'll fend 'em o'er our plot. Dryden.
I can hardly believe the relation of his being poisoned, but sack might do it, though ratbane would not. Swift to Pope.
RATTEEN. n. f. A kind of stuff.
We'll rig in Meath-street Egypt's haughty queen,
And Anthony shall court her in ratteen. Swift.
To RATTL. v. n. [ratelen, Dutch.]
1. To make a quick sharp noise with frequent repetitions and collisions of bodies not very sonorous: when bodies are sonorous, it is called jingling.
The quiver rattleb against him. Job xxxix. 23.
The noise of a whip, of the rattling of the wheels, of prancing horses, and of the jumping chariots. Nab. iii. 2.
They had, to affright the enemies horses, big rattles covered with parchment, and small stones within; but the rattling of shot might have done better service. Hayward.
He was too warm on picking work to dwell;
He fagoted his notions as they fell,
And if they rhym'd and rattled all was well. Dryden.
There the assemblies all her blackest storms,
And the rude hail in rattling tempest forms. Addison.
2. To speak eagerly and noisily.
With jealous eyes at distance she had seen
Whispering with Jove the silver-footed queen;
Then, impotent of tongue, her silence broke,
Thus turbulent in rattling tone she spoke. Dryden.
He is a man of pleasure, and a free-thinker; he is an af-fector of liberty and property; he rattles it out against popery. Swift.
To RATTL. v. a.
1. To move any thing so as to make a rattle or noise.
Her chains the rattles, and her whip the shakes. Dryden.
2. To stun with a noise; to drive with a noise.
Sound but another, and another shall,
As loud as thine, rattle the welkin's ear,
And mock the deep-mouth'd thunder. Shakefp.
He should be well enough able to scatter the Irish as a flight of birds, and rattle away this swarm of bees with their king. Bacon's Henry VII.

3. To scold; to rail at with clamour.
Hearing Alexander had been beforehand, he sent for him in a rage, and rattled him with a thousand traitors and villains for robbing his house. L'Estrange.
She that would sometimes rattle off her servants pretty sharply, now if she saw them drunk, never took any notice. Arbutnot's History of John Bull.
- RA'TTLE. n. f. [from the verb.]
  1. A quick noise nimbly repeated.
I'll hold ten pound my dream is out;
I'd tell it you but for the rattle
Of those confounded drums. Prior.
  2. Empty and loud talk.
All this ado about the golden age, is but an empty rattle and frivolous conceit. Hakewill on Providence.
  3. An instrument, which agitated makes a clattering noise.
The rattles of Isis and the cymbals of Braillea nearly enough resemble each other. Raleigh's History of the World.
They had, to affront the enemies horses, big rattles covered with parchment and small stones within. Hayward.
Opinions are the rattles of immature intellects, but the advanced reasons have outgrown them. Glanvill's Sceps.
They want no rattles for their froward mood,
Nor nurse to reconcile them to their food. Dryden.
Farewel then verse, and love, and ev'ry toy,
The rhymes and rattles of the man or boy;
What right, what true, what fit we justly call,
Let this be all my care; for this is all. Pope.
  4. A plant.
RA'TTLEHEADED. adj. [rattle and head.] Giddy; not steady.
RA'TTLESNAKE. n. f. A kind of serpent.
The rattlesnake is so called, from the rattle at the end of his tail.
She loses her being at the very sight of him, and drops plump into his arms, like a charmed bird into the mouth of a rattlesnake. Moore's Foundling.
- RATTLESNAIL. n. f.
Rattlesnail root, called also feneka, belongs to a plant, a native of Virginia; the Indians use it as a certain remedy against the bite of a rattlesnake: it has been recommended in all cases, in which the blood is known to be thick and sly. Hill.
- RA'TTOON. n. f. A West Indian fox, which has this peculiar property, that if any thing be offered to it that has lain in water, it will wipe and turn it about with its fore feet, before it will put it to its mouth. Bailey.
- TO RAVAGE. v. a. [ravage, Fr.] To lay waste; to sack; to ransack; to spoil; to pillage; to plunder.
Already Caesar
Has ravaged more than half the globe, and sees Mankind grown thin by his destructive sword. Addison.
His blasts obey, and quit the howling hill,
The shatter'd forest, and the ravag'd vale. Thomson.
- RAVAGE. n. f. [ravage, Fr. from the verb.] Spoil; ruin; waste.
Some cruel pleasure will from thence arise,
To view the mighty ravage of your eyes. Dryden.
Would one think 'twere possible for love
To make such ravage in a noble soul. Addison.
These ravages were not then, what civilized mankind is now; but without mutual society, without arms of offence, without houses or fortifications, an obvious and exposed prey to the ravage of devouring beasts. Bentley.
- RA'VAGER. n. f. [from ravage.] Plunderer; spoiler.
When that mighty empire was overthrown by the northern people, vast sums of money were buried to escape the plundering of the conquerors; and what remained was carried off by those ravagers. Swift's Miscellanies.
- RA'VITY. n. f. [raucus, Lat.] Hoarseness; loud rough noise.
Inequality not stay'd upon, but passing, is rather an encrease of sweetness; as in the purring of a wreathed string, and in the raucity of a trumpet. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
- TO RAVE. v. n. [reven, Dutch; river, Fr.]
  1. To be delirious; to talk irrationally.
Men who thus rave, we may conclude their brains are turned, and one may as well read lectures at Bedlam as treat with such. Government of the Tongue.
It soon infecteth the whole member, and is accompanied with watching and raving. Wise man's Surgery.
Her grief has wrought her into frenzy,
The images her troubled fancy forms
Are incoherent, wild; her words disjointed:
Sometimes she raves for musick, light and air;
Nor air, nor light nor musick calm her pains. Smith.
  2. To burst out into furious exclamations as if mad.
This tempest of thy tongue, thus rave, and find
No opposition? Sandys's Paraphrase on Job.
Our ravings and complaints are but like arrows shot up into the air, at no mark, and so to no purpose. Temple.
Wonder at my patience,
Have I not cause to rave, and beat my breast,
To rend my heart with grief, and run distracted. Addison.

RAV

- Revenge, revenge, thus raving through the streets,
I'll cry for vengeance. Southern's Spartan Dame.
He swore he could not leave me,
With ten thousand ravings. Rave's Royal Concert.
3. To be unreasonably fond. With upon before the object of fondness. A colloquial and improper sense.
Another partiality is a fantastical and wild attributing all knowledge to the ancients or the moderns: this raving upon antiquity, in matter of poetry, Horace has wittily exposed in one of his satires. Locke.
  - TO RA'VEL. v. a. [ravelen, Dutch, to entangle.]
    1. To entangle; to entwine one with another; to make intricate; to involve; to perplex.
As you unwind her love from him,
Left it should ravel, and be good to none,
You must provide to bottom it on me. Shakefp.
If then such praise the Macedonian got,
For having rudely cut the Gordian knot;
What glory's due to him that could divide
Such ravel'd int'rests, has the knot unt'y'd,
And without stroke so smooth a passage made,
Where craft and malice such obstructions laid. Waller.
    2. To unweave; to unknot; as, to ravel out a twist or piece of knit work.
Let him for a pair of recchy kisses,
Or padding in your neck with his damn'd fingers,
Make you to ravel all this matter out. Shakefp. Hamlet.
Sleep that knits up the ravel'd sleeve of care. Shakefp.
3. To hurry over in confusion. This seems to be the meaning in Digby.
They but ravel it over loosely, and pitch upon disputing against particular conclusions, that at the first encounter of them fingle, seem harsh to them. Digby.
  - TO RA'VEL. v. n.
    1. To fall into perplexity or confusion.
Give the reins to wandering thought,
Regardless of his glory's diminution;
Till by their own perplexities involv'd,
They ravel more, still less resolv'd,
But never find self-satisfying solution. Milton's Agonistes.
    2. To work in perplexity; to busy himself with intricacies.
It will be needless to ravel far into the records of elder times; every man's memory will suggest many pertinent instances. Decay of Piety.
The humour of ravelling into all these mystical or intangled matters, mingling with the interest and passions of princes and of parties, and thereby heightened and inflamed, produced infinite disputes. Temple.
  - RAVELIN. n. f. [French.] In fortification, a work that consists of two faces, that make a salient angle, commonly called half moon by the soldiers: it is raised before the courties or counterescarpes. DiD.
  - RA'VEN. n. f. [hæpæn, Saxon.] A large black fowl.
The raven himself is hoarse
That croaks the fatal entrance of Duncan
Under my battlements. Shakefp. Macbeth.
Come thou day in night,
For thou wilt lie upon the wings of night,
Whiter than snow upon a raven's back. Shakefp.
I have seen a perfectly white raven, as to bill as well as feathers. Boyle on Colours.
He made the greedy ravens to be Elias' caterers, and bring him food. King Charles.
On sev'ral parts a sev'ral praise bestows,
The ruby lips, and well-proportion'd nose,
The snowy skin, the raven glossy hair,
The dimpled cheek. Dryden's Cymon and Iphigenia.
The raven once in snowy plumes was drest,
White as the whitest dove's unsully'd breast,
His tongue, his prating tongue had chang'd him quite
To sooty blackness from the purest white. Addison.
  - TO RA'VEN. v. a. [ræpæn, Saxon, to rob.] To devour with great eagerness and rapacity.
Thriftless ambition! that will raven up Thine own life's means. Shakefp.
Our natures do pursue,
Like rats that raven down their proper bane,
A thirsty evil; and when we drink we die. Shakefp.
The cloyed will
That satiate, yet unsatisfied desire, that tub
Both fill'd and running, ravens first the lamb, Longs after for the garbage. Shakefp. Cymbeline.
There is a conspiracy of the prophets, like a roaring lion ravens the prey. Ezek. xxii. 25.
  - TO RA'VEN. v. n. To prey with rapacity.
Benjamin shall raven as a wolf; in the morning he shall devour the prey, and at night he shall divide the spoil. Gen.
The Pharisees make clean the outside of the cup; but their inward part is full of ravens and wickedness. Luke xi.
They gaped upon me with their mouths, as a ravens and a roaring lion. Psaln xxii. 13.

The

RAW

- The more they fed, they raven'd still for more,
They drain'd from Dan, and left Beertheba poor;
But when some lay-preferment fell by chance,
The Gourmands made it their inheritance. Dryden.
Convulsions rack man's nerves and cares his breast,
His flying life is chas'd by *rav'n*ing pains
Through all his doubles in the winding veins. Blackmore.
- RA'VENOUS. adj. [from raven.] Furiously voracious; hungry to rage.
  1. Thy desires
Are wolfish, bloody, starv'd and ravenous. Shakefp.
As when a flock
Of ravenous fowl, though many a league remotè,
Against the day of battle, to a field
Where armies lie encamp'd come flying, lu'd
With scent of living carcasses. Milton's Paradise Lost.
What! the kind Ifmena,
That nurs'd me, watch'd my sickness! oh she watch'd me,
As rav'nous vultures watch the dying lion. Smith.
  - RA'VENOUSLY. adv. [from ravenous.] With raging voracity.
  - RA'VENOUSNESS. n. f. [from ravenous.] Rage for prey; furious voracity.
The ravenousness of a lion or bear are natural to them; yet their mission upon an extraordinary occasion may be an actus imperatus of divine providence. Hale.
- RAUGHT. the old pret. and part. pass. of reach. Snatched; reached; attained.
His tail was stretched out in wond'rous length,
That to the house of heavenly gods it raught,
And with extorted power and borrow'd strength,
The ever-burning lamps from thence it brought. Fa. 2u.
And that as soon as ripe years he raught,
He might, for memory of that day's ruth,
Be called Ruddyman. Fairy Queen.
In like delights of bloody game,
He trained was till ripe years he raught,
And there abode whilst any beast of name
Walk'd in that forest. Fairy Queen.
This staff of honour raught, there let it stand,
Where best it fits to be, in Henry's hand. Shakefp.
The hand of death has raught him. Shakefp.
Gritus furiously running in upon Schenden, violently raught from his head his rich cap of fables, and with his horsemen took him. Knolly's History of the Turks.
- RA'VIN. n. f. [from raven; this were better written raven.]
  1. Prey; food gotten by violence.
The lion strangled for his lionesses, and filled his holes with prey, and his dens with ravins. Nab. ii. 2.
To me, who with eternal famine pine,
Alike is hell, or paradise, or heav'n;
There best; where most with ravins I may meet. Milton.
  2. Rapine; rapaciousness.
They might not lie long in a condition exposed to the ravin of any vermin that may find them, being unable to escape. Ray on the Creation.
- RA'VINGLY. adv. [from rave.] With frenzy; with distraction.
In this depth of mutes and divers sorts of discourses, would the ravings have remained. Sidney, b. ii.
- TO RA'VISH. v. a. [ravis, Fr.]
  1. To conspire by force.
They ravished the women and maids. Lam. v. 11.
They cut thy sister's tongue, and ravish'd her. Shakefp.
  2. To take away by violence.
These hairs, which thou dost ravish from my chin,
Will quicken and accuse thee. Shakefp. King Lear.
Their vow is made
To ransack Troy, within whose strong immures
The ravish'd Helen sleeps. Shakefp. Troilus and Cressida.
I owe myself the care,
My fame and injur'd honour to repair;
From thy own tent, proud man, in thy despite;
This hand shall ravish thy pretended right. Dryden.
To delight to rapture; to transport.
Thou hast ravished my heart. Cant. iv. ix.
Be thou ravished always with her love. Prov. v. 19.
- RA'VISH. n. f. [ravis, Fr. from ravish.]
  1. He that embraces a woman by violence.
They are cruel and bloody, common ravishers of women, and murderers of children. Spenser's State of Ireland.
A ravisher must repair the temporal detriment to the maid, and give her a dowry, or marry her if he desire it. Taylor.
Turn hence those pointed glories of your eyes!
For if more charms beneath those circles rise,
So weak my virtue, they so strong appear,
I shall turn ravisher to keep you here. Dryden.
  2. One who takes any thing by violence.
Shall the ravisher display your hair,
While the fops envy, and the ladies stare. Pope.
- RAVISHMENT. n. f. [ravissement, Fr. from ravish.]
  1. Violation; forcible conspurcation.
Of his several ravishments, betrayings and stealing away of men's wives, came in all those ancient fables of his transformations and all that rabble of Grecian forgeries. Raleigh.
Tell them ancient stories of the ravishment of chaste maidens. Taylor's Rule of Living Holy.
I told them I was one of their knight-errants that delivered them from ravishment. Dryden.
  2. Transport; rapture; ecstasy; pleasing violence on the mind.
All things joy, with ravishment
Attracted by thy beauty still to gaze. Milton.
These all things gaze on,
With ravishment beheld! Milton's Par. Lost, b. ix.
Can any mortal mixture of earth's mould
Breathe such divine enchanting ravishment. Milton.
What a ravishment was that, when having found out the way to measure Hiero's crown, he leaped out of the bath, and, as if he were suddenly possit, ran naked up and down. Wilkins's Dædalus.
- RAW. adj. [hneap, Saxon; raa, Danish; rawu, Dutch.]
  1. Not subdued by the fire.
Full of great lumps of flesh, and gobbets raw. Spenser.
  2. Not covered with the skin.
All about the wind doth blow,
And coughing drowns the parson's law;
And birds fit brooding in the snow,
And Marian's nose looks red and raw. Shakefp.
If there be quick raw flesh in the rifings, it is an old leprosy. Lev. xiii. 10.
  3. Sore.
This her knight was feeble and too faint,
And all his sinews waxen weak and raw
Through long imprisonment. Spenser.
  4. Immature; unripe.
5. Unseasoned; unripe in skill.
Some people, very raw and ignorant, are very unworthy and unfitly nominated to places, when men of desert are held back and unpreferred. Raleigh's Essays.
People, while young and raw, and soft-natured, are apt to think it an easy thing to gain love, and reckon their own friendship a sure price of another man's; but when experience shall have once opened their eyes, they will find that a friend is the gift of God. Saith.
Sails were spread to ev'ry wind that blew,
Raw were the sailors, and the depths were new. Dryden.
Well I knew
What perils youthful ardour would pursue,
Young as thou wert in dangers, raw to war. Dryden.
  6. New. This seems to be the meaning.
I have in my mind
A thousand raw tricks of these bragging jacks. Shakefp.
  7. Bleak; chill.
They carried always with them that weed, as their house, their bed and their garment; and coming lastly into Ireland, they found there more special use thereof, by reason of the raw cold climate. Spenser's State of Ireland.
Youthful still in your doublet and hose, this raw rheumatick day. Shakefp. Merry Wives of Windsor.
Once upon a raw and gusty day,
The troubled Tyber chafing with his shores. Shakefp.
God help thee, shallow man; God make Incision in thee, thou art raw. Shakefp.
  8. Not concocted.
Distilled waters will last longer than raw waters. Bacon.
- RA'WBONED. adj. [raw and bone.] Having bones scarcely covered with flesh.
Lean rawbon'd rascals! who would e'er suppose
They had such courage. Shakefp. Henry VI. p. i.
The wolf was content to barter away a rawboned carcass for a smooth and fat one. L'Estrange.
- RA'WHEAD. n. f. [raw and head.] The name of a spectre, mentioned to fright children.
Hence draw thy theme, and to the stage permit
Rawhead and bloody bones, and hands and feet,
Ragouts for Tereus or Thyestes drest. Dryden.
Servants awe children, and keep them in subjection, by telling them of rawhead and bloodybones. Locke.
- RA'WLY. adv. [from raw.]
  1. In a raw manner.
2. Unskilfully.
3. Newly.
Some crying for a surgeon, some upon the debts they owe, some upon their children rawly left. Shakefp. Henry V.
- RA'WNESS. n. f. [from raw.]
  1. State of being raw.
Chalk helpeth concoction, so it be out of a deep well; for then it cureth the rawness of the water. Bacon.
  2. Unskilfulness.
Charles V. considering the rawness of his seamen, established a pilot major for their examination. Hakewill.
  3. Hasty manner. This seems to be the meaning in this obscure passage.
Why in that rawness left he wife and children,
Without leave taking. Shakefp. Macbeth.
RAY.

REA

- RAY. n. f. [raie, rayon, Fr. radius, Lat.]
 1. A beam of light.
 These eyes that roll in vain
 To find thy piercing ray, and find no dawn. Milton.
 The least light, or part of light, which may be stop alone, or do or suffer any thing alone, which the rest of the light doth not or suffers not, I call a ray of light. Newton.
 2. Any lustre corporeal or intellectual.
 The air sharpen'd his visual ray. Milton.
 3. [Raye, Fr. raie, Lat.] A fish. Ainsworth.
 4. [Lolium, Lat.] An herb. Ainsworth.
 To RAY. v. a. [raye, Fr. from the noun.] To streak; to mark in long lines. An old word.
 Beside a bubbling fountain low the lay,
 Which the increased with her bleeding heart,
 And the clean waves with purple gore did ray. Fa. Qu.
 His horse is rased with the yellows. Shakep.
 Was ever man so beaten? was ever men so rased? was ever man so weary? Shakep. Taming of the Shrew.
 RAY, for array. Spenser.
 RAZE. n. f. [rayz, a root, Spanish.] A root of ginger. This is commonly written race, but less properly.
 I have a gammon of bacon and two razes of ginger to be delivered. Shakep. Henry IV. p. i.
 To RAZE. v. a. [razer, Fr. rafas, Lat.] See RASE.
 1. To overthrow; to ruin; to subvert.
 Will you suffer a temple, how poorly built soever, but yet a temple of your deity, to be razed. Sidney, b. ii.
 He yokes your rebellious necks,
 Razeth your cities, and subverts your towns. Shakep.
 It grieved the tyrant, that so base a town should so long hold out, so that he would threaten to raze it. Knolles.
 Shed christian blood, and populous cities raze;
 Because they're taught to use some diff'rent phrase. Waller.
 We touch'd with joy
 The royal hand that raz'd unhappy Troy. Dryden.
 The place would be razed to the ground, and its foundations fown with salt. Addison's Spectator, N° 189.
 2. To efface.
 Fatal this marriage; cancelling your fame,
 Razing the characters of your renown. Shakep.
 Pluck from the memory a rooted sorrow,
 Raze out the written troubles of the brain. Shakep.
 He in derision sets
 Upon their tongues a various spirit, to raze
 Quite out their native language; and instead,
 To sow a jangling noise of words. Milton's Par. Lost.
 3. To extirpate.
 I'll find a day to massacre them all,
 And raze their faction and their family. Shakep.
 RAZOR. n. f. [razor, Lat.] A knife with a thick blade and fine edge used in shaving.
 Zeal, except ordered aright, useth the razor with such eagerness, that the life of religion is thereby hazarded. Hooker.
 These words are razors to my wounded heart. Shakep.
 Those thy boist'rous locks, not by the sword
 Of noble warrior, so to stain his honour,
 But by the barber's razor best subdu'd. Milton's Agonistes.
 All our lords are by his wealth outv'd,
 Whose razor on my callow beard was try'd. Dryden.
 Razor makers generally clap a small bar of Venice steel between two small bars of Flemish steel, and weld them together, to strengthen the back of the razor. Moxon.
 RAZOURABLE. adj. [from razor.] Fit to be shaved. Not in use.
 New-born chins be rough and razourable. Shakep.
 RAZORFISH. n. f.
 The sheath or razorfish resembleth in length and bigness a man's finger. Carver's Survey of Cornwall.
 RAZURE. n. f. [rasure, Fr. rasura, Latin.] Act of erasing.
 Oh! your desert speaks loud;
 It well deserves with characters of brafs
 A fortified residence, 'gainst the tooth of time
 And razure of oblivion. Shakep. Measure for Measure.
 RE. Is an inseparable particle used by the Latins, and from them borrowed by us to denote iteration or backward action:
 as, return, to come back; to revive, to live again; reper- cussion, the act of driving back.
 REACCESS. n. f. [re and access.] Visit renewed.
 Let pass the quailing and withering of all things by the recels, and their reviving by the reaccess of the sun. Hakewill.
 To REACH. v. a. ancient preterite raught. [raecan, Saxon.]
 1. To touch with the hand extended.
 What are riches, empire, pow'r,
 But larger means to gratify the will;
 The steps by which we climb to rise and reach
 Our wish, and that obtained, down with a scaffolding
 Of scepters, crowns and thrones: they've serv'd their end,
 And there like lumber to be left and scorn'd. Congreve.
 2. To arrive at; to attain any thing distant; to strike from a distance.
 Round the tree
 They longing stood, but could not reach. Milton.
 O patron pow'r, thy present aid afford,
 That I may reach the beaft. Dryden.

- The coast so long desir'd
 Thy troops shall reach, but having reach'd, repent. Dryden.
 What remains beyond this, we have no more a positive notion of, than a mariner has of the depth of the sea; where, having let down his sounding-line, he reaches no bottom. Locke.
 It must fall perhaps before this letter reaches your hands. Pope.
 3. To fetch from some place distant, and give.
 He reached me a full cup. 2 Esdr. xiv. 39.
 4. To bring forward from a distant place.
 Reach hither thy finger, and behold my hands; and reach hither thy hand, and thrust it into my side. John xx. 27.
 5. To hold out; to stretch forth.
 These kinds of goodness are so nearly united to the things which desire them, that we scarcely perceive the appetite to stir in reaching forth her hand towards them. Hooker.
 When thou fittest among many, reach not thine hand out first. Ecclef. xxxi. 18.
 6. To attain; to gain; to obtain.
 The best accounts of the appearances of nature, which human penetration can reach, comes short of its reality. Cheyne.
 7. To transfer.
 Through such hands
 The knowledge of the gods is reach'd to man. Rousseau.
 8. To penetrate to.
 Whatever alterations are made in the body, if they reach not the mind, there is no perception. Locke.
 9. To be adequate to.
 The law reached the intention of the promoters, and this act fixed the natural price of money. Locke.
 If these examples of grown men reach not the case of children, let them examine. Locke on Education.
 10. To extend to.
 Thy desire leads to no excess that reaches blame. Milton.
 Her imprecations reach not to the tomb,
 They shut not out society in death. Addison's Cato.
 11. To extend; to spread abroad.
 Trees reach'd too far their pamper'd boughs. Milton.
 To REACH. v. n.
 1. To be extended.
 We hold that the power which the church hath lawfully to make laws doth extend unto sundry things of ecclesiastical jurisdiction, and such other matters whereto their opinion is, that the church's authority and power doth not reach. Hooker.
 The new world reaches quite cross the torrid zone in one tropic to the other. Boyle.
 When men pursue their thoughts of space, they are apt to stop at the confines of body, as if space were there at an end too, and reached no farther. Locke.
 If I do not ask any thing improper, let me be buried by Theodosius; my vow reaches no farther than the grave. Add.
 The influence of the stars reaches to many events, which are not in the power of reason. Swift.
 2. To be extended far.
 Great men have reaching hands. Shakep. Henry VI.
 3. To penetrate.
 He hath delivered them into your hand, and ye have slain them in a rage, that reaches up into heaven. 2 Chr. xxviii.
 We reach forward into futurity, and bring up to our thoughts objects hid in the remotest depths of time. Addison.
 4. To make efforts to attain.
 Could a sailor always supply new line, and find the plummet sink without stopping, he would be in the posture of the mind, reaching after a positive idea of infinity. Locke.
 5. To take in the hand.
 Left he reach of the tree of life, and eat. Milton.
 REACH. n. f. [from the verb.]
 1. Act of reaching or bringing by extension of the hand.
 2. Power of reaching or taking in the hand.
 There may be in a man's reach a book containing pictures and discourses, capable to delight and instruct him, which yet he may never have the will to open. Locke.
 3. Power of attainment or management.
 In actions, within the reach of power in him, a man seems as free as it is possible for freedom to make him. Locke.
 4. Power; limit of faculties.
 Our fight may be considered as a more diffusive kind of touch, that brings into our reach some of the most remote parts of the universe. Addison.
 Be sure yourself and your own reach to know,
 How far your genius, taste and learning go. Pope.
 5. Contrivance; artful scheme; deep thought.
 Drawn by others, who had deeper reaches than themselves to matters which they least intended. Hayward.
 Some, under types, have affected obscurity to amuse and make themselves admired for profound reaches. Howell.
 6. A fetch; an artifice to attain some distant advantage.
 The duke of Parma had particular reaches and ends of his own underhand, to cross the design. Bacon.
 7. Tendency to distant consequences.
 Strain not my speech
 To grosser issues, nor to larger reach,
 Than to suspicion. Shakep. Othello.
 8. Extent.

8. Extent.
 The confines met of empyrean heav'n,
 And of this world: and, on the left hand, hell
 With long reach interpos'd, Milton's Par. Lost, b. x.
 To REACT. v. a. [re and act.] To return the impulse or impression.
 The lungs being the chief instrument of sanguification, and acting strongly upon the chyle to bring it to an animal fluid, must be reacted upon as strongly. Arbutnot.
 Cut off your hand, and you may do
 With t'other hand the work of two;
 Because the soul her power contracts,
 And on the brother limb reacts. Swift's Miscellanies.
 REACTION. n. f. [reaction, Fr. from reac.] The reciprocation of any impulse or force impressed, made by the body on which such impression is made: action and reaction are equal.
 Do not great bodies conferve their heat the longest, their parts heating one another; and may not great, dense and fixed bodies, when heated beyond a certain degree, emit light so copiously, as, by the emission and reaction of its light, and the reflexions and refractions of its rays within its pores, to grow still hotter till it comes to a certain period of heat, such as is that of the sun? Newton's Opticks.
 Alimentary substances, of a mild nature, act with small force upon the solids, and as the action and reaction are equal, the smallest degree of force in the solids digests them. Arb.
 READ. n. f. [raed, Saxon; raed, Dutch.]
 1. Counsel.
 The man is blest that hath not lent
 To wicked read his ear. Sternhold.
 2. Saying; faw. This word is in both senses obsolete.
 This reade is rife that oftentime
 Great cumburs fall unsoft,
 In humble dales is footing fast,
 The trade is not so tickle. Spenser.
 To READ. v. a. pret. read, part. pass. read. [raes, Saxon.]
 1. To peruse any thing written.
 I have seen her take forth paper, write upon't, read it, and afterwards seal it. Shakep. Macbeth.
 The passage you must have read, though since slept out of your memory. Pope.
 If we have not leisure to read over the book itself regularly, then by the titles of chapters we may be directed to peruse several sections. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.
 2. To discover by characters or marks.
 An armed corse did lye,
 In whose dead face he read great unanimity. Spenser.
 3. To learn by observation.
 Those about her
 From her shall read the perfect ways of honour. Shakep.
 4. To know fully.
 O most delicate fiend!
 Who is't can read a woman? Shakep. Cymbeline.
 To READ. v. n.
 1. To perform the act of perusing writing.
 It shall be with him, and he shall read therein, that he may learn to fear the Lord. Deut. xvii. 19.
 2. To be studious in books.
 'Tis sure that Fleury reads. Taylor.
 3. To know by reading.
 I have read of an eastern king, who put a judge to death for an iniquitous sentence. Swift.
 READ. partic. adj. [from read; the verb read is pronounced read; the preterite and participle red.] Skilful by reading.
 Virgil's shepherds are too well read in the philosophy of Epicurus. Dryden.
 We have a poet among us, of a genius as exalted as his stature, and who is very well read in Longinus his treatise concerning the sublime. Addison's Guardian, N° 108.
 READING. n. f. [from read.]
 1. Study in books; perusal of books.
 Though reading and conversation may furnish us with many ideas of men and things, yet it is our own meditation must form our judgment. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.
 Less reading than makes felons 'scape,
 Less human genius than God gives an ape,
 Can make a Cidder. Pope.
 2. A lecture; a predication.
 The Jews always had their weekly readings of the law.
 Give attendance to reading, exhortation and doctrine. Hooker, b. v. f. 8.
 3. Public recital.
 The Jews always had their weekly readings of the law.
 Give attendance to reading, exhortation and doctrine. 1 Tim. iv. 13.
 4. Variation of copies.
 That learned prelate has restored some of the readings of the authors with great sagacity. Arlintnot on Coins.
 READEPTION. n. f. [re and adeptus, Latin.] Recovery; act of regaining.
 Will any say, that the redeption of Trevigi was matter of scruple? Bacon.
 READER. n. f. [from read.]
 1. One that peruses any thing written.
 2. Being

 2. One studious in books.
 Bafiris' altars and the dire decrees Dryden.
 Of hard Eusebius, ev'ry reader fees.
 3. One whose office is to read prayers in churches.
 He got into orders, and became a reader in a parish church at twenty pounds a year. Swift.
 READERSHIP. n. f. [from reader.] The office of reading prayers.
 When they have taken a degree, they get into orders, and solicit a readership. Swift's Miscellanies.
 READILY. adv. [from ready.] Expeditely; with little hinde-rance or delay.
 My tongue obey'd, and readily could name
 Whate'er I saw. Milton.
 Those very things, which are declined as impossible, are readily practicable in a case of extreme necessity. South.
 I readily grant, that one truth cannot contradict another. Locke.
 Every one sometime or other dreams that he is reading papers, in which case the invention prompts so readily, that the mind is imposed upon. Addison's Spectator, N° 487.
 READINESS. n. f. [from ready.]
 1. Expediteness; promptitude.
 He would not forget the readiness of their king, in aiding him when the duke of Bretagne failed him. Bacon.
 He opens himself to the man of business with reluctance, but offers himself to the visits of a friend with facility and all the meeting readiness of desire. South.
 2. The state of being ready or fit for any thing.
 Have you an army ready?
 —The centurions and their charges already in the entertainment to be on foot at an hour's warning. Shakep.
 —I am joyful to hear of their readiness. Shakep.
 They remained near a month, that they might be in readiness to attend the motion of the army. Clarendon.
 3. Facility; freedom from hindrance or obstruction.
 Nature has provided for the readiness and easiness of speech. Holder's Elements of Speech.
 4. State of being willing or prepared.
 A pious and well-disposed mind, attended with a readiness to obey the known will of God, is the surest means to enlighten the understanding to a belief of christianity. South.
 Their conviction grew so strong, that they embraced the same truths, and laid down their lives, or were always in a readiness to do it, rather than depart from them. Addison.
 READMISSION. n. f. [re and admission.] The act of admitting again.
 In an exhausted receiver, animals, that seem as they were dead, revive upon the readmission of fresh air. Arbutnot.
 To READMIT. v. a. [re and admit.] To let in again.
 These evils I deserve,
 Yet despair not of his final pardon,
 Whose ear is ever open, and his eye
 Gracious to readmit the suppliant. Milton's Agonistes.
 After twenty minutes I readmitted the air. Derham.
 To READORN. v. a. [re and adorn.] To decorate again;
 to deck a new.
 The streams now change their languid blue,
 Regain their glory, and their fame renew,
 With scarlet honours readorn the tide. Blackmore.
 Saxon.] [raeb, Saxon; raed, Swedish; hpaeb, nimble,
 Saxon.]
 1. Prompt; not delayed.
 These commodities yield the readiest money of any in this kingdom, because they never fail of a price abroad. Temple.
 He overlook'd his hind; their pay was just
 And ready: for he scorn'd to go on trust. Dryden.
 2. Fit for a purpose; not to seek.
 All things are ready, if our minds be so.
 —Perish the man whose mind is backward now! Shakep.
 Make you ready your stiff bats and clubs;
 Rome and her rats are at the point of battle. Shakep.
 One hand the sword, and one the pen employs,
 And in my lap the ready paper lies. Dryden.
 The sacred priests with ready knives bereave
 The beasts of life, and in full bowls receive
 The streaming blood. Dryden's Aeneis.
 3. Prepared; accommodated to any design, so as that there can be no delay.
 Trouble and anguish shall prevail against him, as a king ready to the battle. Job xv. 24.
 Death ready stands to interpose his dart. Milton.
 The word which I have giv'n, I'll not revoke;
 If he be brave, he's ready for the stroke. Dryden.
 The imagination is always restless, and the will, reason being laid aside, is ready for every extravagant project. Locke.
 4. Willing; eager.
 Men, when their actions succeed not as they would, are always ready to impute the blame thereof unto the heavens, so as to excuse their own follies. Spenser's State of Ireland.
 5. Being

5. Being at the point; not distant; near; about to do or be. He knoweth that the day of darkness is ready at hand. Job.
Satan ready now
To stoop with weary'd wings and willing feet
On this world. Milton's Paradise Lost.
6. Being at hand; next to hand.
A sapling pine he wrench'd from out the ground,
The readiest weapon that his fury found. Dryden.
7. Facile; easy; opportune; near.
Sometimes the readiest way, which a wise man hath to conquer, is to fly.
The race elost,
Safe towards Canaan from the shore advance
Through the wild desert, not the readiest way. Milton.
Proud of their conquest, prouder of their prey,
They leave the camp, and take the readiest way. Dryden.
The ready way to be thought mad, is to contend that you are not so. Speccator, N° 577.
8. Quick; not done with hesitation.
A ready consent often subjects a woman to contempt. Clarissa.
9. Expedite; nimble; not embarrassed; not slow.
Those, who speak in publick, are much better accepted, when they can deliver their discourse by the help of a lively genius and a ready memory, than when they are forced to read all. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.
10. To make READY. To make preparations.
He will shew you a large upper room; there make ready for us. Mar. xiv. 15.
- READY. adv. Readily; so as not to need delay.
We will go ready armed before the children of Israel. Num.
- READY. n. f. Ready money. A low word.
Lord Strutt was not flush in ready, either to go to law, or clear old debts. Arbutnot's History of John Bull.
- REAFFIRMANCE. n. f. [re and affirmance.] Second confirmation.
Causes of deprivation are a conviction before the ordinary of a wilful maintaining any doctrine contrary to the thirty-nine articles, or a persisting therein without revocation of his error, or a reaffirmance after such revocation. Ayliffe.
- REAL. adj. [real, Fr. realis, Latin.]
1. Relating to things not persons; not personal.
Many are perfect in men's humours, that are not greatly capable of the real part of business; which is the constitution of one that hath studied men more than books. Bacon.
2. Not fictitious; not imaginary; true; genuine.
We do but describe an imaginary world, that is but little a-kin to the real one. Glanvill's Scops.
When I place an imaginary name at the head of a character, I examine every letter of it, that it may not bear any resemblance to one that is real. Addison.
3. In law, consisting of things immoveable, as land.
I am hastening to convert my small estate, that is personal, into real. Child's Discourse of Trade.
- REALGAR. n. f. A mineral.
Realgar or sandaracha is red arsenick. Harris.
Put realgar hot into the midst of the quicksilver, whereby it may be condensed as well from within as without. Bacon.
- REALITY. n. f. [realité, Fr. from real.]
1. Truth; verity; what is, not what merely seems.
I would have them well versed in the Greek and Latin poets, without which a man fancies that he understands a critic, when in reality he does not comprehend his meaning.
Addison's Spectator, N° 291.
2. The best accounts of the appearances of nature in any single instance human penetration can reach, comes infinitely short of its reality and internal constitution; for who can search out the Almighty's works to perfection? Cheyne.
3. Something intrinsically important; not merely matter of show.
Of that skill the more thou know'st,
The more she will acknowledge thee her head,
And to realities yield all her shows,
Made so adorn for thy delight the more. Milton.
- TO REALIZE. v. a. [realiser, Fr. from real.]
1. To bring into being or act.
Thus we realize what Archimedes had only in hypothesis, weighing a single grain against the globe of earth. Glanvill.
As a Diocesan, you are like to exemplify and realize every word of this discourse. South.
2. To convert money into land.
REALLY. adv. [from real.]
1. With actual existence.
There cannot be a more important case of conscience for men to be resolved in, than to know certainly how far God accepts the will for the deed, and how far he does not; and to be informed truly when men do really will a thing, and when they have really no power to do, what they have willed. South.
2. In truth; truly; not seemingly.
The understanding represents to the will things really evil, under the notion of good. South.

- These orators inflame the people, whose anger is really but a short fit of madness. Swift.
3. It is a slight corroboration of an opinion.
Why really fifty-five is somewhat old. Young.
  - REALM. n. f. [roialme, French.]
1. A kingdom; a king's dominion.
Is there any part of that realm, or any nation therein, which have not yet been subdued to the crown of England. Spenser.
They had gather'd a wife council to them
Of ev'ry realm, that did debate this business. Shakespeare.
A son whose worthy deeds
Raise him to be the second in that realm. Milton.
  2. Kingly government. This sense is not frequent.
Learn each small people's genius, policies,
The ant's republick, and the realm of bees. Pope.
  - REALTY. n. f. [a word peculiar, I believe, to Milton.] Really means not in this place reality in opposition to show, but loyalty; for the Italian Dictionary explains the adjective really by loyal. Pearce on Milton.
O heaven, that such resemblance of the highest Should yet remain, where faith and reality Remain not. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. vi.
  - REAM. n. f. [frame, Fr. riem, Dutch.] A bundle of quires, containing twenty quires.
All vain petitions mounting to the sky,
With reams abundant this abode supply. Pope.
  - TO REANIMATE. v. a. [re and animus, Lat.] To revive; to restore to life.
We are our reanimated ancestors, and antedate their resurrection. Glanvill's Scops.
The young man left his own body breathless on the ground, while that of the doe was reanimated. Speccator, N° 578.
  - TO REANNEK. v. a. [re and annek.] To annex again.
King Charles was not a little inflamed with an ambition to repurchase and reannek that dutchy. Bacon's Henry VII.
  - TO REAP. v. a. [reap, Saxon.]
1. To cut corn at harvest.
From Ireland come I with my strength,
And reap the harvest which that rascal sow'd. Shakespeare.
When ye reap the harvest, thou shalt not wholly reap the corners of thy field. Lev. xix. 9.
The hire of the labourers, which have reaped down your fields, is kept back by fraud. Ja. v. 5.
Is it fitting in this very field,
Where I so oft have reap'd, so oft have till'd,
That I should die for a deserter? Gay.
  2. To gather; to obtain.
They that love the religion which they profess, may have failed in choice, but yet they are sure to reap what benefit the same is able to afford. Hooker.
What furnish anger's this? how have I reap'd it? Shak.
This is a thing,
Which you might from relation likewise reap,
Being much spoke of. Shakespeare, Cymbeline.
Our sins being ripe, there was no preventing of God's justice from reaping that glory in our calamities, which we robbed him of in our prosperity. King Charles.
  - TO REAP. v. n. To harvest.
They that sow in tears, shall reap in joy. Psaln cxxvi. 5.
  - REAPER. n. f. [from reap.] One that cuts corn at harvest.
Your ships are not well mann'd,
Your mariners are muliters, people
Ingross'd by swift impress. Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleop.
From hungry reapers they their sheaves withhold. Sand.
Here Ceres' gifts in waving prospect stand,
And nodding tempt the joyful reaper's hand. Pope.
A thousand forms he wears,
And first a reaper from the field appears,
Sweating he walks, while loads of golden grain O'ercharge the shoulders of the seeming swain. Pope.
  - REAPINGHOOK. n. f. [reaping and hook.] A hook used to cut corn in harvest.
Some are brib'd to vow it looks
Most plainly done by thieves with reapinghooks. Dryden.
  - REAR. n. f. [arriere, French.]
1. The hinder troop of an army, or the hinder line of a fleet.
The rear admiral, an arch pirate, was afterwards slain with a great shot. Knolles's History of the Turks.
Argive chiefs
Fled from his well-known face, with wonted fear,
As when his thund'ring sword and pointed spear Drove headlong to their ships, and glean'd the rear. Dryd.
Snowy headed winter leads,
Yellow autumn brings the rear. Waller.
  2. The last class.
Coins I place in the rear, because made up of both the other. Pearbam.
  - REAR. adj. [hjerne, Saxon.]
1. Raw; half roasted; half fodder.
2. Early. A provincial word.
O'er yonder hill does scant the dawn appear,
Then why does Cuddy leave his cot to rear? Gay.

REA

- TO REAR. v. a. [aræpan, Saxon.]
1. To raise up.
All the people shouted with a loud voice, for the rearing up of the house of the Lord. 1 Esdr. v. 62.
Who now shall rear you to the sun, or rank
Your tribes. Milton.- 2. To lift up from a fall.
Down again the fell unto the ground,
But he her quickly rear'd up again. Par. Queen, b. i.
In adoration at his feet I fell Submits: he rear'd me. Milton.
- 3. To move upwards.
Up to a hill anon his steps he rear'd,
From whose high top to ken the prospect round. Milton.
- 4. To bring up to maturity.
No creature goeth to generate, whilst the female is busy in sitting or rearing her young. Bacon's Natural History.
They were a very hardy breed, and reared their young ones without any care. Mortimer's Husbandry.
They flourish'd long in tender bliss, and rear'd
A numerous offspring, lovely like themselves. Thomson.
- 5. To educate; to instruct.
He wants a father to protect his youth,
And rear him up to virtue. Southey.
They have in every town publick nurseries, where all parents, except cottagers and labourers, are obliged to send their infants to be reared and educated. Swift.
- 6. To exalt; to elevate.
Charity decent, modest, easy, kind,
Softens the high, and rears the abject mind. Prior.
- 7. To rouse; to stir up.
Into the naked woods he goes,
And seeks the tusky boar to rear,
With well-mouth'd hounds and pointed spear. Dryden.
- REARWARD. n. f. [from rear.]
1. The last troop.
He from the beginning began to be in the rearward, and before they left fighting, was too far off. Sidney.
The standard of Dan was the rearward of the camp. Num.
- 2. The end; the tail; a train behind.
Why follow'd not, when the said Tybalt's dead,
Thy father or thy mother?
But with a rearward following Tybalt's death,
Romeo is banished. Shakespeare, Romeo and Juliet.
- 3. The latter part. In contempt.
He was ever in the rearward of the fashion. Shakespeare.
- REARMOUSE. n. f. [more properly rermouse; hjerne, Saxon.]
The leather-winged bat.
Some war with rearmice for their leathern wings
To make my finall elves coats. Shakespeare.
Of flying filices, the wings are not feathers, but a thin kind of skin, like the wings of a bat or rearmouse. Abbot.
- TO REASCEND. v. n. [re and ascend.] To climb again.
When as the day the heaven doth adorn,
I wish that night the noyous day would end;
And when as night hath us of light forlorn,
I wish that day would shortly reascend. Spenser.
Taught by the heav'nly muse to venture down
The dark descent, and up to reascend.
These puffed legions, whose exile
Hath empty'd heav'n, shall fail to reascend,
Self-raisd, and repossess their native feat? Milton.
- TO REASCEND. v. a. To mount again.
When the god his fury had allay'd,
He mounts aloft, and reascends the skies. Addison.
- REASON. n. f. [raison, Fr. ratio, Lat.]
1. The power by which man deduces one proposition from another, or proceeds from premises to consequences; the rational faculty.
Reason is the director of man's will, discovering in action what is good; for the laws of well-doing are the dictates of right reason. Hooker, b. i. f. 7.
Though brutish that contest and foul,
When reason hath to deal with force; yet so
Most reason is that reason overcome. Milton.
Dim, as the borrow'd beams of moon and stars
To lonely, weary, wand'ring travellers,
Is reason to the soul: and as on high,
Those rowling fires discover but the sky,
Not light us here; so reason's glimmering ray
Was lent, not to assure our doubtful way,
But guide us upward to a better day. Dryden.
It would be well, if people would not lay so much weight on their own reason in matters of religion, as to think every thing impossible and absurd, which they cannot conceive:
how often do we contradict the right rules of reason in the whole course of our lives? reason itself is true and just, but the reason of every particular man is weak and wavering, perpetually swayed and turn'd by his interests, his passions and his vices. Swift's Miscellanies.
- 2. Cause; ground or principle.
Virtue and vice are not arbitrary things, but there is a natural and eternal reason for that goodness and virtue, and against vice and wickedness. Tillotson.

3. Cause efficient.
Spain is thin sown of people, partly by reason of the sterility of the soil, and partly their natives are exhausted by so many employments in such vast territories as they possess. Bac.
The reason of the motion of the balance in a wheel watch, is by the motion of the next wheel. Hale.
By reason of the sickness of a reverend prelate, I have been overruled to approach this place. South.
I have not observed equality of numbers in my verse;
partly by reason of my haste, but more especially because I would not have my sense a slave to syllables. Dryden.
4. Final cause.
Reason, in the English language, sometimes is taken for true and clear principles; sometimes for clear and fair deductions; sometimes for the cause, particularly the final cause: but here for a faculty in man. Locke.
5. Argument; ground of persuasion; motive.
I mask the business from the common eye
For fondly weighty reasons. Shakespeare, Macbeth.
If it be natural, ought we not rather to conclude, that there is some ground and reason for these fears, and that nature hath not planted them in us to no purpose. Tillotson.
6. Ratiocination; discursive power.
When the rates things, and moves from ground to ground,
The name of reason the obtains by this;
But when by reason she the truth hath found,
And standeth fixt, the understanding is. Davies.
7. Clearness of faculties.
Lovers and madmen have their seething brains,
Such shap'ing fantasies that apprehend
More than cool reason ever comprehends. Shakespeare.
When valour preys on reason,
It eats the sword it fights with. Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleop.
8. Right; justice.
I was promis'd on a time,
To have reason for my rhyme:
From that time unto this season,
I receiv'd nor rhyme nor reason. Spenser.
Are you in earnest?
Ay, and resolv'd withal
To do myself this reason and this right. Shakespeare.
The papists ought in reason to allow them all the excuses they make use of for themselves; such as an invincible ignorance, oral tradition and authority. Stillingfleet.
Let it drink deep in thy most vital part;
Strike home, and do me reason in thy heart. Dryden.
9. Reasonable claim; just practice.
God brings good out of evil; and therefore it were but reason we should trust God to govern his own world, and wait till the change cometh, or the reason be discovered. Taylor.
Conscience, not acting by law, is a boundless presumptuous thing; and, for any one by virtue thereof, to challenge himself a privilege of doing what he will, and of being unaccountable, is in all reason too much, either for man or angel. South.
A severe reflection Montaigne has made on princes, that we ought not in reason to have any expectations of favour from them. Dryden's Dedication to Aurengzebe.
We have as great assurance that there is a God, as the nature of the thing to be proved is capable of, and as we could in reason expect to have. Tillotson's Preface.
When any thing is proved by as good arguments as a thing of that kind is capable of, we ought not in reason to doubt of its existence. Tillotson.
10. Rationale; just account.
To render a reason of an effect or phenomenon, is to deduce it from something else more known than itself. Boyle.
11. Moderation; moderate demands.
The most probable way of bringing France to reason, would be by the making an attempt upon the Spanish West Indies, and by that means to cut off all communication with this great source of riches. Addison.
- TO REASON. v. n. [raisonner, Fr.]
1. To argue rationally; to deduce consequences justly from premises.
No man, in the strength of the first grace, can merit the second; for reason they do not, who think so; unless a beggar, by receiving one alms, can merit another. South.
Ideas, as ranked under names, are those, that for the most part men reason of within themselves, and always those which they commune about with others. Locke.
Every man's reasoning and knowledge is only about the ideas existing in his own mind; and our knowledge and reasoning about other things is only as they correspond with those our particular ideas. Locke.
Love is not to be reason'd down, or lost
In high ambition. Addison.
In the lonely grove,
'Twas there just and good he reason'd strong,
Clear'd some great truth. Tickell.
2. To debate; to discourse; to talk; to take or give an account. Not in use.
Reason with the fellow,
Before you punish him, where he heard this. Shakespeare.

I reason'd with a Frenchman yesterday,
Who told me in the narrow seas,
There miscarried a vessel of our country. Shakefp.
Stand still, that I may reason with you of all the righteous acts of the Lord. 1 Sam. xii. 7.

3. To raise disquisitions; to make enquiries.
Jesús, perceiving their thoughts, said, what reason ye in your hearts? Luke v. 22.

They reason'd high
Of providence, foreknowledge, will and fate. Milton.
Already by thy reasoning this I guess,
Who art to lead thy offspring; and supposest,
That bodies bright and greater should not serve
The less not bright. Milton.
Down reason then, at least vain reasoning down. Milt.

To REA'SON. v. a. To examine rationally. This is a French mode of speech.
When they are clearly discovered, well digested, and well reasoned in every part, there is beauty in such a theory. Burn.

REA'SONABLE. adj. [raison, Fr.]
1. Having the faculty of reason; endued with reason.
She perceived her only son lay hurt, and that his hurt was so deadly, as that already his life had lost use of the reasonable and almost sensible part. Sidney.

2. Acting, speaking or thinking rationally.
The parliament was dissolved, and gentlemen furnished with such forces, as were held sufficient to hold in bridle either the malice or rage of reasonable people. Hayward.

3. Just; rational; agreeable to reason.
A law may be reasonable in itself, although a man does not allow it, or does not know the reason of the lawgivers. Swift.

4. Not immoderate.
Let all things be thought upon,
That may with reasonable swiftness add
More feathers to our wings. Shakefp. Henry V.

5. Tolerable; being in mediocrity.
I could with reasonable good manner receive the salutation of her and of the prince's Pamela, doing them yet no further reverence than one prince's oweth to another. Sidney.
A good way distant from the nigra rupes, there are four feveral lands of reasonable quantity. Abbot's Descrip. of the World.
Notwithstanding these defects, the English colonies maintained themselves in a reasonable good estate, as long as they retained their own ancient laws. Davies on Ireland.

REA'SONABLENESS. n. f. [from reasonable.]
1. The faculty of reason.
2. Agreeableness to reason.
They thought the work would be better done, if those, who had satisfied themselves with the reasonableness of what they wish, would undertake the converting and disposing of other men. Clarendon.
The passive reason, which is more properly reasonableness, is that order and congruity which is impressed upon the thing thus wrought; as in a watch, the whole frame and contexture of it carries a reasonableness in it, the passive impression of the reason or intellectual idea that was in the artist. Hale.

3. Moderation.
REA'SONABLY. adv. [from reasonable.]
1. Agreeably to reason.
Chaucer makes Arcite violent in his love, and unjust in the pursuit of it; yet when he came to die, he made him think more reasonably. Dryden's Preface to Fables.

2. Moderately; in a degree reaching to mediocrity.
Some man reasonably studied in the law, should be persuaded to go thither as chancellor. Bacon's Advice to Villiers.
If we can by industry make our deaf and dumb persons reasonably perfect in the language and pronunciation, he may be also capable of the same privilege of understanding by the eye what is spoken. Holder's Elements of Speech.

REA'SONER. n. f. [raisonneur, Fr. from reason.] One who reasons; an arguer.
Due reverence pay
To learn'd Epicurus; see the way
By which this reasoner of so high renown
Moves through th' eclips'd road the rolling sun. Blackm.
The terms are loose and undefined; and what less becomes a fair reasoner, he puts wrong and invidious names on every thing to colour a false way of arguing. Addison.
Those reasoners, who employ so much of their zeal for the upholding the balance of power in Christendom, by their practices are endeavouring to destroy it at home. Swift.

REA'SONING. n. f. [from reason.] Argument.
Those who would make use of solid arguments and strong reasonings to a reader of so delicate a turn, would be like that foolish people, who worshiped a fly, and sacrificed an ox to it.
Addison's Freeholder, No 32.

REA'SONLESS. adj. [from reason.] Void of reason.
This proffer is absurd and reasonless. Shakefp. Hen. VI.
Is it
Her true perfection, or my false transgression,
That makes me reasonless to reason thus? Shakefp.
That they wholly direct the reasonless mind, I am resolv'd;
for all those which were created mortal, as birds and beasts, are left to their natural appetites. Raleigh's Hist. of the World.

REB

These reasons in love's law have past for good,
Though fond and reasonless to some. Milton's Agonistes.

To REASSEMBLE. v. a. [re and assemble.] To collect anew.
There reassembling our afflicted pow'rs,
Consult how to offend our enemy. Milton.

To REASSE'RT. v. a. [re and assert.] To assert anew; to maintain after suspension or cessation.
His steps I followed, his doctrine I reasserted. Atterbury.

Young Orestes grown
To manly years should reassert the throne. Pope.

To REASSU'ME. v. a. [reassume, Lat. re and assumere.] To resume; to take again.
To him the son return'd
Into his blissful bosom reassum'd,
In glory as of old. Milton.
Nor only on the Trojans fell this doom,
Their hearts at last the vanquish'd reassum'd. Denham.
For this he reassumes the nod,
While Semele commands the god. Prior.
After Henry VIII. had reassumed the supremacy, a statute was made, by which all doctors of the civil law might be made chancellors. Ayliffe's Parergon.

To REASSU'RE. [reassure, Fr.] To free from fear; to restore from terror.
They rose with fear,
Till dauntless Pallas reassur'd the rest. Dryden.

REATE. n. f. A kind of long small grass that grows in water, and complicates itself together.
Let them lie dry six months to kill the water-weeds; as water-lilies, canocks, reate and bulrushes. Walton.

To REAVE. v. a. pret. reft. [reapian, Saxon; whence to berave.]
1. To take away by stealth or violence. An obsolete word.
Dismounting from his lofty steed,
He to him leapt, in mind to reave his life. Spenser.
Some make his meafhy bed, but reave his rest. Carver.
Who can be bound by any solemn vow,
To do a murd'rous deed, to rob a man,
To force a spotless virgin's chastity,
To reave the orphan of his patrimony,
And have no other reason for his wrong,
But that he was bound by a solemn oath. Shakefp. Hen. VI.

2. It was used as well in a good as bad sense.
They sought my troubled sense how to deceive
With talk, that might unquiet fancies reave. Hubbard.
Each succeeding time addeth or reaveth goods and evils, according to the occasions itself produceth. Carver.

To REBAPTIZE. v. a. [rebaptizer, Fr. re and baptize.] To baptize again.
Understanding that the rites of the church were observed, he approved of their baptism, and would not suffer them to be rebaptized. Ayliffe's Parergon.

REBAPTIZATION. n. f. [rebaptisation, Fr. from rebaptize.]
Renewal of baptism.
In maintenance of rebaptization, their arguments are built upon this, that heretics are not any part of the church of Christ. Hooker, b. iii. f. i.

To REBA'TE. v. n. [rebatte, Fr.] To blunt; to beat to obtuseness; to deprive of keenness.
He doth rebatte and blunt his natural edge
With profits of the mind, study and fast. Shakefp.
The icy goat, the crab which square the scales;
With those of aries trine consent to hate
The scales of libra, and her rays rebatte. Creech.
He modifies his first severe decree;
The keener edge of battle to rebatte,
The troops for honour fighting, not for hate. Dryden.
My flagging soul flies under her own pitch,
My senses too are dull and stupify'd,
Their edge rebatte. Dryden's Don Sebastian.
Their innocence unfeign'd long joys afford
To the honest nuptial bed, and, in the wane
Of life, rebatte the miseries of age. Philips.

REBECK. n. f. [rebec, Fr. rebecca, Italian.] A three stringed fiddle.
When the merry bells ring round,
And the jocund rebeks sound,
To many a youth and many a maid,
Dancing in the checker'd shade. Milton.

REBEL. n. f. [rebelle, Fr. rebellis, Lat.] One who opposes lawful authority.
The merciless Macdonel
Worthy to be a rebel; for to that
The multiplying villainies of nature
Do swarm upon him. Shakefp. Macbeth.
The rebels there are up,
And put the Englishmen unto the sword. Shakefp.
Shall man from nature's sanction stray,
A rebel to her rightful sway. Fenton.

To REBEL. v. n. [rebelle, Lat.] To rise in opposition against lawful authority.
Boys, immature in knowledge,
Pawn their experience to their present pleasure,
And so rebel to judgment. Shakefp. Ant. and Cleopatra.

REB

If they perceive dissention in our looks,
How will their grudging stomachs be provok'd
To wilful disobedience, and rebel? Shakefp. Henry VI.
Such smiling rogues as these foeth every passion,
That in the nature of their lords rebels;
Bring oil to fire. Shakefp. King Lear.
There was a time, when all the body's members Rebell'd against the belly. Shakefp. Coriolanus.
Arm'd with thy might, rid heav'n of these rebell'd. Milt.
How could my hand rebel against my heart?
How could your heart rebel against your reason? Dryden.
Part of the angels rebelled against God, and thereby lost their happy state. Locke.

REBEL'LER. n. f. [from rebel.] One that rebels. Diſt.

REBEL'LION. n. f. [rebellion, Fr. rebellio, Lat. from rebel.]
Insurrection against lawful authority.
He was victorious in rebellions and seditions of people. Bac.
Adam's sin, or the curse upon it, did not deprive him of his rule, but left the creatures to the rebellion or sedition.
Bacon's Holy War.

Raz'd by rebellion from the books of life. Milton.

REBEL'LOUS. adj. [from rebel.] Opponent to lawful authority.
From the day that thou didst depart out of Egypt, until ye came unto this place, ye have been rebellious against the Lord. Deutr. ix. 7.
This our son is stubborn and rebellious, he will not obey our voice. Deutr. xxi. 20.

REBEL'LOUSLY. adv. [from rebellious.] In opposition to lawful authority.
When one shewed him where a nobleman, that had rebel-lously born arms against him, lay very honourably intomb'd, and advised the king to deface the monument; he said, no, no, but I would all the rest of mine enemies were as honourably intomb'd. Camden's Remains.

REBEL'LOUSNESS. n. f. [from rebellious.] The quality of being rebellious.
To REBEL'LOW. v. n. [re and bellow.] To bellow in return;
to echo back a loud noise.
He loudly bray'd with beastly yelling sound,
That all the fields rebellowed again. Fairy Queen.
The resifting air the thunder broke,
The cave rebellow'd, and the temple shook. Dryden.
From whence were heard, rebellowing to the main,
The roars of lions. Dryden's Aeneis.

REBOA'TION. n. f. [reboas, Lat.] The return of a loud bel-lowing sound.
To REBOUND. v. n. [rebondir, Fr. re and bound.] To spring back; to be reberberated; to fly back, in consequence of motion impressed and resisted by a greater power.
Whether it were a roaring voice of most savage wild beasts, or a rebouncing echo from the hollow mountains. Wisd. xvii.
It with rebouncing fuge the bars assail'd. Milton.
Life and death are in the power of the tongue, and that not only directly with regard to the good or ill we may do to others, but reflexively with regard to what may rebound to ourselves. Government of the Tongue.
Bodies which are absolutely hard, or so soft as to be void of elasticity, will not rebound from one another: impenetrability makes them only stop. Newton's Opticks.
She bounding from the shelly shore,
Round the descending nymph the waves rebouncing roar. Po.

To REBOUND. v. a. To reberberate; to beat back.
All our invectives, at their suppos'd errors, fall back with a rebounced force upon our own real ones. Decay of Piety.
Silenus sung, the vales his voice rebounced,
And carry to the skies the sacred sound. Dryden.
Flow'rs, by the soft South West
Open'd, and gather'd by religious hands,
Rebound their sweets from th' odoriferous pavement. Prior.

REBOUND. n. f. [from the verb.] The act of flying back in consequence of motion resisted; restitution.
I do feel,
By the rebound of yours, a grief that shoots
My very heart. Shakefp. Antony and Cleopatra.
If you strike a ball sidelong, not full upon the surface, the rebound will be as much the contrary way; whether there be any such resilience in echoes may be tried. Bacon.
The weapon with unerring fury flew,
At his left shoulder aim'd: nor entrance found;
But back, as from a rock, with swift rebound, Harmless return'd. Dryden.

REBU'FF. n. f. [rebuffade, Fr. rebuffe, Italian.] Repercussion; quick and sudden resistance.
By ill chance
The strong rebuff of some tumultuous cloud,
Instinct with fire and nitre, hurried him
As many miles aloft. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ii.

To REBU'FF. v. a. [from the noun.] To beat back; to oppose with sudden violence.
To REBU'LD. v. a. [re and build.] To reedify; to restore from demolition; to repair.

REC

The fines imposed there were the more questioned, and re-pined against, because they were assigned to the rebuilding and repairing of St. Paul's church. Clarendon.

Fine is the secret, delicate the art,
To raise the shades of heroes to our view;
Rebuild fall'n empires, and old time renew. Tickell.

REBU'KABLE. adj. [from rebuke.] Worthy of reprehension.
Rebukable
And worthy shameful check it were, to stand
On mere mechanick compliment. Shakefp. Ant. and Cleop.

To REBU'KE. v. a. [reboucher, Fr.] To chide; to reprehend;
to repress by oburgation.
I am atham'd; does not the stone rebuke me,
For being more stone than it? Shakefp. Winter's Tale.
He was rebuked for his iniquity; the dumb ass, speaking with man's voice, forbade the madness of the prophet. 2 Pet.
My son, despite not thou the chastening of the Lord, nor faint when thou art rebuked of him. Heb. xii. 15.
The proud he tam'd, the penitent he cheer'd,
Nor to rebuke the rich offender fear'd. Dryden.

REBU'KE. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. Reprehension; chiding expression; oburgation:
Why bear you these rebukes, and answer not? Shakefp.
If he will not yield,
Rebuke and dread correction wait on us,
And they shall do their office. Shakefp. Henry IV.
The channels of waters were seen; at thy rebuke, O Lord, at the blast of the breath of thy nostrils. Psaln xviii. 15.
Thy rebuke hath broken my heart; I am full of heaviness.
Psaln lxxix. 21.
The rebukes and chiding to children, should be in grave and dispassionate words. Locke.
Shall Cibber's son, without rebuke, Swear like a lord? Pope.
Should vice expect to 'scape rebuke,
Because its owner is a duke? Swift's Miscellanies.

2. In low language, it signifies any kind of check.
He gave him so terrible a rebuke upon the forehead with his heel, that he laid him at his length. L'Estrange.

REBU'KER. n. f. [from rebuke.] A chider; a reprehender.
The revolvers are profound to make slaughter, though I have been a rebuker of them all. Holbe v. 2.

Some citizens, wanting arms, have coined themselves certain devices alluding to their names, which we call rebus:
Master Juggle the printer, in many of his books, took, to express his name, a nightingale sitting in a bush with a scrole in her mouth, wherein was written juggle, juggle, juggle. Peac.

To REBU'T. v. n. [rebuter, Fr.] To retire back. Obsolete.
Themselves too rudely rigorous,
Astonied with the stroke of their own hand,
Do back rebut, and each to other yielded land. Fa. Queen.

REBU'TTER. n. f. An answer to a rejoinder.
To RECA'LL. v. a. [re and call.] To call back; to call again;
to revoke.
They who recall the church unto that which was at the first, must set bounds unto their speeches. Hooker, b. iv. f. 2.
If Henry were recall'd to life again,
These news would cause him once more yield the ghost. Shakefp. Henry VI. p. i.
Neglected long, she let the secret rest,
Till lov'd recall'd it to her lab'ring breast. Dryden.
It is strange the soul should never once recall over any of its pure native ideas, before it borrowed any thing from the body; never any other ideas, but what derive their original from that union. Locke.
To the churches, wherein they were ordained, they might of right be recalled as to their proper church, under pain of excommunication. Ayliffe's Parergon.
It is necessary to recall to the reader's mind, the desire Ulysses has to reach his own country. Bryson's Notes on Odys.
If princes, whose dominions lie contiguous, be forced to draw from those armies which act against France, we must hourly expect having those troops recalled, which they now leave with us in the midst of a siege. Swift's Miscellanies.

RECA'LL. n. f. [from the verb.] Revocation; act or power of calling back.
Other decrees
Against thee are gone forth, without recall. Milton.
'Tis done, and since 'tis done, 'tis past recall;
And since 'tis past recall, must be forgotten. Dryden.

To RECA'NT. v. a. [recanto, Lat.] To retract; to recall;
to contradict what one has once said or done.
He shall do this, or else I do recant.
The pardon that I late pronounced. Shakefp. Mer. of Ven.
Ease would recant vows made in pain. Milton.
If it be thought, that the praise of a translation consists in adding new beauties, I shall be willing to recant. Dryden.
That the legislature should have power to change the succession, whenever the necessities of the kingdom require, is so useful towards preserving our religion and liberty, that I know not how to recant. Swift.

RECANTA'TION.

REC

RECANTATION. n. f. [from recant.] Retraction; declaration contradictory to a former declaration.

She could not see means to join this recantation to the former vow. Sidney, b. ii.

The poor man was imprisoned for this discovery, and forced to make a publick recantation. Stillingfleet.

RECA'NTER. n. f. [from recant.] One who recants.

The publick body, which doth seldom

Play the recanter, feeling in itself

A lack of Timon's aid, hath sense withal

Of its own fall, refraining aid to Timon. Shakefp.

TO RECAPITULATE. v. a. [recapituler, Fr. re and capitulum, Lat.] To repeat again distinctly; to detail again.

Hylobares judiciously and resentfully recapitulates your main reasonings. More's Divine Dialogues.

I have been forced to recapitulate these things, because mankind is not more liable to deceit, than it is willing to continue in a pleasing error. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

RECAPITULATION. n. f. [from recapitulate.] Detail repeated; distinct repetition of the principal points.

He maketh a recapitulation of the christian churches; among the rest he addeth the life of Eden by name. Raleigh.

Instead of raising any particular uses from the point that has been delivered, let us make a brief recapitulation of the whole. South.

RECAPITULATORY. adj. [from recapitulate.] Repeating again. Recapitulatory exercises. Garretson.

TO RECA'RY. v. a. [re and carry.] To carry back.

When the Turks besieged Malta or Rhodes, pigeons carried and recarried letters. Walton's Angler.

TO RECE'DE. v. n. [recede, Latin.]

1. To fall back; to retreat.

A deaf noise of sounds that never cease,

Confus'd and chiding, like the hollow roar

Of tides, receding from th' infulted shoar. Dryden.

Ye doubts and fears!

Scatter'd by winds recede, and wild in forests rove. Prior.

All bodies, moved circularly, have a perpetual endeavour to recede from the center, and every moment would fly out in right lines, if they were not violently restrained by contiguous matter. Bentley.

2. To desist.

I can be content to recede much from my own interests and personal rights. King Charles.

They hoped that their general assembly would be persuaded to depart from some of their demands; but that, for the present, they had not authority to recede from any one proposition. Clarendon, b. viii.

RECEP'T. n. f. [receptum, Latin.]

1. The act of receiving.

Villain, thou didst deny the gold's receipt,

And told me of a mistress. Shakefp. Com. of Err.

It must be done upon the receipt of the wound, before the patient's spirits be overheated. Wiseham's Surgery.

The joy of a monarch for the news of a victory must not be exprest like the ecstasy of a harlequin, on the receipt of a letter from his mistress. Dryden.

2. The place of receiving.

Jesus saw Matthew sitting at the receipt of custom. Matt.

3. [Recepte, Fr.] A note given, by which money is acknowledged to have been received.

4. Reception; admission.

It is of things heavenly an universal declaration, working in them, whose hearts God inspireth with the due consideration thereof, an habit or disposition of mind, whereby they are made fit vessels, both for the receipt and delivery of whatsoever spiritual perfection. Hooker, b. v. f. 37.

5. Reception; welcome.

The same words in my lady Philoclea's mouth might have had a better grace, and perchance have found a gentler receipt. Sidney.

6. [From recipe.] Prescription of ingredients for any composition.

On's bed of death

Many receipts he gave me, chiefly one

Of his old experience th' only darling. Shakefp.

That Medea could make old men young again, was nothing else, but that, from knowledge of simples, she had a receipt to make white hair black. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Wife leeches will not vain receipts obtrude,

While growing pains pronounce the humours crude. Dryd.

Some dryly plain, without invention's aid,

Write dull receipts how poems may be made. Pope.

Scribonius found the receipt in a letter wrote to Tiberius, and was never able to procure the receipt during the emperor's life. Arbutnot on Coins.

RECEIVABLE. adj. [recevabile, Fr. from receive.] Capable of being received. Dist.

TO RECEIVE. v. a. [recevoir, Fr. recepis, Lat.]

1. To take or obtain any thing as due.

If by this crime he owes the law his life,

Why, let the war receive 't in valiant gore. Shakefp.

REC

A certain nobleman went into a far country, to receive for himself a kingdom, and return. Luke xiv. 12.

2. To take or obtain from another.

Ye shall receive of me gifts. Dan. ii. 6.

Though I should receive a thousand shekels of silver in mine hand, yet would I not put forth mine hand against the king's son. 2 Sam. xviii. 12.

What? shall we receive good at the hands of God, and shall we not receive evil? Job ii. 10.

To them hast thou poured a drink-offering? should I receive comfort in these? 1/1. lvi. 6.

He that doeth wrong, shall receive for the wrong done;

and there is no respect of persons. Col. iii. 25.

They lived with the friendship and equality of brethren;

received no laws from one another, but lived separately. Locke.

3. To take any thing communicated.

Put all in writing that thou givest out, and receivest in.

Ecclef. xlii. 7.

Draw general conclusions from every particular they meet with: these make little true benefit of history; nay, being of forward and active spirits, receive more harm by it. Locke.

The idea of solidity we receive by our touch. Locke.

The same inability will every one find, who shall go about to fashion in his understanding any simple idea, not received in by his senses or by reflection. Locke.

To conceive the ideas we receive from sensation, consider them, in reference to the different ways, whereby they make their approaches to our minds. Locke.

4. To embrace intellectually.

We have let it down as a law, to examine things to the bottom, and not to receive upon credit, or reject upon impro-babilities. Bacon's Natural History.

In an equal indifferency for all truth; I mean the receiving it, in the love of it, as truth; and in the examination of our principles, and not receiving any for such, till we are fully convinced of their certainty, consists the freedom of the understanding. Locke.

5. To allow.

Long received custom forbidding them to do as they did,

there was no excuse to justify their act; unless, in the scripture, they could shew some law, that did licence them thus to break a received custom. Hooker, b. ii. f. 5.

Will it not be receiv'd,

When we have mark'd with blood those sleepy two,

And us'd their very daggers; that they have don't?

—Who dares receive it other? Shakefp. Macbeth.

Left any should think that any thing in this number eight creates the diapason; this computation of eight is rather a thing received, than any true computation. Bacon.

6. To admit.

When they came to Jerusalem, they were received of the church. Acts xv. 4.

Thou shalt guide me with thy counsel, and afterward receive me to glory. Psaln lxxiii. 24.

Let her be shut out from the camp seven days, and after that received in again. Numb. xii. 14.

Free converse with persons of different sects will enlarge our charity towards others, and incline us to receive them into all the degrees of unity and affection, which the word of God requires. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

7. To take as into a vessel.

He was taken up, and a cloud received him out of their sight. Acts i. 9.

8. To take into a place or state.

After the Lord had spoken, he was received up into heaven, and sat on the right hand of God. Mar. xvi. 19.

9. To conceive in the mind; to take intellectually.

To one of your receiving,

Enough is shewn. Shakefp.

10. To entertain as a guest.

Abundance fit to honour, and receive

Our heav'nly stranger. Milton.

RECEIVEDNESS. n. f. [from received.] General allowance.

Others will, upon account of the receivedness of the proposed opinion, think it rather worth to be examined, than acquiesced in. Boyle.

RECEIVER. n. f. [receveur, Fr. from receive.]

1. One to whom any thing is communicated by another.

All the learnings that his time could make him receiver of,

he took as we do air. Shakefp. Cymbeline.

She from whose influence all impression came,

But by receivers impotencies lame. Donne.

2. One to whom any thing is given or paid.

There is a receiver, who alone handleth the monies. Bacon.

In all works of liberality, something more is to be considered, besides the occasion of the givers; and that is the occasional of the receivers. Sprat.

Gratitude is a virtue, disposing the mind to an inward sense, and an outward acknowledgement of a benefit received, together with a readiness to return the same, as the occasions of the doer shall require, and the abilities of the receiver extend to. South.

8

TO RECEIVE. v. a. [recevoir, Fr. recepis, Lat.]

1. To take or obtain any thing as due.

If by this crime he owes the law his life,

Why, let the war receive 't in valiant gore. Shakefp.

8

TO RECEIVE. v. a. [recevoir, Fr. recepis, Lat.]

1. To take or obtain any thing as due.

If by this crime he owes the law his life,

Why, let the war receive 't in valiant gore. Shakefp.

8

TO RECEIVE. v. a. [recevoir, Fr. recepis, Lat.]

1. To take or obtain any thing as due.

If by this crime he owes the law his life,

Why, let the war receive 't in valiant gore. Shakefp.

8

TO RECEIVE. v. a. [recevoir, Fr. recepis, Lat.]

1. To take or obtain any thing as due.

If by this crime he owes the law his life,

Why, let the war receive 't in valiant gore. Shakefp.

8

TO RECEIVE. v. a. [recevoir, Fr. recepis, Lat.]

1. To take or obtain any thing as due.

If by this crime he owes the law his life,

Why, let the war receive 't in valiant gore. Shakefp.

8

TO RECEIVE. v. a. [recevoir, Fr. recepis, Lat.]

1. To take or obtain any thing as due.

If by this crime he owes the law his life,

Why, let the war receive 't in valiant gore. Shakefp.

REC

If one third of the money in trade were locked up, land- holders must receive one third less for their goods; a less quan- tity of money by one third being to be distributed amongst an equal number of receivers. Locke.

Wood's halfpence will be offered for six a penny, and the necessary receivers will be losers of two thirds in their pay. Sw.

3. One who partakes of the blessed sacrament.

The signification and sense of the sacrament dispose the spir- it of the receiver to admit the grace of the spirit of God there consigned. Taylor's Worthly Communicant.

4. One who cooperates with a robber, by taking the goods which he steals.

This is a great cause of the maintenance of thieves, know- ing their receivers always ready; for were there no receivers, there would be no thieves. Spenser's State of Ireland.

5. The vessel into which spirits are emitted from the still.

These liquors, which the wide receiver fill,

Prepar'd with labour, and refin'd with skill,

Another course to distant parts begin. Blackmore.

Alkaline spirits run in veins down the sides of the receiver in distillations, which will not take fire. Arbutnot.

6. The vessel of the air pump, out of which the air is drawn, and which therefore receives any body on which experiments are tried.

The air that in exhausted receivers of air pumps is exhaled from minerals, is as true as to elasticity and density or rare-faction, as that we respire in. Bentley.

TO RECELEBRATE. v. a. [re and celebrate.] To celebrate anew.

French air and English verse here wedded lie:

Who did this knot compose,

Again hath brought the lily to the rose;

And with their chained dance,

RECE'NCY. n. f. [recens, Lat.] Newness; new state.

A schirrus in its recency, whilst it is in its augment, requireth milder applications than the confirmed one. Wiseham.

RECE'NSION. n. f. [recensio, Lat.] Enumeration; review.

In this recension of monthly flowers, it is to be understood from its first appearing to its final withering. Evelyn's Kalen.

RECE'NT. adj. [recens, Latin.]

1. New; not of long existence.

The ancients were of opinion, that those parts, where

Egypt now is, were formerly sea, and that a considerable portion of that country was recent, and formed out

REC

RECK'SION. n. f. [recessio, Lat.] The act of retreating.
To RECHARGE. v. a. [recharger, Fr. re and charge.] To change again.

Those endued with foresight, work with facility; others are perpetually changing and recharging their work. Dryden.
To RECHARGE. v. a. [recharger, Fr. re and charge.]

1. To accuse in return.
The fault, that we find with them, is, that they over-much abridge the church of her power in these things: whereupon they recharge us, as if in these things we gave the church a liberty, which hath no limits or bounds. Hooker.

2. To attack anew.
They charge, recharge, and all along the sea

They drive, and squander the huge Belgian fleet. Dryden.
RECHARGE. n. f. Among hunters, a lesson which the hunt-mans winds on the horn, when the hounds have lost their game, to call them back from pursuing a counterfence. Bail.

That a woman conceived me, I thank her; but that I will have a recharge winded in my forehead, or hang my bugle in an invisible baldrick, all women shall pardon me. Shakespeare.

RECIDIVATION. n. f. [recidivus, Lat.] Backsliding; falling again.

Our renewed obedience is still most indispensably required, though mixed with much of weakness, frailties, recidivations, to make us capable of pardon. Hammond's Pract. Cat.

RECIDIVOUS. adj. [recidivus, Lat.] Subject to fall again.

RECIPE. n. f. [recipe, Lat. the term used by physicians, when they direct ingredients.] A medical prescription.

I should enjoin you travel; for absence doth in a kind remove the cause, and answers the physicians first recipe, vomiting and purging; but this would be too harsh. Suckling.

The apothecary train is wholly blind,

From files a random recipe they take,

And many deaths of one prescription make. Dryden.

RECIPIENT. n. f. [recipiens, Latin.]

1. The receiver; that to which any thing is communicated.

Though the images, or whatever else is the cause of sense, may be alike as from the object, yet may the representations be varied according to the nature of the recipient. Glanvill.

2. [Recipient, Fr.] The vessel into which spirits are driven by the still.

The form of sound words, dissolved by chymical preparation, ceases to be nutritive; and after all the labours of the alembick, leaves in the recipient a fretting corrosive. D. of Pisa.

RECIPROCAL. adj. [reciprocus, Lat. reciprocus, Fr.]

1. Acting in vicissitude; alternate.

Corruption is reciprocal to generation; and they two are as nature's two boundaries, and guides to life and death. Bacon.

What if that light,

To the terrestrial moon be as a star,

Enlightning her by day, as she by night,

This earth? reciprocal, if land be there,

Fields and inhabitants. Milton.

2. Mutual; done by each to each.

Where there's no hope of a reciprocal aid, there can be no reason for the mutual obligation. L'Estrange.

In reciprocal duties, the failure on one side justifies not a failure on the other. Clarissa.

3. Mutually interchangeable.

These two rules will render a definition reciprocal with the thing defined; which, in the schools, signifies, that the definition may be used in the place of the thing defined. Watts.

4. In geometry, reciprocal proportion is, when, in four numbers, the fourth number is so much lesser than the second, as the third is greater than the first, and vice versa. Harris.

According to the laws of motion, if the bulk and activity of aliment and medicines are in reciprocal proportion, the effect will be the same. Arbutnot on Aliments.

RECIPROCALLY. adv. [from reciprocal.] Mutually; interchangeably.

His mind and place

Infesting one another reciprocally. Shakespeare. Henry VIII.

Make the bodies appear enlightened by the shadows which bound the light, which cause it to repose for some space of time; and reciprocally the shadows may be made sensible by enlightening your ground. Dryden.

If the distance be about the hundredth part of an inch, the water will rise to the height of about an inch; and if the distance be greater or less in any proportion, the height will be reciprocally proportional to the distance very nearly: for the attractive force of the glasses is the same, whether the distance between them be greater or less; and the weight of the water drawn up is the same, if the height of it be reciprocally proportional to the height of the glasses. Newton's Opticks.

Those two particles do reciprocally affect each other with the same force and vigour, as they would do at the same distance in any other situation. Bentley.

RECIPROCALNESS. n. f. [from reciprocal.] Mutual return; alternateness.

The reciprocalness of the injury ought to allay the displeasure at it. Decay of Piety.

To RECIPROCATE. v. n. [reciprocus, Lat. reciprocus, Fr.]

To act interchangeably; to alternate.

One brawny smith the puffing bellows plies,

And draws, and blows reciprocating air. Dryden.

From whence the quick reciprocating breath,

The lobe adhesive, and the sweat of death. Sevel.

RECIPROCATION. n. f. [reciprocatio, from reciprocus, Latin.]

Alteration; action interchanged.

Bodies may be altered by heat, and yet no such reciprocation of rarefaction, condensation and separation. Bacon.

That Aristotle drowned himself in Euripus, as despairing to resolve the cause of its reciprocation or ebb and flow seven times a day, is generally believed. Brown.

Where the bottom of the sea is owze or sand, it is by the motion of the waters, so far as the reciprocation of the sea extends to the bottom, brought to a level. Rey.

The systole resembles the forcible bending of a spring, and the diastole its flying out again to its natural size: what is the principal efficient of this reciprocation? Rey.

RECISION. n. f. [recisus, Lat.] The act of cutting off.

RECITAL. n. f. [from recite.]

1. Repetition; rehearsal.

The last are repetitions and recitals of the first. Denham.

This often sets him on empty boasts, and betrays him into vain fantastick recitals of his own performances. Addison.

2. Enumeration.

To make the rough recital aptly chime,

Or bring the fumes of Gallia's loss to rhyme,

Is mighty hard. Prior.

RECITATION. n. f. [from recite.] Repetition; rehearsal.

If menaces of scripture fall upon men's persons, if they are but the recitations and descriptions of God's decreed wrath, and those decrees and that wrath have no respect to the actual sins of men; why should terrors restrain me from sin, when present advantage invites me to it? Hammond.

He used philosophical arguments and recitations. Temple.

RECITATIVE. n. f. [from recite.] A kind of tuneful pronunciation; more musical than common speech, and less than song; chaunt.

He introduced the examples of moral virtue, writ in verse, and performed in recitative music. Dryden.

By singing peers upheld on either hand,

Then thus in quaint recitative spoke. Dumcald, b. iv.

To RECITE. v. a. [recito, Lat. reciter, Fr.] To rehearse; to repeat; to enumerate; to tell over.

While Telephus's youthful charms,

His rosy neck, and winding arms,

With endless rapture you recite,

And in the tender name delight. Addison.

The thoughts of gods let Granville's verse recite,

And bring the scenes of op'ning fate to light. Pope.

If we will recite nine hours in ten,

You lose your patience. Pope's Epistles of Horace.

RECITE. n. f. [recit, Fr. from the verb.] Recital. Not in use.

This added to all former recites or observations of long-lived races, makes it easy to conclude, that health and long life are the blessings of the poor as well as rich. Temple.

To RECK. v. n. [reccan, Saxon.] To care; to heed; to mind; to rate at much; to be in care. Out of use. Reck is still retained in Scotland.

Thou'st but a lazy loorde,

And reck'st much of thy swinke,

That with fond terms and wile's words,

To bleer mine eyes do'st think. Sponser.

Good or bad,

What do I reck, fith that he dy'd entire. Fairy Queen.

I reck as little what betideth me,

As much I wish all good befotune you. Shakespeare.

Of night or loneliness it recks me not;

I fear the dread events that dog them both,

Left some ill-greeting touch attempt the person

Of our unwon'd sister. Milton.

With that care lost

Went all his fear; of God, or hell or worse

He reck'd not. Milton.

To RECK. v. a. To heed; to care for.

This son of mine, not recking danger, and neglecting the present good way he was in of doing himself good, came hither to do this kind office to my unspeakable grief. Shakespeare.

If I do lose thee, I do lose a thing,

That none but fools would reck. Shakespeare.

Do not you as ungracious parsons do,

Who shew the steep and thorny way to heav'n;

Yet like unthinking reckless libertines,

That in the soft path of dalliance treads,

Reck not his own rede. Shakespeare.

RECKLESS. adj. [from reck; recclear, Saxon.]

heedless; mindless; untouched. See RECK.

It made the king as reckless, as them diligent. Shakespeare.

I'll after, more to be reveng'd of Eglamour

Than for the love of reckless Silvia. Shakespeare.

He apprehends death no more dreadfully, but as a drunken sleep; careless, reckless, and fearless of what's past, present or to come; insensible of mortality and desperately mortal. Shakespeare.

RECKLESSNESS. n. f. [from reckless.]

REC

3. A bond of record testifying the recognisor to owe unto the recognisee a certain sum of money; and is acknowledged in some court of record: and those that are mere recognisances are not sealed but enrolled: It is also used for the verdict of the twelve men empannelled upon an assize. Cowel.
The English should not marry with any Irish, unless bound by recognisance with sureties, to continue loyal. Davies.
To RECOGNISE. v. a. [recognosco, Lat.]
1. To acknowledge; to recover and avow knowledge of any person or thing.
The British cannon formidably roars,
While starting from his oozy bed,
Th' affrighted ocean rears his reverend head,
To view and recognise his ancient lord. Dryden.
Then first he recognis'd th' æthereal guest,
Wonder and joy alternate fire his breast. Pope.
2. To review; to reexamine.
However their causes speed in your tribunals, Christ will recognise them at a greater. South.
RECOGNISE. n. f. He in whose favour the bond is drawn.
RECOGNISOR. n. f. He who gives the recognisance.
RECOGNITION. n. f. [recognitio, Latin.]
1. Review; renovation of knowledge.
The virtues of some being thought expedient to be annually had in remembrance, brought in a fourth kind of publick reading, whereby the lives of such saints had, at the time of their yearly memorials, solemn recognition in the church of God. Hooker, b. iii. f. 20.
2. Knowledge confessed.
Every species of fancy hath three modes; recognition of a thing, as present; memory of it, as past; and foresight of it, as to come. Greco's Cymol.
3. Acknowledgment.
If the recognition or acknowledgment of a final concord, upon any writ of covenant finally, be taken by justice of assize, and the yearly value of those lands be declared by affidavit made before the same justice; then is the recognition and value signed with the hand-writing of that justice. Bacon.
To RECOIL. v. n. [recoiler, Fr.]
1. To rush back in consequence of resistance, which cannot be overcome by the force impressed.
The very thought of my revenges that way
Recoil upon me; in himself too mighty. Shakesp.
Revenge, at first though sweet,
Bitter ere long, back on itself recoils. Milton.
Amazement seiz'd
All th' host of heav'n, back they recoil'd, afraid
At first. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ii.
Evil on itself shall back recoil. Milton.
Who in deep mines for hidden knowledge toils,
Like guns o'ercharg'd, breaks, misses or recoils. Denham.
My hand's so soft, his heart so hard,
The blow recoils, and hurts me while I strike! Dryden.
Whatever violence may be offered to nature, by endeavouring to reason men into a contrary persuasion, nature will still recoil, and at last return to itself. Tillotson.
2. To fall back.
Ye both forewearing be; therefore a while
I read you rest, and to your bowers recoil. Fairy Queen.
Ten paces huge
He back recoil'd; the tenth on bended knee,
His massy spear upstay'd. Milton's Par. Lost, b. vi.
3. To fail; to shrink.
A good and virtuous nature may recoil
In an imperial charge. Shakesp. Macbeth.
To RECOIN. v. a. [re and coin.] To coin over again.
Among the Romans, to preserve great events upon their coins, when any particular piece of money grew very scarce, it was often recoined by a succeeding emperor. Addison.
RECOINAGE. n. f. [re and coinage.] The act of coining anew.
The mint gained upon the late statute, by the recoinage of groats and half-groats, now twopences and fixpences. Bac.
To RECOLLECT. v. a. [recollectus, Lat.]
1. To recover to memory.
It did relieve my passion much;
More than light airs and recollected terms
Of these most brisk and giddy-paced times. Shakesp.
Recollected every day the things seen, heard, or read, which made any addition to your understanding. Watts's Logick.
2. To recover reason or resolution.
The Tyrian queen
Admir'd his fortunes, more admir'd the man;
Then recollected blood. Dryden's Æneis.
3. To gather what is scattered; to gather again.
Now that God hath made his light radiate in his word, men may recollect those scattered divine beams, and kindling with them the topics proper to warm our affections, enflame holy zeal. Boyle.
RECOLLECTION. n. f. [from recollect.] Recovery of notion; revival in the memory.
Recollection is when an idea is fought after by the mind, and with pain and endeavour found, and brought again in view. Locke.

REC

- Let us take care that we sleep not without such a recollection of the actions of the day as may represent any thing that is remarkable, as matter of sorrow or thanksgiving. Taylor.
The last image of that troubled heap,
When sense subsides, and fancy sports in sleep,
Though past the recollection of the thought;
Becomes the stuff of which our dream is wrought. Pope.
To RECOMFORT. v. a. [re and comfort.]
1. To comfort or console again.
What place is there left, we may hope our woes to recomfort. Sidney, b. i.
Ne'er through an arch so hurried the blown tides,
As the recomforted through th' gates. Shakesp. Coriolanus.
As one from sad dismay
Recomforted, and, after thoughts disturb'd, Submitting to what seem'd remedies. Milton.
2. To give new strength.
In strawberries, it is usual to help the ground with muck; and likewise to recomfort it sometimes with muck put to the roots; but to water with muck water is not practised. Bacon.
To RECOMMENCE. v. a. [recommence, Fr. re and commence.]
To begin anew.
To RECOMMEND. v. a. [recommender, Fr. re and commend.]
1. To praise to another.
2. To make acceptable.
Mecenas recommended Virgil and Horace to Augustus, whose praises helped to make him popular while alive, and after his death have made him precious to posterity. Dryden.
A decent boldness ever meets with friends,
Succeeds, and ev'n a stranger recommends. Pope.
3. To commit with prayers.
They had been recommended to the grace of God. Acts xiv.
RECOMMENDABLE. adj. [recommendable, Fr. from recommend.]
Worthy of recommendation or praise.
Though these pursuits should make out no pretence to advantage, yet, upon the account of honour, they are recommendable. Clarke's Preface to Scops.
RECOMMENDATION. n. f. [recommendation, Fr. from recommend.]
1. The act of recommending.
2. That which secures to one a kind reception from another.
Poplicola's doors were opened on the outside, to save the people even the common civility of asking entrance; where misfortune was a powerful recommendation; and where want itself was a powerful mediator. Dryden.
RECOMMENDATORY. adj. [from recommend.] That which commends to another.
Verses recommendatory they have commanded me to prefix before my book. Swift.
RECOMMENDER. n. f. [from recommend.] One who recommends.
St. Chrysostom, as great a lover and recommender of the solitary state as he was, declares it to be no proper school for those who are to be leaders of Christ's flock. Atterbury.
To RECOMMITE. v. a. [re and commit.] To commit anew.
When they had bailed the twelve bishops, who were in the Tower, the house of commons expostulated with them, and caused them to be recommitted. Clarendon.
To RECOMPACT. [re and compact.] To join anew.
Repair
And recompact my scatter'd body. Donne.
To RECOMPENSE. v. a. [recompenser, Fr. re and compense, Lat.]
1. To repay; to requite.
Continue faithful, and we will recompense you. 1 Mac. x.
Hear from heaven, and requite the wicked, by recompensing his way upon his own head. 2 Chron. vi. 23.
2. To give in requital.
Thou wast begot of them, and how canst thou recompense them the things they have done for thee! Eccles. viii. 28.
Recompense to no man evil for evil. Rom. xii. 17.
3. To compensate; to make up by something equivalent.
French wheat, which is bearded, requirerh the best soil, recompensing the same with a profitable plenty. Carew.
Solyma, willing them to be of good cheer, said, that he would in short time find occasion for them to recompense that disgrace, and again to shew their approved valour. Kneller.
He is long ripening, but then his maturity, and the complement thereof, recompenseth the slowness of his maturation. Hale's Origin of Mankind.
4. To redeem; to pay for.
If the man have no kinsman to recompense the trespass unto, let it be recompensed unto the Lord. Nam. v. 8.
RECOMPENSE. n. f. [recompense, Fr. from the verb.]
Thou'rt so far before,
That swiftest wing of recompense is slow
To overtake thee. Shakesp.
2. Equivalent; compensation.
Wife men thought the vast advantage from their learning and integrity an ample recompense for any inconvenience from their passion. Clarendon.
Your mother's wrongs a recompense shall meet,
I lay my sceptre at her daughter's feet. Dryden.
RECOMPLEMENT.

REC

- RECOMPLEMENT. n. f. [re and complement.] New complement.
Although I had a purpose to make a particular digest or re-complement of the laws, I laid it aside. Bacon.
To RECOMPOSE. v. a. [recompose, Fr. re and compose.]
1. To settle or quiet anew.
Elijah was so transported, that he could not receive answer from God, till by mulick he was recomposed. Taylor.
2. To form or adjust anew.
We produced a lovely purple, which we can destroy or recompose at pleasure, by severing or reapproaching the edges of the two irises. Boyle on Colours.
RECOMPOSITION. n. f. [re and composition.] Composition renewed.
To RECONCILE. v. a. [reconciler, Fr. reconcilio, Lat.]
1. To make to like again.
This noble passion,
Child of integrity, hath from my soul
Wip'd the black scruples, reconcil'd my thoughts
To thy good truth and honour. Shakesp.
Submit to Cæsar;
And reconcile thy mighty soul to life. Addison's Cato.
2. To make to be liked again.
Many wise men, who knew the treasurer's talent in removing prejudice, and reconciling himself to wavering affections, believ'd the loss of the duke was unseafonable. Clarendon.
He that has accustomed himself to take up with what easily offers itself, has reason to fear he shall never reconcile himself to the fatigue of turning things in his mind, to discover their more retired secrets. Locke.
3. To make any thing consistent.
The great men among the ancients understood how to reconcile manual labour with affairs of state. Locke.
Questions of right and wrong
Which though our consciences have reconciled,
My learning cannot answer. Southey's Spartan Dame.
Some figures monstrous and misshap'd appear,
Consider'd singly, or beheld too near;
Which but proportion'd to their light or place,
Due distance reconciles to form and grace. Pope.
3. To restore to favour.
So thou shalt do for every one that erreth and is simple, so shall ye reconcile the house. Ezek. xlv. 20.
Let him live before thee reconcil'd. Milton.
RECONCILEABLE. adj. [reconcilable, Fr. from reconcile.]
1. Capable of renewed kindness.
2. Consistent; possible to be made consistent.
What we did was against the dictates of our own conscience; and consequently never makes that act reconcilable with a regenerate estate, which otherwise would not be so. Hammond.
The different accounts of the numbers of ships are reconcilable, by supposing that some spoke of the men of war only, and others added the transports. Arbutnot.
The bones, to be the most convenient, ought to have been as light, as was reconcilable with sufficient strength. Cheyne.
RECONCILEABLENESS. n. f. [from reconcilable.]
1. Consistence; possibility to be reconciled.
The cylinder is an inanimate lifeless trunk, which hath nothing of choice or will in it; and therefore cannot be a fit resemblance to shew the reconcilableness of fate with choice. Hammond.
Discerning how the several parts of scripture are fitted to several times, persons and occurrences, we shall discover not only a reconcilableness, but a friendship and perfect harmony betwixt texts, that here seem most at variance. Boyle.
2. Disposition to renew love.
RECONCILEMENT. n. f. [from reconcile.]
1. Reconciliation; renewal of kindness; favour restored.
No cloud
Of anger shall remain; but peace assur'd
And reconciliation. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. iii.
Creature so fair! his reconciliation seeking,
Whom he had dispos'd. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. x.
2. Friendship renewed.
Injury went beyond all degree of reconciliation. Sidney.
On one side great reserve, and very great resentment on the other, have enflam'd animosities, so as to make all reconciliation impracticable. Swift.
RECONCILER. n. f. [from reconcile.]
1. One who renews friendship between others.
2. One who discovers the consistence between propositions.
Part of the world know how to accommodate St. James and St. Paul, better than some late reconcilers. Norris.
RECONCILIATION. n. f. [reconciliation, from re and concilio, Lat. reconciliation, Fr.]
1. Renewal of friendship.
2. Agreement of things seemingly opposite; solution of seeming contraries.
These distinctions of the fear of God give us a clear and easy reconciliation of those seeming inconsistencies of scripture, with respect to this affection. Rogers.

REC

3. Attonement; expiation.
He might be a merciful and faithful high priest to make reconciliation for sin. Heb. ii. 17.
To RECONDENSE. v. a. [re and condense.] To condense anew.
In the heads of hills and necks of colipiles, such vapours quickly are by a very little cold recondensed into water. Boyle.
RECONDITE. adj. [reconditus, Lat.; Secret; profound; abstruse.
A disagreement between thought and expression seldom happens, but among men of more recondite studies and deep learning. Felton on the Classics.
To RECONDUCE. v. a. [reconduit, Fr. reconducit, Lat. re and conduci.] To conduct again.
Wander'st thou within this lucid orb,
And stray'd from those fair fields of light above,
Amidst this new creation want'st a guide,
To reconduct thy steps? Dryden's State of Innocence.
To RECONJOIN. v. a. [re and conjoin.] To join anew.
Some liquors, although colourless themselves, when elevated into exhalations, exhibit a conspicuous colour, which they lose again when rejoin'd into a liquor. Boyle.
To RECONQUER. v. a. [reconquerir, Fr. re and conquer.] To conquer again.
Chatterton undertook to reconquer Orier. Davies.
To RECONVENE. v. n. [re and conveni.] To assemble anew.
A worse accident fell out about the time of the two houses reconvening, which made a wonderful impression. Clarendon.
To RECONSECRATE. v. a. [re and consecrate.] To consecrate anew.
If a church should be consumed by fire, it shall, in such a case, be reconsecrated. Ayliffe's Pavegon.
To RECONVEY. v. a. [re and convey.] To convey again.
As rivers lost in seas, some secret vein
Thence reconveys, there to be lost again. Denham.
To RECORDE. v. a. [recorder, Lat. recorder, Fr.]
1. To register any thing so that its memory may not be lost.
I made him my book, where my soul recorded
The history of all my secret thoughts. Shakesp.
He shall record a gift
Here in the court, of all he dies possessor'd, Unto his son Lorenzo. Shakesp.
Those things that are recorded of him and his impiety, are written in the chronicles. 1 Esdr. i. 42.
I call heaven and earth to record this day against you, that I have set before you life and death. Deut. xxx. 20.
They gave complex ideas names; that they might the more easily record and discourse of those things they were daily conversant in. Locke.
2. To celebrate; to cause to be remembered solemnly.
They long'd to see the day, to hear the lark,
Record her hymns, and chant her carols blest. Fairfax.
So ev'n and morn recorded the third day. Milton.
RECORD. n. f. [record, Fr. from the verb. The accent of the noun is indifferently on either syllable; of the verb always on the last.] Register; authentick memorial.
Is it upon record? or else reported Successively, from age to age? Shakesp. Rich. III.
It cannot be
The Volcians dare break with us.
—We have record that very well it can;
And three examples of the like have been. Shakesp.
The king made a record of these things, and Mardocheus wrote thereof. Ezra. xii. 4.
An ark; and in the ark his testimony,
The records of his covenant.
Of such a goddess no time leaves record,
Who burn'd the temple where she was ador'd. Dryden.
If he affirms such a monarchy continued to the flood, I would know what records he has it from. Locke.
Though the attested copy of a record be good proof, yet the copy of a copy never so well attested will not be admitted as a proof in judicature. Locke.
Thy elder look, great Janus! cast
Into the long records of ages past;
Review the years in fairest action drest. Prior.
RECORDATION. n. f. [recordatio, Lat.] Remembrance. Not in use.
I never shall have length of life enough,
To rain upon remembrance with mine eyes,
That it may grow and spout as high as heav'n
For recordation to my noble husband. Shakesp. Henry IV.
Make a recordation to my soul
Of every syllable that here was spoke. Shakesp.
A man of the primitive temper, when the church by lowliness did flourish in high examples, which I have inserted as a due recordation of his virtues, having been much obliged to him for many favours. Wotton.
REORDER. n. f. [from record.]
1. One whose business is to register any events.
I but your recorder am in this,
Or mouth and speaker of the universe,
A ministerial notary; for 'tis
Not I, but you and fate that make the verse. Donne.
2. The

REC

2. The keeper of the rolls in a city.
I ask'd, what meant this wilful silence?
His answer was, the people were not us'd
To be spoke to except by the recorder. Shakefp. Rich. III.
The office of recorder to this city being vacant, five or six persons are soliciting to succeed him. Swift.
3. A kind of flute; a wind instrument.
The shepherds went among them, and sang an eclogue, while the other shepherds, pulling out recorders, which possessed the place of pipes, accorded their musick to the others voice. Sidney, b. ii.
In a recorder, the three uppermost holes yield one tone, which is a note lower than the tone of the first three. Bacon.
The figures of recorders, and flutes and pipes are straight;
but the recorder hath a less bore and a greater above and below. Bacon's Natural History.
- To RECOU'CH. v. n. [re and couch.] To lie down again.
Thou mak'st the night to overvail the day;
Then lions whelps lie roaring for their prey,
And at thy powerful hand demand their food;
Who when at morn they all recouch again,
Then toiling man till eve pursues his pain. Wotton.
- To RECOVER. v. a. [recoverer, Fr. recovers, Lat.]
1. To restore from sickness or disorder.
Every of us, each for his self, laboured how to recover him, while he rather daily sent us companions of town full of ever return'd in any found and faithful manner. Sidney.
Would my Lord were with the prophet; for he would recover him of his leprosy. 2 Kings v. 3.
The clouds dispell'd, the sky resum'd her light,
And nature stood recover'd of her fright. Dryden.
2. To repair.
Should we apply this precept only to those who are concerned to recover time they have lost, it would extend to the whole race of mankind. Rogers.
Even good men have many failings and lapses to lament and recover. Rogers.
3. To regain.
Stay a while; and we'll debate,
By what fate means the crown may be recover'd. Shakefp.
The spirit of the Lord is upon me, to preach the gospel to the poor, and recovering of sight to the blind. Luke iv. 18.
Once in forty years cometh a pope, that casteth his eye upon the kingdom of Naples, to recover it to the church. Bac.
These Italians, in despite of what could be done, recovered Tiliaventum. Knolles's History of the Turks.
I who e'er while the happy garden sung,
By one man's disobedience lost, now sing
Recover'd Paradise to all mankind,
By one man's firm obedience. Milton's Paradise Regain'd.
Any other person may join with him that is injured, and assist him in recovering from the offender so much, as may make satisfaction. Locke.
4. To release.
That they may recover themselves out of the snare of the devil, who are taken captive by him. 2 Tim. ii. 26.
5. To attain; to reach; to come up to.
The forest is not three leagues off;
If we recover that, we're sure enough. Shakefp.
- To RECOVER. v. n. To grow well from a disease.
Adam, by this from the cold sudden damp
Recovering, his scatter'd spirits return'd. Milton.
- RECOVERABLE. adj. [recoverable, Fr. from recover.]
1. Possible to be restored from sickness.
2. Possible to be regained.
A prodigal's course
Is like the sun's, but not like his, recoverable, I fear. Shak.
They promised the good people ease in the matter of protections, by which the debts from parliament men and their followers were not recoverable. Clarendon.
- RECOVERY. n. s. [from recover.]
1. Restoration from sickness.
Your hopes are regular and reasonable, though in temporal affairs; such as are deliverance from enemies, and recovery from sickness. Taylor's Rule of Living Holy.
The sweat sometimes acid, is a sign of recovery after acute distempers. Arbutnot on Aliments.
2. Power or act of regaining.
What should move me to undertake the recovery of this,
being not ignorant of the impossibility? Shakefp.
These counties were the keys of Normandy:
But wherefore weeps Warwick?
For grief that they are past recovery. Shakefp. Henry VI.
Mario Sanudo lived about the fourteenth age, a man full of zeal for the recovery of the Holy Land. Arbutnot on Coins.
3. The act of cutting off an entail.
The spirit of wantonness is sure scared out of him; if the devil have him not in fee simple, with fine and recovery. Shak.
- To RECOUNT. v. a. [recount, Fr.] To relate in detail;
to tell distinctly.
Bid him recount the fore-recited practices. Shakefp.
How I have thought of these times,
I shall recount hereafter. Shakefp. Julius Caesar.

REC

- Plato in Timæo produces an Egyptian priest, who recounted to Solon out of the holy books of Egypt the story of the flood universal, which happened long before the Grecian inundation. Raleigh's History of the World.
The talk of worldly affairs hindreth much, although recounted with a fair intention: we speak willingly, but seldom return to silence. Taylor's Guide to Devotion.
- Say, from these glorious seeds what harvest flows,
Recount our blessings, and compare our woes.
RECOUNTMENT. n. s. [from recount.] Relation; recital.
When from the first to last, betwixt us two,
Tears our recountments had most finely bath'd;
As how I came into that desert place. Shakefp.
- RECOUSE. n. s. [recoursus, Lat. recours, Fr.]
1. Frequent passage. Obsolete.
2. Return; new attack.
Not Priamus and Hecuba on knees,
Their eyes o'ergall'd with recourse of tears. Shakefp.
3. Preventive physick, by purging noxious humours and the causes of diseases, preventeth sickness in the healthy, or the recourse thereof in the valetudinary. Brown's Vulg. Errors.
4. [Recours, Fr.] Application as for help or protection. This is the common use.
Thus died this great peer, in a time of great recourse unto him and dependance upon him, the house and town full of servants and suitors. Wotton's Buckingham.
The council of Trent commends the making recourse, not only to the prayers of the saints, but to their aid and assistance. Stillington's Def. of Dis. on Roman Idol.
Can any man think, that this privilege was at first conferred upon the church of Rome, and that christians in all ages had constant recourse to it for determining their differences; and yet that that very church should now be at a loss where to find it? Tillotson.
All other means have fail'd to wound her heart,
Our last recourse is therefore to our art. Dryden.
5. Access.
The doors be lockt,
That no man hath recourse to her by night. Shakefp.
- RECREANT. adj. [recreant, Fr.]
1. Cowardly; mean spirited; subdued; crying out for mercy;
recanting out of fear.
Let be that lady debonaire,
Thou recreant knight, and soon thyself prepare
To battle. Fairy Queen, b. ii.
Dost
Thou wear a lion's hide? dost it for shame,
And hang a calf's skin on those recreant limbs. Shakefp.
Here standeth Thomas Mowbray, duke of Norfolk,
On pain to be found false and recreant. Shakefp.
Thou
Must, as a foreign recreant, be led
With manacles along our street. Shakefp.
The knight, whom fate and happy chance shall grace
From out the bars to force his opposite,
Or kill, or make him recreant on the plain,
The prize of valour and of love shall gain. Dryden.
2. Apostate; false.
Who for so many benefits receiv'd,
Turn'd recreant to God, ingrate and false,
And so of all true good himself despoil'd. Milton's Par. Reg.
- To RECREATE. v. a. [recreo, Lat. recreo, Fr.]
1. To refresh after toil; to amuse or divert in weariness.
He hath left you all his walks,
And to your heirs for ever; common pleasures,
To walk abroad and recreate yourselves. Shakefp.
Necessity and the example of St. John, who recreated himself with sporting with a tame partridge, teach us, that it is lawful to relax our bow, but not suffer it to be unfurled. Tayl.
Painters, when they work on white grounds, place before them colours mixt with blue and green, to recreate their eyes, white wearying and paining the sight more than any. Dryden.
2. To delight; to gratify.
These ripe fruits recreate the nostrils with their aromatick scent. More's Divine Dialogues.
3. To relieve; to revive.
Take a walk to refresh yourself with the open air, which inspired fresh doth exceedingly recreate the lungs, heart and vital spirits. Harvey on Consumption.
- RECREATION. n. s. [from recreate.]
1. Relief after toil or pain; amusement in sorrow or distress.
The chief recreation she could find in her anguish, was sometime to visit that place, where first she was so happy as to see the cause of her unhapp. Sidney, b. ii.
I'll visit
The chapel where they lie, and tears, shed there, Shall be my recreation. Shakefp. Winter's Tale.
The great men among the antients understood how to reconcile manual labour with affairs of state; and thought it no lessening to their dignity to make the one the recreation to the other. Locke on Education.
2. Refreshment;

REC

2. Refreshment; amusement; diversion.
You may have the recreation of surprizing those with admiration, who shall hear the deaf person pronounce whatsoever they shall desire, without your seeming to guide him.
Holder's Elements of Speech.
Nor is that man less deceived, that thinks to maintain a constant tenure of pleasure, by a continual pursuit of sports and recreations: for all these things, as they refresh a man when weary, so they weary him when refreshed. South.
- RECREATIVE. adj. [from recreate.] Refreshing; giving relief after labour or pain; amusing; diverting.
Let the musick be recreative, and with some strange changes.
Let not your recreations be lavish spenders of your time;
but chuse such as are healthful, recreative and apt to refresh you: but at no hand dwell upon them. Taylor.
The access these trifles gain to the closets of ladies, seem to promise such easy and recreative experiments, which require but little time or charge. Boyle.
- RECREATIVENESS. n. s. [from recreative.] The quality of being recreative.
- RECREMENT. n. s. [recrementum, Lat.] Drofs; spume; superfluous or useless parts.
The vital fire in the heart requires an ambient body of a yielding nature, to receive the superfluous ferocities and other recrements of the blood. Boyle.
- RECREMENTAL. adj. [from recrement.] Dröffy.
- RECREMINATIONS. n. s. [from recreare, Fr. re and crimi-nor, Latin.] To return one accusation with another.
It is not my business to recreminate, hoping sufficiently to clear myself in this matter. Stillington.
How shall such hypocrites reform the state,
On whom the broths can recreminate? Dryden.
- To RECRIMINATE. v. a. To accuse in return. Unusual.
- Did not Joseph lie under black infamy? he scorned so much as to clear himself, or to recreminate the trumpet. South.
- RECRIMINATION. n. s. [recrimination, Fr. from recreminate.]
Return of one accusation with another.
Publick defamation will seem disobliging enough to provoke a return, which again begets a rejoinder, and so the quarrel is carried on with mutual recriminations. Gov. of Tong.
- RECRIMINATOR. n. s. [from recreminate.] He that returns one charge with another.
- RECRUESCENT. adj. [recruescens, Lat.] Growing painful or violent again.
- To RECRUIT. v. a. [recruter, Fr.]
1. To repair any thing wasted by new supplies.
He was longer in recruiting his flesh than was usual; but by a milk diet he recovered it. Wise man's Surgery.
Increase thy care to save the sinking kind;
With greens and flow'rs recruit their empty hives,
And seek fresh forage to sustain their lives. Dryden.
Her cheeks glow the brighter, recruiting their colour;
As flowers by sprinkling revive with fresh odour. Granville.
This sun is set; but see in bright array
What hosts of heavenly lights recruit the day!
Love in a shining galaxy appears Triumphant still.
Seeing the variety of motions, which we find in the world is always decreasing, there is a necessity of conserving and recruiting it by active principles; such as are the cause of gravity, by which planets and comets keep their motions in their orbs, and bodies acquire great motion in falling. Newt.
2. To supply an army with new men.
He trusted the earl of Holland with the command of that army, with which he was to be recruited and assisted. Clar.
- To RECRUIT. v. n. To raise new soldiers.
The French have only Switzerland besides their own country to recruit in; and we know the difficulties they meet with in getting thence a single regiment. Addison.
- RECRUIT. n. s. [from the verb.]
1. Supply of any thing wasted.
Whatever nature has in worth deny'd,
She gives in large recruits of needful pride.
The endeavour to raise new men for the recruit of the army found opposition. Clarendon.
2. New soldiers.
The pow'rs of Troy
With fresh recruits their youthful chief sustain:
Not theirs a raw and unexperienc'd train,
But a firm body of embattel'd men. Dryden.
- RECTANGLE. n. s. [rectangle, Fr. rectangulus, Latin.] A figure which has one angle or more of ninety degrees.
If all Athens should decree, that in rectangle triangles the square, which is made of the side that subtendeth the right angle, is equal to the squares which are made of the sides containing the right angle, geometers would not receive satisfaction without demonstration. Brown's Vulg. Errors.
The mathematician considers the truth and properties belonging to a rectangle, only as it is in idea in his own mind.
Locke.

REC

- RECTANGULAR. adj. [rectangulaire, Fr. rectus and angulus, Latin.] Right angled; having angles of ninety degrees.
Bricks moulded in their ordinary rectangular form, if they shall be laid one by another in a level row between any supporters sustaining the two ends, then all the pieces will necessarily sink. Wotton's Architecture.
- RECTANGULARLY. adv. [from rectangular.] With right angles.
At the equator, the needle will stand rectangularly; but approaching northward toward the tropic, it will regard the stone obliquely. Brown's Vulg. Errors.
- RECTIFIABLE. adj. [from rectify.] Capable to be set right.
The natural heat of the parts being insufficient for a perfect and thorough digestion, the errors of one concoction are not rectifiable by another. Brown's Vulg. Errors.
- RECTIFICATION. n. s. [rectification, Fr. from rectify.]
1. The act of setting right what is wrong.
It behoved the deity to renew that revelation from time to time, and to rectify abuses with such authority for the renewal and rectification, as was sufficient evidence of the truth of what was revealed. Forbes.
2. In chymistry, rectification is drawing any thing over again by distillation, to make it yet higher or finer. Quincy.
At the first rectification of some spirit of salt in a retort, a single pound afforded no less than six ounces of phlegm. Boyle.
- To RECTIFY. v. a. [rectifier, Fr. rectus and facio, Lat.]
1. To make right; to reform; to redress.
That wherein unfounder times have done amiss, the better ages ensuing must rectify as they may. Hooker.
It shall be bootless,
That longer you defer the court, as well
For your own quiet, as to rectify
What is unsettled in the king. Shakefp. Henry VIII.
Where a long course of piety has purged the heart, and rectified the will, knowledge will break in upon such a soul, like the sun shining in his full might. South.
The substance of this theory I mainly depend on, being willing to suppose that many particularities may be rectified upon farther thoughts. Burnet.
If those men of parts, who have been employed in vitia-ting the age, had endeavoured to rectify and amend it, they needed not have sacrificed their good sense to their fame. Add.
The false judgment he made of things are owned; and the methods pointed out by which he rectified them. Atterbury.
2. To exalt and improve by repeated distillation.
The skin hath been kept white and smooth for above fifteen years, by being included with rectified spirit of wine in a cylindrical glass. Grew's Museum.
- RECTILINEAR. adj. [rectus and linea, Lat.] Consisting of RECTILINEOUS. s. right lines.
There are only three rectilinear and ordinate figures, which can serve to this purpose; and inordinate or unlike ones must have been not only less elegant, but unequal. Ray.
This image was oblong and not oval, but terminated with two rectilinear and parallel sides and two semicircular ends.
Newton's Opticks.
The rays of light, whether they be very small bodies projected, or only motion and force propagated, are moved in right lines; and whenever a ray of light is by any obstacle turned out of its rectilinear way, it will never return into the same rectilinear way, unless perhaps by very great accident.
- RECTITUDE. n. s. [rectitude, Fr. from rectus, Lat.]
1. Straightness; not curvity.
2. Rightness; uprightness; freedom from moral curvity or ob-liquity.
Faith and repentance, together with the rectitude of their present engagement would fully prepare them for a better life. King Charles.
Calm the disorders of thy mind, by reflecting on the wisdom, equity and absolute rectitude of all his proceedings. Att.
- RECTOR. n. s. [recteur, Fr. rector, Latin.]
1. Ruler; lord; governor.
God is the supreme rector of the world, and of all those subordinate parts thereof. Hale's Origin of Mankind.
When a rector of an university of scholars is chosen by the corporation or university, the election ought to be confirmed by the superior of such university. Ayliffe's Paragon.
2. Parson of an unimpropriated parish.
- RECTORSHIP. n. s. [rectorat, Fr. from rector.] The rank or office of rector.
Had your bodies
No heart among you? or had you tongues to cry
Against the rectors of judgment. Shakefp.
- RECTORY. n. s. [rectorie, Fr. from rector.]
A rectory or parsonage is a spiritual living, composed of land, tithes and other oblations of the people, separate or de-dedicate to God in any congregation for the service of his church there, and for the maintenance of the governor or minister thereof, to whose charge the same is committed.
Speelman.

RECURATION.

REC

RECUBATION. n. f. [recubo, Latin.] The act of lying or leaning.

Whereas our translation renders it fitting, it cannot have that illation, for the French and Italian translations express neither position of session or recubation. Brown.

RECULE, for RECOIL. [reculer, Fr.] Spenser.

RECUMBENCY. n. f. [from recumbent.]

1. The posture of lying or leaning.
In that memorable show of Germanicus, twelve elephants danced unto the sound of music, and after laid them down in tricliniums, or places of festival recumbency. Brown.

2. Rest; repose.
When the mind has been once habituated to this lazy recumbency and satisfaction on the obvious surface of things, it is in danger to rest satisfied there. Locke.

RECUMBENT. adj. [recumbens, Lat.] Lying; leaning.

The Roman recumbent, or more properly accumbent, posture in eating was introduced after the first Punic war. Arb.

TO RECURE. v. n. [recuro, Lat.]

1. To come back to the thought; to revive in the mind.

The idea, I have once had, will be unchangeably the same, as long as it recurs the same in my memory. Locke.

In this life, the thoughts of God and a future state often offer themselves to us; they often spring up in our minds, and when expelled, recur again. Calamy.

A line of the golden verses of the Pythagoreans recurring on the memory, hath often guarded youth from a temptation to vice. Watts.

When any word has been used to signify an idea, that old idea will recur in the mind when the word is heard. Watts.

2. [Recurre, Fr.] To have recourse to; to take refuge in.

If to avoid succession in eternal existence, they recur to the punctum flans of the schools, they will thereby very little help us to a more positive idea of infinite duration. Locke.

The second cause we know, but trouble not ourselves to recur to the first. Wake's Preparation for Death.

TO RECURE. v. a. [re and cure.] To recover from sickness or labour.

Through wife handling and fair governance,
I him recured to a better will,
Purged from drugs of foul intemperance. Fairy Queen.

Phebus pure
In western waves his weary wagon did recure. Fa. Queen.

With one look she doth my life dismay,
And with another doth it straight recure. Spenser.

The wanton boy was shortly well recured
Of that his malady. Spenser.

Thy death's wound
He who comes thy Saviour shall recure,
Not by destroying Satan, but his works
In thee and in thy seed. Milton's Par. Lost, b. xii.

RECURE. n. f. Recovery; remedy.

Whatever fell into the enemies hands, was lost without recure: the old men were slain, the young men led away into captivity. Kneller's History of the Turks.

RECURRENCE. n. f. [from recurrent.] Return.

Although the opinion at present be well suppressed, yet, from some strings of tradition and fruitful recurrence of error, it may revive in the next generation. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

RECURRENCE. n. f. [from recurre, Fr. recurrens, Lat.] Returning from time to time.

Next to lingering durable pains, short intermittent or swift recurrent pains precipitate patients unto consumptions. Harv.

RECURRENCE. n. f. [recursus, Lat.] Return.

One of the assistants told the recursions of the other pendulum hanging in the free air. Boyle.

RECURVATION. n. f. [recurvo, Lat.] Flexure backwards.

Ascending first into a capillary reception of the breast bone by a serpentine recurvation, it ascendeth again into the neck. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

RECURVUS. adj. [recurvus, Lat.] Bent backward.

I have not observed tails in all; but in others I have observed long recurvus tails, longer than their bodies. Derham.

RECUSANT. n. f. [recusans, Lat.] One that refuses any terms of communion or society.

They demand of the lords, that no recusant lord might have a vote in passing that act. Clarendon.

Were all corners ransacked, what a multitude of recusants should we find upon a far differing account from that of conscience! Decay of Piety.

TO RECUSE. v. n. [recuso, Fr. recuso, Lat.] To refuse.

A juridical word.

The humility, as well of understanding as manners of the fathers, will not let them be troubled, when they are recusant as judges. Digby.

A judge may proceed notwithstanding my appeal, unless I recuse him as a suspected judge. Ayliffe's Parergon.

RED. adj. [from the old Saxon, red; rūd, Welsh. As the town of Hertford, Mr. Camden, in his Britannia, noteth, first was called, by the Saxons, Herudford, the rud ford, or the red ford or water; high Dutch, rot; from the Greek, ῥοδον; French, rouge; Italian, rubro; from the Latin, ruber. Peascham. Of the colour of blood, of one of the primitive colours, which is subdivided into many; as scarlet, vermilion, crimson.

RED

Look I so pale.

—Ay, and no man in the presence,

But his red colour hath forsook his cheeks. Shakep.

Bring me the fairest creature northward born,

To prove whose blood is reddest. Shakep. Merch. of Ven.

His eyes shall be red with wine, and his teeth white with milk. Gen. xlix. 12.

Th' angelick squadron turn'd fiery red.

If red lead and white paper be placed in the red light of the coloured spectrum, made in a dark chamber by the refraction of a prism, the paper will appear more lucid than the red lead, and therefore reflects the red making rays more copiously than red lead doth. Newton's Opticks.

I he sixth red was at first of a very fair and lively scarlet, and soon after of a brighter colour, being very pure and brisk, and the best of all the reds. Newton's Opticks.

Why heavenly truth,

And moderation fair, were the red marks

Of superstition's scourge. Thomson's Winter.

TO REDARGUE. v. a. [redarguo, Lat.] To refute. Not in use.

The last wittily redargues the pretended finding of coin, graved with the image of Augustus Cæsar, in the American mines. Hakewill on Providence.

REDBERRIED strub. cassia. n. f. A plant. It is male and female in different plants: the male hath flowers consisting of many stamina or threads, without any petals; these are always sterile: the female plants, which have no conspicuous power, produce spherical berries, in which are included nuts of the same form. Miller.

REDBREAST. n. f. A small bird, so named from the colour of its breast.

No burial this pretty babe
Of any man receives,
But robin redbreast painfully
Did cover him with leaves. Children in the Wood.

The redbreast, sacred to the household gods,
Pays to trusted man his annual visit. Thomson.

REDCOAT. n. f. A name of contempt for a soldier.

The fearful passenger, who travels late,
Shakes at the moon-shine shadow of a rust,
And sees a redcoat rise from ev'ry bush. Dryden.

TO REDDEN. v. a. [from red.] To make red.

In a heav'n serene, resplendent arms appear Reddening the skies, and glittering all around,
The temper'd metals clasp. Dryden's Ench.

TO REDDEN. v. n. To grow red.

With shame they reddened, and with spite grew pale. Dryden's Juvenal.

Turn upon the ladies in the pit,
And if they reddens, you are sure 'tis wit. Addison.

The poor inhabitant beholds in vain
The reddening orange and the swelling grain. Addison.

For me the balm shall bleed, and amber flow,
The coral reddens, and the ruby glow. Pope.

Appius reddens at each word you speak,
And stares, tremendous, with a threatening eye,
Like some fierce tyrant in old tapestry. Pope.

REDDISH. [from red.] Somewhat red.

A bright spot, white and somewhat reddish. Lev.

REDDISHNESS. n. f. [from reddish.] Tendency to redness.

Two parts of copper and one of tin, by fusion brought into one mass, the whiteness of the tin is more conspicuous than the reddishness of the copper. Boyle.

REDDITION. n. f. [from reddo, Lat.] Restitution.

She is reduced to a perfect obedience, partly by voluntary reddition and desire of protection, and partly by conquest. Hewel's Vocal Forest.

REDDITIVE. adj. [redditivus, Lat.] Answering to an interrogative. A term of grammar.

REDDLE. n. f. A sort of mineral.

Reddle is an earth of the metal kind, of a tolerably close and even texture: its surface is smooth and somewhat glossy, and it is soft and unctuous to the touch, staining the fingers very much: it is remarkably heavy, and its colour of a fine florid, though not very deep red: our American colonies abound with it; and in England we have the finest in the world: it has been used as an astringent. Hill's Mat. Med.

REDE. n. f. [red, Saxon.] Counsel; advice. Not used.

Do not as some ungracious pastors do,
Shew me the sheep and thorny way to heav'n;
Whilst he a puffed and reckless libertine,
Himself the primrose path of dalliance treads,
And recks not his own rede. Shakep. Hamlet.

TO REDE. v. a. [redan, Saxon.] To advise.

I rede thee hence to remove,

Left thou the price of my displeasure prove. Spenser.

TO REDEEM.

RED

TO REDEEM. v. a. [redimo, Lat.]

1. To ransom; to relieve from any thing by paying a price.

The kinsman said, I cannot redeem it for myself, left I mar mine inheritance. Ruth iv. 6.

2. To rescue; to recover.

If, when I am laid into the tomb,
I wake before the time that Romeo
Comes to redeem me, there's a fearful point. Shakep.

Thy father

Levied an army, weening to redeem

And re-instate me in the diadem. Shakep. Henry VI.

Th' almighty from the grave

Hath me redeemed; he will the humble save. Sandys.

Redeem Israel, O God, out of all his troubles. Pf. xxv.

Redeem from this reproach my wand'ring ghost. Dryden.

3. To recompense; to compensate; to make amends for.

Waywardly proud; and therefore bold, because extremely faulty; and yet having no good thing to redeem these. Sidney.

This feather tins, the lives; if it be so,

It is a chance which does redeem all sorrows

That ever I have felt. Shakep. King Lear.

Having committed a fault, he became the more obsequious and pliant to redeem it. Watson.

Think it not hard, if at so cheap a rate

You can secure the constancy of fate,

Whole kindnesses sent what does your malice seem

By lesser ills the greater to redeem. Dryden.

4. To pay an atonement.

Thou hast one daughter,

Who redeems nature from the general curse,

Which twain have brought her to. Shakep.

5. To save the world from the curse of sin.

Which of you will be mortal to redeem

Man's mortal crime. Milton.

REDEEMABLE. n. f. [from redem.] Capable of redemption.

REDEEMABLENESS. n. f. [from redemable.] The state of being redeemable.

REDEEMER. n. f. [from redem.]

1. One who ransoms or redeems.

She inflamed him so,

That he would alights with Pyrocles fight,

And his redeemer challeng'd for his foe,

Because he had not well maintain'd his right. Fa. Queen.

2. The Saviour of the world.

I every day expect an embassage

From my redeemer to redeem me hence;

And now in peace my soul shall part to heav'n. Shakep.

Man's friend, his mediator, his design'd

Both ransom and redeemer voluntary. Milton's Par. Lost.

When law we thee any way distressed, and relieved thee?

will be the question of those, to whom heaven itself will be at the last day awarded, as having ministered to their redeemer. Boyle.

TO REDELIVER. v. a. [re and deliver.] To deliver back.

I have remembrances of yours,

That I have longed long to redeliver. Shakep.

Instruments judicially exhibited, are not of the acts of courts; and therefore may be redelivered on the demand of the person that exhibited them. Ayliffe's Parergon.

REDELIVERY. n. f. [from redeliver.] The act of delivering back.

TO REDEMAND. v. a. [redemand, Fr. re and demand.] To demand back.

Threecore attacked the place where they were kept in custody, and rescued them: the duke redemands his prisoners, but receiving only excuses, he resolved to do himself justice. Addison's Remarks on Italy.

REDEMPTION. n. f. [redemption, Fr. redemptio, Lat.]

1. Ransome; release.

Utter darkness his place

Ordain'd without redemption, without end. Milton.

2. Purchase of God's favour by the death of Christ.

I charge you, as you hope to have redemption,

That you depart, and lay no hands on me. Shakep.

The Saviour son be glorify'd,

Who for lost man's redemption dy'd. Dryden.

REDEMPTORY. adj. [from redemptus, Lat.] Paid for ransome.

Omega sings the exequies,

And Hector's redemptory price. Chapman's Iliads.

REDHOT. adj. [red and hot.] Heated to redness.

Iron redhot burneth and consumeth not. Bacon.

Is not fire a body heated so hot as to emit light copiously?

for what else is a redhot iron than fire? and what else is a burning coal than redhot wood? Newton's Opticks.

The redhot metal hilles in the lake. Pope.

REDINTEGRATE. adj. [redintegratus, Latin.] Restored; renewed; made new.

Charles VIII. received the kingdom of France in flourishing estate, being redintegrate in those principal members, which anciently had been portions of the crown, and were after delivered: to as they remained only in homage, and not in sovereignty. Bacon's Henry VII.

RED

REDINTEGRATION. n. f. [from redintegrare.]

1. Renovation; restoration.

They kept the feast indeed, but with the leaven of malice, and absurdly commemorated the redintegration of his natural body, by mutilating and dividing his mystical. Dec. of Piety.

2. Redintegration chymists call the restoring any mixed body or matter, whose form has been destroyed, to its former nature and constitution.

He but prescribes as a bare chymical purification of nitre, what I teach as a philosophical redintegration of it. Boyle.

REDLEAD. n. f. [red and lead.] Minium. See MINIMUM.

To draw with dry colours, make long paths, by grinding redlead with strong wort, and so roll them up into long rolls like pencils, drying them in the sun. Peascham.

REDNESS. n. f. [from red.] The quality of being red.

There was a pretty redness in his lips. Shakep.

In the red sea, most apprehend a material redness, from whence they derive its common denomination. Brown.

The glowing redness of the berries vies with the verdure of their leaves. Spektor, N° 477.

REDOLENCE. n. f. [from redolent.] Sweet scent.

REDOLENCY. n. f. [from redolent.] Sweet scent.

We have all the redolence of the perfumes we burn upon his altars. Boyle.

Their flowers attract spiders with their redolency. Morim.

REDOLENT. adj. [redolens, Lat.] Sweet of scent.

Thy love excels the joys of wine;

Thy odours, O how redolent! Sandys's Paraphrase.

TO REDOUBLE. v. a. [redoubler, Fr. re and double.]

1. To repeat often.

So ended she; and all the rest around

To her redoubled that her underlong. Spenser.

They were

As cannons overcharg'd with double cracks,

So they redoubled strokes upon the foe. Shakep. Macbeth.

2. To encrease by addition of the same quantity over and over.

Mimas and Parnassus liveat,

And Aetna rages with redoubled heat. Addison.

TO REDOUBLE. v. n. To become twice as much.

If we consider, that our whole eternity is to take its colour from those hours which we here employ in virtue or vice, the argument redoubles upon us, for putting in practice this method of passing away our time. Addison's Spectator.

REDOUT. n. f. [redout, Fr. redotta, Italian.] The outwork of a fortification; a fortress.

Every great ship is as an impregnable fort, and our many safe and commodious ports are as redoubts to secure them. Bacon.

REDOUTABLE. adj. [redoutable, Fr.] Formidable; terrible to foes.

The enterprising Mr. Lintot, the redoubtable rival of Mr. Tonson, overtook me. Pope.

REDOUTED. adj. [redouté, Fr.] Dread; awful; formidable.

His kingdom's feat Clonopolis is red,

There to obtain some such redoubted knight,

That parents dear from tyrant's power deliver might. F. 2.

So far be mine, my most redoubted lord,

As my true service shall deserve your love. Shakep.

TO REDOUND. v. n. [redundo, Latin.]

RED

REDRESS. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Reformation; amendment.
To seek reformation of evil laws is commendable, but for us the more necessary is a speedy redress of ourselves. Hooker.
2. Relief; remedy.
No humble suitors press to speak for right;
No, not a man comes for redress to thee. Shakesp.
Such people, as break the law of nations, all nations are interested to suppress, considering that the particular states, being the delinquents, can give no redress. Bacon.
Grief, finding no redress, ferment and rages
Nor less than wounds immedicable,
Rankle, and fester, and gangrene
To black mortification. Milton.

3. One who gives relief.
Fair majesty, the refuge and redress
Of those whom fate pursues, and wants oppress. Dryden.
REDRESSIVE. adj. [from redress.] Succouring; affording remedy. A word not authorized.
The generous band,
Who, touch'd with human woe, redress search'd
Into the horrors of the gloomy jail. Thomson.
To REDSEAR. v. n. [red and sear.] A term of workmen.
If iron be too cold, it will not feel the weight of the hammer, when it will not batter under the hammer; and if it be too hot, it will redsear, that is, break or crack under the hammer. Moxon's Mechanical Exercises.

- REDSHANK. n. s. [red and shank.]
1. This seems to be a contemptuous appellation for some of the people of Scotland.
He sent over his brother Edward with a power of Scots and redshanks unto Ireland, where they got footings. Spenser.

2. A bird.
REDSTREAK. n. s. [red and streak.]
1. An apple.

- The redstreak, of all cyder fruit, hath obtained the preference, being but a kind of wilding, and though kept long, yet is never pleasing to the palate; there are several sorts of redstreak: some sorts of them have red veins running through the whole fruit, which is esteemed to give the cyder the richest tincture. Mortimer.

2. Cyder pressed from the redstreak.
Redstreak he quaffs beneath the Chianti vine, Gives Tufcan yearly for thy Scudmore's wine. Smith.

- To REDUCE. v. a. [reduco, Lat. reducere, Fr.]
1. To bring back. Obsolete.
Abate the edge of traitors, gracious lord!
That would reduce these bloody days again. Shakesp.

2. To bring to the former state.
It were but just
And equal to reduce me to my dust,
Desirous to resign and render back
All I receiv'd. Milton.

3. To reform from any disorder.
That temper in the archbishop, who licensed their most pernicious writings, left his successor a very difficult work to do, to reform and reduce a church into order, that had been so long neglected, and so ill filled. Clarendon.

4. To bring into any state of diminution.
A diaphanous body, reduced to very minute parts, thereby acquires many little surfaces in a narrow compass. Boyle.
His ire will quite consume us, and reduce
To nothing this essential. Milton.

5. To degrade; to impair in dignity.
There is nothing so bad, but a man may lay hold of something about it, that will afford matter of excuse; nor nothing so excellent; but a man may fasten upon something belonging to it, whereby to reduce it. Tillotson.

6. To bring into any state of misery or meanness.
The most prudent part was his moderation and indulgence, not reducing them to desperation. Arbutnot on Coins.

7. To subdue.
Under thee, as head supreme,
Thrones, principdoms, pow'rs, dominions, I reduce. Milton.

8. To bring into any state more within reach or power.
To have this project reduced to practice, there seems to want nothing.

9. To reclaim to order.
There left desert utmost hell,
Reduc'd in careful watch round their metropolis. Milton.

10. To subject to a rule; to bring into a class.
REDUCEMENT. n. s. [from reduce.] The act of bringing back, subduing, reforming or diminishing.
The navy received blessing from pope Sixtus, and was assigned as an apostolical mission for the reducement of this kingdom to the obedience of Rome. Bacon.

- REDUCER. n. s. [from reduce.] One that reduces.
They could not learn to digest, that the man, which they so long had used to mask their own appetites, should now be the reducer of them into order. Sidney, b. ii.

Except they meant to bathe in reeking wounds,
Or memorise another Golgotha. Shakesp. Macbeth.

To the battle came he; where he did Run reeking o'er the lives of men, as if 'Twere a perpetual spoil. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

You remember
How under my oppression I did reek,
When I first mov'd you.
Dying like men, though buried in your dunghills,
They shall be fam'd; for there the sun shall greet them,
And draw their honours reeking up to heav'n. Shakesp.

I found me laid
In balmy sweat; which with his beams the sun
Soon dry'd, and on the reeking moisture fed. Milton.

Love one descended from a race of tyrants,
Whole blood yet reeks on my avenging sword. Smith.

REEKY. adj. [from reek.] Smoky; tanned; black.

Those causes the divine historian refers us to, and not to any productions out of nothing. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
  2. To betake for decision.
The heir of his kingdom hath referred herself unto a poor, but worthy gentleman. Shakespeare, Cymbeline.
  3. To reduce to, as to the ultimate end.
You profess and practise to refer all things to yourself. Bac.
  4. To reduce, as to a class.
The salts, predominant in quick lime, we refer rather to lixiviate, than acid. Boyle on Colours.
- To REFERR. v. n. To respect; to have relation.
Of those places, that refer to the shutting and opening the abyss, I take notice of that in Job. Burnet.
- REFERRER. n. f. [from refer.] One to whom any thing is referred.
References and arbitrators seldom forget themselves. L'Estr.
- REFERENCE. n. f. [from refer.]
1. Relation; respect; view towards; allusion to.
The knowledge of that which man is in reference unto himself and other things in relation unto man, I may term the mother of all those principles, which are decrees in that law of nature, whereby human actions are framed. Hooker.
Jupiter was the son of Ether and Dies; so called, because the one had reference to his celestial conditions, the other discovered his natural virtues. Raleigh's History of the World.
Christian religion commands sobriety, temperance and moderation, in reference to our appetites and passions. Tillotson.
  2. Dismissal to another tribunal.
It passed in England without the least reference hither. Sw.
- REFERENDARY. n. f. [referendus, Lat.] One to whose decision any thing is referred.

The red Dutch currant yields a rich juice, to be diluted with a quantity of water boiled with refined sugar. Mortimer.
  2. To make elegant; to polish; to make accurate.
Queen Elizabeth's time was a golden age for a world of refined wits, who honoured poetry with their pens. Peacham.
Love refines the thoughts, and hath his seat
In reason. Milton.
The same traditional sloth, which renders the bodies of children, born from wealthy parents, weak, may perhaps refine their spirits. Swift.
- To REFINE. v. n.
1. To improve in point of accuracy or delicacy.
Chaucer refined on Boccace, and mended stories. Dryden.
Let a lord but own the happy lines;
How the wit brightens, how the sense refines! Pope.
  2. To grow pure.
The pure limpid stream, when foul with stains,
Works itself clear, and as it runs refines. Addison.
  3. To affect nicety.
He makes another paragraph about our refining in controversy, and coming nearer still to the church of Rome. Atterbury.
- REFINEDLY. adv. [from refine.] With affected elegance.
Will any dog
Refinedly leave his bitches and his bones, Dryden.
To turn a wheel?
- REFINEMENT. n. f. [from refine.]
1. The act of purifying, by clearing any thing from dross and recrementitious matter.
The more bodies are of kin to spirit in subtilty and refinement, the more diffusive are they. Norris.
  2. Improvement in elegance or purity.
From the civil war to this time, I doubt whether the corruptions in our language have not equalled its refinements. Sw.
  3. Artificial practice.
The rules religion prescribes are more successful in publick and private affairs, than the refinements of irregular cunning. Rog.
  4. Affection of elegant improvement.
The flirts about town had a design to leave us in the lurch, by some of their late refinements. Addison's Guardian.
- REFINER. n. f. [from refine.]
1. Purifier; one who clears from dross or recrement.
The refiners of iron observe, that that iron stone is hardest

REF

- to melt, which is fullest of metal; and that easiest, which hath most dross. Bacon's Physical Remains.
2. Improver in elegance.
As they have been the great refiners of our language, so it hath been my chief ambition to imitate them. Swift.
  3. Inventor of superfluous subtilties.
No men see less of the truth of things, than these great refiners upon incidents, who are so wonderfully subtle, and over wise in their conceptions. Addison's Spectator, N<sup>o</sup> 170.
Some refiners pretend to argue for the usefulness of parties in such a government as ours. Swift.
- To REFIT. v. a. [refait, Fr. re and fit.] To repair; to restore after damage.
He will not allow that there are any such signs of art in the make of the present globe, or that there was so great care taken in the refitting of it up again at the deluge. Woodw.
Permit our ships a shelter on your shoars,
Refitted from your woods with planks and oars. Dryden.
- To REFLECT. v. a. [reflechir, Fr. reflecto, Lat.] To throw back.
We, his gather'd beams
Reflected, may with matter fere foment. Milton.
Bodies close together reflect their own colour. Dryden.
- To REFLECT. v. n.
1. To throw back light.
In dead men's skulls, and in those holes,
Where eyes did once inhabit, there were crept,
As 'twere in scorn of eyes, reflecting gems. Shakespeare.
  2. To bend back.
Inanimate matter moves always in a straight line, and never reflects in an angle, nor bends in a circle, which is a continual reflection, unless either by some external impulse, or by an intrinsic principle of gravity. Bentley's Sermons.
  3. To throw back the thoughts upon the past or on themselves.
The imagination casts thoughts in our way, and forces the understanding to reflect upon them. Duppa.
In every action reflect upon the end; and in your undertaking it, consider why you do it. Taylor.
Who faith, who could such ill events expect?
With shame on his own counsels doth reflect. Denham.
When men are grown up, and reflect on their own minds, they cannot find any thing more ancient there, than those opinions which were taught them before their memory began to keep a register of their actions. Locke.
It is hard, that any part of my land should be settled upon one who has used me to ill; and yet I could not see a sprig of any bough of this whole walk of trees, but I should reflect upon her and her severity. Addison's Spectator.
Let the king dismiss his woes,
Reflecting on her fair renown;
And take the cypress from his brows,
To put his wonted laurels on. Prior.
  4. To consider attentively.
Into myself my reason's eye I turn'd;
And as I much *reflect*ed, much I mourn'd. Prior.
  5. To throw reproach or censure.
Neither do I reflect in the least upon the memory of his late majesty, whom I entirely acquit of any imputation. Sw.
  6. To bring reproach.
Errors of wives reflect on husbands still. Dryden.
- REFLECTANT. adj. [reflectans, Lat.] Bending back; flying back.
The ray descendent, and the ray reflectant, flying with so great a speed, that the air between them cannot take a formal play any way, before the beams of the light be on both sides of it; it follows, that, according to the nature of humid things, it must first only swell. Digby on the Soul.
- REFLECTION. n. f. [from reflect: thence I think reflexion less proper: reflexion, Fr. reflexus, Lat.]
1. The act of throwing back.
The eye sees not itself,
But by reflection from other things. Shakespeare, Julius Caesar.
If the sun's light consisted but of one sort of rays, there would be but one colour, and it would be impossible to produce any new by reflections or refractions. Cheyne.
  2. The act of bending back.
Inanimate matter moves always in a straight line, nor ever reflects in an angle or circle, which is a continual reflection, unless by some external impulse. Bentley's Sermons.
  3. That which is reflected.
She shines not upon fools, lest the reflection should hurt her. Shakespeare, Cymbeline.
As the sun in water we can bear,
Yet not the sun, but his reflection there;
So let us view her here, in what she was,
And take her image in this wat'ry glass. Dryden.
  4. Thought thrown back upon the past.
The three first parts I dedicate to my old friends, to take off those melancholy reflections, which the sense of age, infirmity and death may give them.
This dreadful image so possess'd her mind,
She ceas'd all farther hope; and now began
To make reflection on th' unhappy man. Dryden.
Job's

REF

- Job's reflections on his once flourishing estate, did at the same time afflict and encourage him. Atterbury.
What wounding reproaches of soul must he feel, from the reflections on his own ingratitude. Rogers's Sermons.
5. The action of the mind upon itself.
Reflection is the perception of the operations of our own minds within us, as it is employed about the ideas it has got. Locke.
  6. Attentive consideration.
This delight grows and improves under thought and reflection; and while it exercises, does also endear itself to the mind; at the same time employing and inflaming the meditations. South's Sermons.
  7. Censure.
He dy'd; and oh! may no reflection shed
Its poisonous venom on the royal dead. Prior.
- REFLECTIVE. adj. [from reflect.]
1. Throwing back images.
When the weary king gave place to night,
His beams he to his royal brother lent,
And so shone still in his reflective light. Dryden.
In the reflective stream the fighting bride
Viewing her charms impair'd, abash'd shall hide
Her penive head. Prior.
  2. Considering things past; considering the operations of the mind.
Fore'd by reflective reason I confess,
That human science is uncertain guess. Prior.
- REFLECTOR. n. f. [from reflect.] Considerer.
There is scarce any thing that nature has made, or that men do suffer, whence the devout reflector cannot take an occasion of an aspiring meditation. Boyle on Colours.
- REFLEX. adj. [reflexus, Lat.] Directed backward.
The motions of my mind are as obvious to the reflex act of the soul, or the turning of the intellectual eye inward upon its own actions, as the passions of my sense are obvious to my sense; I see the object, and I perceive that I see it. Hale.
The order and beauty of the inanimate parts of the world, the discernible ends of them do evince by a reflex argument, that it is the workmanship, not of blind mechanism or blinder chance, but of an intelligent and benign agent. Bentley.
- REFLEX. n. f. [reflexus, Lat.] Reflection.
There was no other way for angels to sin, but by reflex of their understandings upon themselves. Hooker.
I'll say you gray is not the morning's eye,
'Tis but the pale reflex of Cynthia's brow. Shakespeare.
- REFLEXIBILITY. n. f. [from reflexible.] The quality of being reflexible.
Reflexibility of rays is their disposition to be reflected or turned back into the same medium from any other medium, upon whose surface they fall; and rays are more or less reflexible, which are turned back more or less easily. Newton.
- REFLEXIBLE. adj. [from reflexus, Lat.] Capable to be thrown back.
Sir Isaac Newton has demonstrated, by convincing experiments, that the light of the sun consists of rays differently refrangible and reflexible; and that those rays are differently reflexible, that are differently refrangible. Cheyne.
- REFLEXIVE. adj. [reflexus, Lat.] Having respect to something past.
That assurance reflexive cannot be a divine faith, but at the most an human, yet such as perhaps I may have no doubting mixed with. Hammond's Practical Catechism.
- REFLEXIVELY. adv. [from reflexive.] In a backward direction.
Solomon tells us life and death are in the power of the tongue, and that not only directly in regard of the good or ill we may do to others, but reflexively also, in respect of what may rebound to ourselves. Government of the Tongue.
- REFLOAT. n. f. [re and float.] Ebb; reflux.
The main float and refloat of the sea, is by consent of the universe, as part of the diurnal motion. Bacon.
- To REFOURISH. v. a. [re and flourish.] To flourish anew.
Virtue given for lost
Revives, reflourishes, then vigorous most,
When most unactive deem'd. Milton's Agonistes.
- To REFLOW. v. n. [refluere, Fr. re and flow.] To flow back.
- REFLUENT. adj. [refluens, Lat.] Running back; flowing back.
The liver receives the refluent blood almost from all the parts of the abdomen. Arbuthnot on Aliments.
Tell, by what paths,
Back to the fountain's head the sea conveys
The refluent rivers, and the land repays. Blackmore.
- REFLUX. n. f. [reflux, Fr. refluxus, Lat.] Backward course of water.
Besides
Mine own that 'bide upon me, all from me
Shall with a fierce reflux on me redound. Milton.
The variety of the flux and reflux of Euripus, or whether the same do ebb and flow seven times a day, is inconceivable. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
- REFOCILLATION. n. f. [refocillo, Lat.] Restoration of strength by refreshment.

REF

- To REFORM. v. a. [reformo, Lat. reformo, Fr.] To change from worse to better.
A sect in England, following the very same rule of policy, seeketh to reform even the French reformation, and purge out from thence also dregs of popery. Hooker, b. iv. f. 8.
Seat worther of Gods, was built
With second thoughts, reforming what was old. Milton.
May no such storm
Fall on our times, where ruin must reform. Denham.
Now low'ring looks preface approaching storms,
And now prevailing love her face reforms. Dryden.
One cannot attempt the perfect reforming the languages of the world, without rendering himself ridiculous. Locke.
The example alone of a vicious prince will corrupt an age; but that of a good one will not reform it. Swift.
- To REFORM. v. n. To make a change from worse to better.
Was his doctrine of the mass struck out in this conflict? or did it give him occasion of reforming in this point? Atterbury.
- REFORM. n. f. [French.] Reformation.
- REFORMATION. n. f. [reformation, Fr. from reform.]
1. Change from worse to better.
Never came reformation in a flood
With such a heady current, scow'ring faults;
Nor ever Hydra-headed wilfulness
So soon did lose his seat, as in this king. Shakespeare, Henry V.
Satire lashes vice into reformation. Dryden.
The pagan converts mention this great reformation of those who had been the greatest sinners, with that sudden and surprising change, which the christian religion made in the lives of the most profligate. Addison.
  2. The change of religion from the corruptions of popery to its primitive state.
The burden of the reformation lay on Luther's shoulders. Atterbury.
- REFORMER. n. f. [from reform.]
1. One who makes a change for the better; an amender.
Publick reformers had need first practise that on their own hearts, which they purpose to try on others. King Charles.
The complaint is more general, than the endeavours to redress it: Abroad every man would be a reformer, how very few at home. Sprat's Sermons.
It was honour enough, to behold the English churches reformed; that is, delivered from the reformers. South.
  2. Those who changed religion from popish corruptions and innovations.
Our first reformers were famous confessors and martyrs all over the world. Bacon.
- To REFRACT. v. a. [refractus, Lat.] To break the natural course of rays.
If its angle of incidence be large, and the refractive power of the medium not very strong to throw it far from the perpendicular, it will be refracted. Cheyne's Phil. Princ.
Rays of light are urged by the refracting media. Cheyne.
Refracted from yon eastern cloud,
The grand ethereal bow shoots up. Thomson.
- REFRACTION. n. f. [refraction, Fr.]
Refraction, in general, is the incurvation or change of determination in the body moved, which happens to it whilst it enters or penetrates any medium: in dioptricks, it is the variation of a ray of light from that right line, which it would have passed on in, had not the density of the medium turned it aside. Harris.
Refraction, out of the rarer medium into the denser, is made towards the perpendicular. Newton's Opticks.
- REFRACTIVE. adj. [from refract.] Having the power of refraction.
Those superficies of transparent bodies reflect the greatest quantity of light, which have the greatest refracting power; that is, which intercede mediums that differ most in their refractive densities. Newton's Opticks.
I did never allow any man's refractoriness against the privileges and orders of the houses. King Charles.
Great complaint was made by the presbyterian gang, of my refractoriness to obey the parliament's order. Saunderson.
- REFRACTORY. adj. [refractorius, Fr. refractorius, Lat. and so should be written refractory. It is now accented on the first syllable, but by Shakespeare on the second.] Obdinate; perverse; contumacious.
There is a law in each well-order'd nation,
To curb those raging appetites that are Most disobedient and refractory. Shakespeare.
A rough hewn seaman, being brought before a wife justice for some misdemeanor, was by him ordered to be sent away to prison, and was refractory after he heard his doom, inasmuch as he would not stir a foot from the place where he stood; saying, it was better to stand where he was, than go to a worse place. Bacon's Apophthegms.
Vulgar compliance with any illegal and extravagant ways, like violent motions in nature, soon grows weary of itself, and ends in a refractory fullness. King Charles.
Refractory

REF

Refractory mortal! if thou wilt not trust thy friends, take what follows; know assuredly, before next full moon, that thou wilt be hung up in chains. Arbutnot's Hist. of J. Bull.

These atoms of theirs may have it in them, but they are refractory and fullen; and therefore, like men of the same tempers, must be banged and buffeted into reason. Bentley.

REFRAGABLE. adj. [refragabilis, Lat.] Capable of confutation and conviction.

TO REFRAIN. v. a. [refrenere, Fr. re and frænum, Lat.] To hold back; to keep from action.

Hold not thy tongue, O God, keep not still silence; re- frain not thyself. Psal. lxxxiii. 1.

My son, walk not thou in the way with them, refrain thy foot from their path. Prov. i. 15.

Nor from the holy one of heav'n
Refrain'd his tongue. Milton.

Neptune aton'd, his wrath shall now refrain,
Or thwart the synod of the gods in vain. Pope.

TO REFRAIN. v. n. To forbear; to abstain; to spare.

In what place, or upon what consideration soever it be, they do it, were it in their own opinion of no force being done, they would undoubtedly refrain to do it. Hooker.

For my name's sake will I defer mine anger, and refrain for thee, that I cut thee not off. Jf. xlviii. 9.

That they fed not on flesh, at least the faithful party before the flood, may become more probable, because they refrained therefrom some time after. Brown's Vulg. Err.

REFRANGIBILITY. n. f. [from refrangibile.]

Refrangibility of the rays of light, is their disposition to be refracted or turned out of their way, in passing out of one transparent body or medium into another. Newton.

REFRANGIBLE. adj. [re and frango, Lat.]

As some rays are more refrangible than others; that is, are more turned out of their course, in passing from one medium to another; it follows, that after such refraction, they will be separated, and their distinct colour observed. Locke.

REFRACTION. n. f. [re and fracto, Lat.] The act of refracting.

TO REFRESH. v. a. [refraischere, Fr. refrigerare, Lat.]

1. To recreate; to relieve after pain, fatigue or want.

Service shall with steeld linewits toil;
And labour shall refresh itself with hope. Shakespeare.

Musick was ordain'd to refresh the mind of man,
After his studies or his usual pain. Shakespeare.

He was in no danger to be overtaken; so that he was content to refresh his men. Clarendon, b. viii.

His meals are coarse and short, his employment warrantable, his sleep certain and refreshing, neither interrupted with the lalches of a guilty mind, nor the aches of a crazy body. South.

If you would have trees to thrive, take care that no plants be near them, which may deprive them of nourishment, or hinder refreshings and helps that they might receive. Mortim.

2. To improve by new touches any thing impaired.

The rest refresh the scaly snakes, that sold
The shield of Pallas, and renew their gold. Dryden.

3. To refrigerate; to cool.

A dew coming after heat refresheth. Ecluf. xliii. 22.

REFRESH. n. f. [from refresch.] That which refreshes.

The kind refresher of the summer heats. Thomson.

REFRESHMENT. n. f. [from refresch.]

1. Relief after pain, want or fatigue.

2. That which gives relief, as food, rest:

He was full of agony and horror upon the approach of a dismal death, and to had most need of the refreshments of society, and the friendly assistances of his disciples. South.

Such honest refreshments and comforts of life, our christian liberty has made it lawful for us to use. Sprat.

REFRIGERANT. adj. [refrigerant, Fr. from refrigerare.] Cooling; mitigating heat.

In the cure of gangrenes, you must beware of dry heat, and resort to things that are refrigerant, with an inward warmth and virtue of cherishing. Bacon.

If it arise from an external cause, apply refrigerants, without any preceding evacuation. Wise man's Surgery.

TO REFRIGERATE. v. a. [refrigerare, re and frigus, Lat.] To cool.

The great breezes, which the motion of the air in great circles, such as the girdle of the world, produceth, do refrigerate; and therefore in those parts noon is nothing so hot, when the breezes are great, as about ten of the clock in the forenoon. Bacon's Natural History.

Whether they be refrigerated inclinantly or somewhat equinoxially, though in a lesser degree, they discover some verticity. Brown's Vulg. Errors.

REFRIGERATION. n. f. [refrigeratio, Lat. refrigeration, Fr.] The act of cooling; the state of being cooled.

Divers do flut; the cause may be the refrigeration of the tongue, whereby it is less apt to move. Bacon.

If the mere refrigeration of the air would fit it for breathing, this might be somewhat helped with bellows. Wilkins.

REFRIGERATIVE. adj. [refrigerativus, Fr. refrigeratorius, Lat.]

REFRIGATORY. f. Cooling; having the power to cool.

REF

REFRIGERATORY. n. f.

 Whoſe youthful ſpirit, in me regenerate,
 Doth with a twofold vigor liſt me up
 To reach at victory. Shakeſp. Richard II.
 2. Born anew by grace to a chriſtian life.
 For from the mercy-ſeat above,
 Preventive grace deſcending, had remov'd
 The ſtony from their hearts, and made new fleſh
Regenerate grow inſtead. Milton.
 If you fulfil this reſolution, though you fall ſometimes by infirmity; nay, though you ſhould fall into ſome greater act, even of deliberate ſin, which you preſently retract by confeſſion and amendment, you are nevertheless in a regenerate eſtate, you live the life of a chriſtian here, and ſhall inherit the reward that is promiſed to ſuch in a glorious immortality hereafter. Wake's Preparation for Death.
REGENERATION. n. ſ. [regeneration, Fr.] New birth; birth by grace from carnal affections to a chriſtian life.
 He ſaved us by the waſhing of regeneration, and renewing of the Holy Ghoſt. Tit. iii. 5.
REGENERATENESS. n. ſ. [from regenerate.] The ſtate of being regenerate.
REGENT. adj. [regens, Fr. regens, Lat.]
 1. Governing; ruling.
 The operations of human life flow not from the corporeal moles, but from ſome other active regent principle that reſides in the body, or governs it, which we call the ſoul. Hale.
 2. Exercizing vicarious authority.
 He together calls the regent pow'rs
 Under him regent. Milton's Par. Loſt, b. iii.

REG

REGENT. n. ſ.
 1. Governour; ruler.
 Now for once beguild
 Uriel, though regent of the ſun, and held
 The ſharpeſt-ſighted ſpirit of all in heav'n. Milton.
 Neither of theſe are any impediment, becauſe the regent thereof is of an infinite immenſity. Hale.
 But let a heifer with gilt horns be led
 To Juno, regent of the marriage bed. Dryden.
 2. One inveſted with vicarious royalty.
 Lord regent, I do greet your excellence
 With letters of commiſſion from the king. Shakeſp.
REGENTSHIP. n. ſ. [from regent.]
 1. Power of governing.
 2. Deputed authority.
 If York have ill demean'd himſelf in France,
 Then let him be deny'd the regentſhip. Shakeſp.
REGERMINATION. n. ſ. [re and germination.] The act of ſprouting again.
REGIBLE. adj. Governable. Diſt.
REGICIDE. n. ſ. [regicida, Lat.]
 1. Murderer of his king.
 I through the mazes of the bloody field,
 Hunted your ſacred life; which that I miſ'd
 Was the propitious error of my fate,
 Not of my ſoul; my ſoul's a regicide. Dryden.
 2. [Regicidium, Lat.] Murder of his king.
 Were it not for this amulet, how were it poſſible for any to think they may venture upon perjury, ſacrilege, murder, regicide, without impeachment to their ſainthip. D. of Piety.
 Did fate or we, when great Atreides dy'd,
 Urge the bold traitor to the regicide. Pope's Odyſſy.
REGIMEN. n. ſ. [Latin.] That care in diet and living, that is ſuitable to every particular courſe of medicine.
 Yet ſhould ſome neighbour feel a pain,
 Juſt in the parts where I complain,
 How many a meſſage would he ſend?
 What hearty prayers, that I ſhould mend?
 Enquire what regimen I kept,
 What gave me eaſe, and how I ſlept. Swift.
REGIMENT. n. ſ. [regiment, old Fr.]
 1. Eſtabliſhed government; polity. Not in uſe.
 We all make complaint of the iniquity of our times, not unjuſtly, for the days are evil; but compare them with thoſe times wherein there were no civil ſocieties, with thoſe times wherein there was as yet no manner of publick regiment eſtabliſhed, and we have ſurely good cauſe to think, that God hath bleſſed us exceedingly. Hooker, b. i. ſ. 10.
 The corruption of our nature being preſuppoſed, we may not deny, but that the law of nature doth now require of neceſſity ſome kind of regiment. Hooker, b. i. ſ. 10.
 2. Rule; authority. Not in uſe.
 The regiment of the ſoul over the body, is the regiment of the more active part over the paſſive. Hale.
 3. [Regiment, Fr.] A body of ſoldiers under one colonel.
 Th' adulterous Antony turns you off,
 And gives his potent regiment to a trull. Shakeſp.
 Higher to the plain we'll ſet forth,
 In beſt appointment, all our regiments. Shakeſp.
 The elder did whole regiments afford,
 The younger brought his conduct and his ſword. Waller.
 The ſtanding regiments, the fort, the town,
 All but this wicked ſiſter are our own. Waller.
 Now thy aid
 Eugene, with regiments unequal preſt, Awaits. Phillips.
REGIMENTAL. adj. [from regiment.] Belonging to a regiment; military.
REGION. n. ſ. [region, Fr. regio, Lat.]
 1. Tract of land; country; tract of ſpace.
 All the regions
 Do ſeemingly revolt; and, who reſiſt,
 Are mock'd for valiant ignorance. Shakeſp.
 Her eyes in heav'n
 Would through the airy region ſtream ſo bright,
 That birds would ſing, and think it were not night. Shak.
 The upper regions of the air perceive the collection of the matter of tempeſts before the air below. Bacon.
 They rag'd the goddeſs, and with fury fraught,
 The reſtleſs regions of the ſtorms the fought. Dryden.
 2. Part of the body.
 The bow is bent and drawn, make from the ſhaft.
 —Let it fall rather, though the fork invade
 The region of my heart. Shakeſp. King Lear.
 3. Place; rank.
 The gentleman kept company with the wild prince and Poins: he is of too high a region; he knows too much. Shakeſp.
REGISTER. n. ſ. [regiſtre, Fr. regiſtrum, Lat.] An account of any thing regularly kept.
 Joy may you have, and everlaſting fame,
 Of late moſt hard achievement by you done,
 For which inrolled is your glorious name
 In heavenly regiſters above the ſun. Fairy Queen, Sir

REG

Sir John, as you have one eye upon my follies, as you hear them unfolded, turn another into the regiſter of your own. Shak.
 This iſland, as appeareth by faithful regiſters of thoſe times, had ſhips of great content. Bacon's New Atlantis.
 Of theſe experiments, our friend, pointing at the regiſter of this dialogue, will perhaps give you a more particular account. Boyle.
 For a conſpiracy againſt the emperor Claudius, it was ordered that Scribonianus's name and conſulate ſhould be eſtimated out of all publick regiſters and inſcriptions. Addiſon.
 2. [Regiſtrarius, law Lat.] The officer whoſe buſineſs is to write and keep the regiſter.
TO REGISTER. v. a. [regiſtrare, Fr. from the noun.]
 1. To record; to preſerve from oblivion by authentick accounts.
 The Roman emperors registered their moſt remarkable buildings, as well as actions. Addiſon's Remarks on Italy.
 2. To enrol; to ſet down in a liſt.
 Such follow him, as ſhall be regiſter'd;
 Part good, part bad: of bad the longer ſcrawl. Milton.
REGISTRY. n. ſ. [from regiſter.]
 1. The act of inſerting in the regiſter.
 A little fee was to be paid for the regiſtry. Graunt.
 2. The place where the regiſter is kept.
 3. A liſt of facts recorded.
 I wonder why a regiſtry has not been kept in the college of phyſicians of things invented. Temple.
REGLEMENT. n. ſ. [French.] Regulation. Not uſed.
 To ſpeak of the reformation and reglement of uſury, by the balance of commodities and diſcommodities thereof, two things are to be reconciled. Bacon's Eſſays.
REGLETTE. n. ſ. [reglette, from regle, Fr.] Ledge of wood exactly planed, by which printers ſeparate their lines in pages widely printed.
REIGNANT. adj. [French.] Reigning; predominant; prevalent; having power.
 Princes are ſhy of their ſucceſſors, and there may be reaſonably ſuppoſed in queens regnant a little proportion of tenderneſs that way, more than in kings. Wotton.
 The law was regnant, and conſin'd his thought,
 Hell was not conquer'd, when the poet wrote. Waller.
 His guilt is clear, his proofs are pregnant,
 A traitor to the vices regnant. Swift's Miscellanies.
TO REGORGE. v. a. [re and gorge.]
 1. To vomit up; to throw back.
 It was ſcoffingly ſaid, he had eaten the king's gooſe, and did then regorge the feathers. Hayward.
 2. To ſwallow eagerly.
 Drunk with wine,
 And fat regorg'd of bulls and goats. Milton's Agoniſtes.
 3. [Regorgo, Fr.] To ſwallow back.
 As tides at highſt mark regorge the flood,
 So fate, that could no more improve their joy,
 Took a malicious pleaſure to deſtroy. Dryden.
TO REGRAFT. v. a. [regreſſer, Fr. re and graft.] To graft again.
 Oit regrafting the ſame ſcions, may make fruit greater. Bac.
TO REGRAVE. v. a. [re and grave.] To grave back.
 He, by letters-patents, incorporated them by the name of the dean and chapter of Trinity-church in Norwich, and re-granted their lands to them. Ayliffe's Parergon.
TO REGRATE. v. a.
 1. To offend; to ſhock.
 The cloathing of the tortoiſe and viper rather *regrate*th, than pleaſeth the eye. Derham's Phyſico-Theology.
 2. [Regreſſer, Fr.] To engroſs; to forfeit.
 Neither ſhould they buy any corn, unleſs it were to make malt thereof; for by ſuch engroſſing and regrating, the dearth, that commonly reigneth in England, hath been cauſed. Spens.
REGRAFTER. n. ſ. [regreſſier, Fr. from regrate.] Foreſtaller; engroſſer.
TO REGREET. v. a. [re and greet.] To reſalute; to greet a ſecond time.
 Hereford, on pain of death,
 Till twice five ſummers have enrich'd our fields,
 Shall not regreet our fair dominions,
 But lead the ſtranger paths of baniſhment. Shakeſp.
REGREET. n. ſ. [from the verb.] Return or exchange of ſalutation. Not in uſe.
 And ſhall theſe hands, ſo newly join'd in love,
 Unyoke this ſeizure, and this kind regreet?
 Play ſalt and looſe with faith? Shakeſp. King John.
REGRESS. n. ſ. [regreſſus, Fr. regreſſus, Latin.] Paſſage back; power of paſſing back.
 'Tis their natural place which they always tend to; and from which there is no progreſs nor regreſſus. Burmet.
TO REGRESS. v. n. [regreſſus, Lat.] To go back; to return; to paſs back to the former ſtate or place.
 All being forced unto fluent conſiſtencies, naturally regreſſus unto their former ſolidities. Brown.
REGRESSION. n. ſ. [regreſſus, Lat.] The act of returning or going back.
 To deſire there were no God, were plainly to unwiſh their own being, which muſt needs be annihilated in the ſubſtance of that eſſence, which ſubſtantially ſupporteth them, and reſtrains from regreſſion into nothing. Brown.

REGRET. n. ſ. [regret, Fr. regretto, Italian. Prior has uſed it in the plural; but, I believe, without authority.]
 1. Vexation at ſomething paſt; bitterneſs of reflection.
 I never bare any touch of conſcience with greater regret. King Charles.
 A paſſionate regret at ſin, a grief and ſadneſs at its memory; enters us into God's roll of mourners. Decay of Piety.
 Though ſin offers itſelf in never ſo pleaſing a drefs, yet the remorse and inward regrets of the ſoul, upon the commiſſion of it, infinitely overbalance thoſe faint gratifications it affords the ſenſes. South's Sermons.
 2. Grief; ſorrow.
 Never any prince expreſſed a more lively regret for the loſs of a ſervant, than his majeſty did for this great man; in all offices of grace towards his ſervants, and in a wonderful ſollicitous care for the payment of his debts. Clarendon.
 That freedom, which all forrows claim,
 She does for thy content reſign;
 Her piety itſelf would blame,
 If her regrets ſhould waken thine. Prior.
 3. Diſlike; averſion. Not proper.
 Is it a virtue to have ſome ineffectual regrets to damnation, and ſuch a virtue too, as ſhall ſerve to balance all our vices. Decay of Piety.
TO REGRET. v. a. [regreſſer, Fr. from the noun.]
 1. To repent; to grieve at.
 I ſhall not regret the trouble my experiments coſt me, if they be found ſerviceable to the purpoſes of reſpiration. Boyle.
 Calmly he look'd on either life, and here
 Saw nothing to regret, or there to fear;
 From nature's tempeſt eaſt roſe ſatiſfy'd,
 Thank'd heav'n that he had liv'd, and that he dy'd. Pope.
 2. To be uneaſy at. Not proper.
 Thoſe, the impiety of whoſe lives makes them regret a deity, and ſecretly wiſh there were none, will greedily liſten to atheiſtical notions. Glanville's Scrup.
REGUERDON. n. ſ. [re and guerdon.] Reward; recompence.
 Stoop, and ſet your knee againſt my foot;
 And in reguerdon of that duty done,
 I gird thee with the valiant ſword of York. Shakeſp.
TO REGUERDON. v. a. [from the noun.] To reward. The verb and noun are both obſolete.
 Long ſince we were reſolv'd of your truth,
 Your faithful ſervice and your toil in war;
 Yet never have you taſted your reward,
 Or been reguerdon'd with ſo much as thanks. Shakeſp.
REGULAR. adj. [regulier, Fr. regularis, Lat.]
 1. Agreeable to rule; conſiſtent with the mode preſcribed.
 The common cant of critics is, that though the lines are good, it is not a regular piece. Guardian.
 The ways of heav'n are dark and intricate,
 Puzzled in mazes, and perplex'd with errors;
 Our underſtanding traces them in vain,
 Loſt and bewilder'd in the fruitleſs ſearch;
 Nor ſees with how much art the windings run,
 Nor where the regular conſuſion ends. Addiſon.
 So when we view ſome well-proportion'd dome,
 No monſtrous height or breadth or length appear;
 The whole at once is bold and regular. Pope.
 2. Governed by ſtrict regulations.
 So juſt thy ſkill, ſo regular my rage. Pope.
 3. In geometry, regular body is a ſolid, whoſe ſurface is compoſed of regular and equal figures, and whoſe ſolid angles are all equal, and of which there are five ſorts, viz. 1. A pyramid comprehended under four equal and equilateral triangles. 2. A cube, whoſe ſurface is compoſed of ſix equal ſquares. 3. That which is bounded by eight equal and equilateral triangles. 4. That which is contained under twelve equal and equilateral pentagons. 5. A body conſiſting of twenty equal and equilateral triangles: and mathematicians demonſtrate, that there can be no more regular bodies than theſe five. Muschenbr.
 There is no univerſal reaſon, not confined to human fancy, that a figure, called regular, which hath equal ſides and angles, is more beautiful than any irregular one. Bentley.
 4. Inſtituted or initiated according to eſtabliſhed forms or diſcipline: as, a regular doctor; regular troops.
REGULAR. n. ſ. [regulier, Fr.]
 In the Romiſh church, all perſons are ſaid to be regulars, that do profeſs and follow a certain rule of life, in Latin ſtil'd regula; and do likewise obſerve the three approved vows of poverty, chaſtity and obedience. Ayliffe's Parergon.
REGULARITY. n. ſ. [regularité, Fr. from regular.]
 1. Agreeableneſs to rule.
 2. Method; certain order.
Regularity is certain, where it is not ſo apparent, as in all fluids; for regularity is a ſimilitude continued. Grew.
 He was a mighty lover of regularity and order; and managed all his affairs with the utmoſt exactneſs. Atterbury.

REJ

REGULARLY. adv. [from regular.] In a manner concordant to rule.

If those painters, who have left us such fair platforms, had rigorously observed it in their figures, they had indeed made things more regularly true, but withal very unpleasing. Dryd.

With one judicious stroke,
On the plain ground Apelles drew
A circle regularly true. Prior.

Strains that neither ebb nor flow,
Correctly cold and regularly low. Pope.

TO REGULATE. v. a. [from regula, Lat.]

1. To adjust by rule or method.
Nature, in the production of things, always designs them to partake of certain, regulated, established essences, which are to be the models of all things to be produced: this, in that crude sense, would need some better explication. Locke.

2. To direct.
Regulate the patient in his manner of living. Wifeman.

Ev'n goddesses are women; and no wife
Has power to regulate her husband's life. Dryden.

REGULATION. n. f. [from regulate.]

1. The act of regulating.
Being but stupid matter, they cannot continue any regular and constant motion, without the guidance and regulation of some intelligent being. Ray on the Creation.

2. Method; the effect of regulation.

REGULATOR. n. f. [from regulate.]

1. One that regulates.
The regularity of corporeal principles sheweth them to come at first from a divine regulator. Grew's Cosmol.

2. That part of a machine which makes the motion equable.

REGULUS. n. f. [Lat. regule, Fr.]

Regulus is the finer and most weighty part of metals, which settles at the bottom upon melting. Quincy.

TO REGURGITATE. v. n. [re and gurgit, Lat. regorger, Fr.] To throw back; to pour back.

The inhabitants of the city remove themselves into the country so long, until, for want of receipt and encouragement, it regurgitates and sends them back. Graunt.

Arguments of divine wisdom, in the frame of animate bodies, are the artificial position of many valves, all so situate, as to give a free passage to the blood in their due channels, but not permit them to regurgitate and disturb the great circulation. Bentley.

TO REGURGITATE. v. n. To be poured back.

Nature was wont to evacuate its vicious blood out of these veins, which passage being stop'd, it regurgitates upwards to the lungs. Harvey on Consumptions.

REGURGITATION. n. f. [from regurgitate.] Reforption; the act of swallowing back.

Regurgitation of matter is the constant symptom. Sharp.

TO REHEAR. v. a. [re and hear.] To hear again.

My design is to give all persons a rehearing, who have suffered under any unjust sentence. Addison's Examiner.

REHEARSAL. n. f. [from rehearse.]

1. Repetition; recital.
Twice we appoint, that the words which the minister pronounce, the whole congregation shall repeat after him; as first in the public confession of sins, and again in rehearsal of our Lord's prayer after the blessed sacrament. Hooker.

What dream'd my lord? tell me, and I'll requite it
With sweet rehearsal of my morning's dream. Shakefp.

What respected their actions as a rule or admonition, applied to yours, is only a rehearsal, whose zeal in asserting the ministerial cause is so generally known. South.

2. The recital of any thing previous to public exhibition.

The chief of Rome,
With gaping mouths to these rehearsals come. Dryden.

TO REHEARSE. v. a. [from rehearsal.] Skinner.

1. To repeat; to recite.
Rehearse not unto another that which is told. Ecluf.

Of modest poets be thou just,
To silent shades repeat thy verse,
'Till fame and echo almost burst,
Yet hardly dare one line rehearse. Swift.

2. To relate; to tell.
Great master of the muse! inspir'd
The pedigree of nature to rehearse,
And found the maker's work in equal verse. Dryden.

3. To recite previously to public exhibition.
All Rome is pleased, when Statius will rehearse. Dryden.

TO REJECT. v. a. [from rejection, Lat.]

1. To dismiss without compliance with proposal or acceptance of offer.
Barbarossa was rejected into Syria, although he perceived that it tended to his disgrace. Knolles's History of the Turks.

2. To cast off; to make an abject.
Thou hast rejected the word of the Lord, and the Lord hath rejected thee from being king. 1 Sam. xv. 26.

Give me wisdom, and reject me not from among thy children. Wisd. ix. 4.

He is despised and rejected of men, a man of sorrows. If.

3. To refuse; not to accept.
Because thou hast rejected knowledge, I will reject thee, that thou shalt be no priest. Hefew iv. 6.

Whether it be a divine revelation or no, reason must judge, which can never permit the mind to reject a greater evidence, to embrace what is less evident. Locke.

4. To throw aside.

REJECTION. n. f. [from reject, Lat.] The act of casting off or throwing aside.

The rejection I use of experiments, is infinite; but if an experiment be probable and of great use, I receive it. Bacon.

Medicines urinate do not work by rejection and indigestion, as solutive do. Bacon.

REIGLE. n. f. [from regle, Fr.] A hollow cut to guide any thing.

A flood gate is drawn up and let down through the reigles in the tide posts. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

TO REIGN. v. n. [from regno, Lat. regner, Fr.]

1. To enjoy or exercise sovereign authority.
This, done by them, gave them such an authority, that though he reigned, they in effect ruled, most men honouring them, because they only deserved honour. Sidney, b. ii.

Tell me, shall Banquo's issue ever Reign in this kingdom? Shakefp. Macbeth.

A king shall reign in righteousness, and princes rule in judgment. If. xxxi. 1.

Did he not first seven years a life-time reign. Cowley.

This right arm shall fix
Her seat of empire; and your son shall reign. A. Philips.

2. To be predominant; to prevail.
Now did the sign reign, under which Perkin should appear. Bacon.

More are sick in the summer, and more die in the winter, except in pestilential diseases, which commonly reign in summer or autumn. Bacon.

Great secrecy reigns in their public councils. Addison.

3. To obtain power or dominion.
That as sin reigned unto death, even so might grace reign through righteousness unto eternal life by Jesus Christ. Roman.

REIGN. n. f. [from regno, Fr. regnum, Lat.]

1. Royal authority; sovereignty.
He who like a father held his reign,
So soon forgot, was just and wife in vain. Pope.

2. Time of a king's government.
Queer country puts extol queen Befs's reign,
And of lost hospitality complain. Branston.

Ruffel's blood
Stain'd the sad annals of a giddy reign. Thomson.

3. Kingdom; dominions.
Saturn's sons receiv'd the threefold reign
Of heav'n, of ocean and deep hell beneath. Prior.

That wrath which hurl'd to Pluto's gloomy reign,
The souls of mighty chiefs untimely slain. Pope.

TO REIMBODY. v. n. [re and imbody, which is more frequently, but not more properly, written embody.] To embody again.

Quicksilver, broken into little globes, the parts brought to touch immediately reembody. Boyl.

TO REIMBURSE. v. a. [re, in and burse, Fr. a purse.] To repay; to repair loss or expence by an equivalent.

Hath he saved any kingdom at his own expence, to give him a title of reimbursing himself by the destruction of ours? Swift's Miscellania.

REIMBURSEMENT. n. f. [from reimburse.] Reparation or repayment.

If any person has been at expence about the funeral of a scholar, he may retain his books for the reimbursement. Ayliffe.

TO REIMPREGNATE. v. a. [re and impregnate.] To impregnate anew.

The vigor of the loadstone is destroyed by fire, nor will it be reimpregnated by any other magnet than the earth. Brown.

REIMPRESSION. n. f. [re and impression.] A second or repeated impression.

REIN. n. f. [from refines, Fr.]

1. The part of the bridle, which extends from the horse's head to the driver's or rider's hand.

Every horse bears his commanding rein,
And may direct his course as please himself. Shakefp.

Take you the reins, while I from cares remove,
And sleep within the chariot which I drove. Dryden.

With hasty hand the ruling reins he drew;
He lash'd the couriers, and the couriers flew. Pope.

2. Used as an instrument of government, or for government.

The hard rein, which both of them have borne Against the old kind king. Shakefp. King Lear.

3. To give the reins. To give license.

War to disorder'd rage let loose the reins. Milton.

When to his lust Egilthus gave the reins,
Did fate or we th' adulterous act constrain. Pope.

TO REIN. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To govern by a bridle.
He, like a proud steed rein'd, went haughty on. Milton.

His son retain'd
His father's art, and warrior steeds he rein'd. Dryden.

2. To refrain; to control.
And where you find a maid,
That, ere the sleep, hath thrice her pray'rs said,
Rein up the organs of her fantasy;
Sleep she as sound as careless infancy. Shakefp.

Being once chaste, he cannot
Be rein'd again to temperance; then he speaks
What's in his heart. Shakefp. Coriolanus.

REINS. n. f. [from reins, Lat. rein, Fr.] The kidneys; the lower part of the back.

Whom I shall see for myself, though my reins be consumed. Job xix. 27.

TO REINSECT. v. a. [re and insect.] To insert a second time.

TO REINSPIRE. v. a. [re and inspire.] To inspire anew.

Time will run
On smoother, till Favonius reinspire
The frozen earth, and cloath in fresh attire
The lily and rose. Milton.

The mangled dame lay breathless on the ground,
When on a sudden reinspir'd with breath,
Again she rose. Dryden.

TO REINSTALL. v. a. [re and instal.]

1. To set again.
That alone can truly reinstall thee
In David's royal seat, his true successor. Milton.

2. To put again in possession. This example is not very proper.

Thy father
Levied an army, weening to redeem
And reinstall me in the diadem. Shakefp. Henry VI.

TO REINSTATE. v. a. [re and instale.] To put again in possession.

David, after that signal victory, which had preserved his life, reinstated him in his throne, and restored him to the ark and sanctuary; yet suffered the loss of his rebellious son to overwhelm the sense of his deliverance. Gov. of the Tongue.

Modesty reinstates the widow in her virginity. Addison.

TO REINTEGRATE. v. a. [from reintegrare, Fr. re and integer, Lat.] To restore with regard to any state or quality; to repair; to restore.

This league drove out all the Spaniards out of Germany, and reintegrated that nation in their ancient liberty. Bacon.

The falling from a discord to a concord hath an agreement with the affections, which are reintegrated to the better after some dislikes. Bacon's Natural History.

TO REINVEST. v. a. [re and invest.] To invest anew.

TO REJOICE. v. n. [from rejoice, Fr.] To be glad; to joy; to exult; to receive pleasure from something past.

This is the rejoicing city that dwelt carelessly, that said,
There is none beside me. Zeeph. ii. 15.

I will comfort them, and make them rejoice from their sorrow. Jer. xxxi. 13.

Let them be brought to confusion, that rejoice at mine hurt. Psaln xxxv. 26.

Jethro rejoiced for all the goodness which the Lord had done. Exodus xviii. 9.

They rejoice each with their kind.

TO REJOICE. v. a. To exhilarate; to gladden; to make joyful; to glad.

Thy testimonies are the rejoicings of my heart. Pf. cxix.

Alone to thy renown 'tis giv'n,
Unbounded through all worlds to go;
While the great saint rejoices heav'n,
And thou sustain'st the orb below. Prior.

I should give Cain the honour of the invention; were he alive, it would rejoice his soul to see what mischief it had made. Arbutnot on Coins.

REJOICER. n. f. [from rejoice.] One that rejoices.

Whatever faith entertains, produces love to God; but he that believes God to be cruel or a rejoicer in the unavoidable damnation of the greatest part of mankind, thinks evil thoughts concerning God. Taylor's Rule of Living Holy.

TO REJOIN. v. a. [from rejoinere, Fr.]

1. To join again.
The grand signior conveyeth his galleys down to Grand Cairo, where they are taken in pieces, carried upon camels backs, and rejoined together at Sues. Brown's Vulg. Err.

2. To meet one again.
Thoughts, which at Hyde-park-corner I forgot,
Meet and rejoin me in the penive grove. Pope.

TO REJOIN. v. n. To answer to an answer.

It will be replied, that he receives advantage by this lopping of his superfluous branches; but I rejoin, that a translator has no such right. Dryden's Preface to Ovid.

REJOINER. n. f. [from rejoin.]

1. Reply to an answer.
The quality of the person makes me judge myself obliged to a rejoinder. Glavvill to Abius.

2. Reply; answer.
Injury of chance rudely beguiles our lips
Of all rejoinders. Shakefp. Troilus and Cressida.

REL

REJOINT. n. f. [from rejoindre, Fr.] Shock; succussion.

The sinner, at his highest pitch of enjoyment, is not pleased with it so much, but he is afflicted more; and as long as these inward joys and recoillings of the mind continue, the sinner will find his accounts of pleasure very poor. South.

REIT. n. f. Sedge or sea weed. Bailey.

TO REITERATE. v. a. [re and itero, Lat. reiterare, Fr.] To repeat again and again.

You never spoke what did become you less Than this; which to reiterate, were sin. Shakefp.

With reiterated crimes he might Heap on himself damnation. Milton.

Although Christ hath forbid us to use vain repetitions when we pray, yet he hath taught us, that to reiterate the same requests will not be vain. Smalbridge.

REITERATION. n. f. [from reiteration, Fr. from reiterate.] Repetition.

It is useful to have new experiments tried over again; such reiterations commonly exhibiting new phenomena. Boyle.

The words are a reiteration or reinforcement of an application, arising from the consideration of the excellency of Christ above Moses. Ward of Infidelity.

TO REJUDGE. v. a. [re and judge.] To reexamine; to review; to recal to a new trial.

The mule attends thee to the silent shade;
'Tis hers the brave man's latest steps to trace,
Rejudge his acts, and dignify disgrace. Pope.

TO REKINDLE. v. a. [re and kindle.] To set on fire again.

These disappearing, fixed stars were actually extinguished, and would for ever continue so, if not rekindled, and new recruited with heat and light. Cheyne's Phil. Principles.

Rekindled at the royal charms,
Tumultuous love each beating bosom warms. Pope.

TO RELAPSE. v. n. [from relapsus, Lat.]

1. To slip back; to slide or fall back.

2. To fall back into vice or error.
The oftner he hath relapsed, the more significations he ought to give of the truth of his repentance. Taylor.

3. To fall back from a state of recovery to sickness.
He was not well cured, and would have relapsed. Wifem.

RELAPSE. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Fall into vice or error once forsaken.
This would but lead me to a worse relapse
And heavier fall. Milton.

We see in too frequent instances the relapses of those, who, under the present smart, or the near apprehension of the divine pleasure, have resolved on a religious reformation. Kog.

2. Regression from a state of recovery to sickness.
It was even as two physicians should take one sick body in hand; of which, the former would purge and keep under the body, the other pamper and strengthen it suddenly; whereof what is to be looked for, but a most dangerous relapse. Spens.

3. Return to any state. The sense here is somewhat obscure.
Mark a bounding valour in our English;
That being dead like to the bullet's grazing,
Breaks out into a second course of mischief,
Killing in relapse of mortality. Shakefp. Henry V.

TO RELATE. v. a. [from relatus, Lat.]

1. To tell; to recite.
Your wife and babes
Savagely slaughter'd; to relate the manner,
Were to add the death of you. Shakefp. Macbeth.

Here I could frequent
With worship place by place, where he vouchsaf'd Preference divine; and to my sons relate. Milton.

The drama represents to view, what the poem only does relate. Dryden.

A man were better relate himself to a statue, than suffer his thoughts to pass in smother. Bacon.

2. To ally by kindred.

Avails thee not,
To whom related, or by whom begot;
A heap of dust alone remains. Pope.

3. To bring back; to restore. A Latinism. Spenser.

TO RELATE. v. n. To have reference; to have respect.

All negative or privative words relate to positive ideas, and signify their absence. Locke.

As other courts demanded the execution of persons dead in law, this gave the last orders relating to those dead in reason. Tatler, N<sup>o</sup> 110.

RELATER. n. f. [from relate.] Teller; narrator.

We shall rather perform good offices unto truth, than any disservice unto their relaters. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Her husband the relater she prefer'd
Before the angel. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. viii.

The best English historian, when his style grows antiquated, will be only considered as a tedious relater of facts. Swift.

RELATION. n. f. [from relation, Fr. from relate.]

1. Manner of belonging to any person or thing.
Under this stone lies virtue, youth,
Unblemish'd probity and truth;
Just unto all relations known,
A worthy patriot, pious son. Waller.

REL

So far as service imports duty and subjection, all created beings bear the necessary relation of servants to God. South.
Our necessary relations to a family, oblige all to use their reasoning powers upon a thousand occasions. Watts.

2. Respect; reference; regard.
I have been importuned to make some observations on this art, in relation to its agreement with poetry. Dryden.
Relation consists in the consideration and comparing one idea with another. Locke.

3. Connexion between one thing and another.
Augurs, that understand relations, have
By magpies, choughs and rooks brought forth
The secret man of blood. Shakefp. Macbeth.

4. Kindred; alliance of kin.
Relations dear, and all the charities
Of fathers, son and brother first were known. Milton.
Be kindred and relation laid aside,
And honour's cause by laws of honour try'd. Dryden.
Are we not to pity and supply the poor, though they have no relation to us? no relation? that cannot be: the gospel files them all our brethren; nay, they have a nearer relation to us, our fellow-members; and both these from their relation to our Saviour himself, who calls them his brethren. Sprat.
A the-cousin, of a good family and small fortune, passed months among all her relations. Swift.
Dependants, friends, relations,
Sav'd by woe, forget the tender tie. Thompson.

6. Narrative; tale; account; narration; recital of facts.
In an historical relation, we use terms that are most proper. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
The author of a just fable, must please more than the writer of an historical relation. Dennis's Letters.

RELATIVE. adj. [relativus, Lat. relativus, Fr.]
1. Having relation; respecting.
Not only simple ideas and substances, but modes are positive beings; though the parts of which they consist, are very often relative one to another. Locke.
2. Considered not absolutely, but as belonging to, or respecting something else.
The ecclesiastical, as well as the civil governour, has cause to pursue the same methods of confirming himself; the grounds of government being founded upon the same bottom of nature in both, though the circumstances and relative considerations of the persons may differ. South.
Every thing sustains both an absolute and a relative capacity: an absolute, as it is such a thing, endued with such a nature; and a relative, as it is a part of the universe, and so stands in such relation to the whole. South.
Wholesome and unwholesome are relative, not real qualities. Arbutnot on Aliments.

3. Particular; positive; close in connection. Not in use.
I'll have grounds
More relative than this. Shakefp. Macbeth.

RELATIVE. n. f.
1. Relation; kinsman.
'Tis an evil dutifulness in friends and relatives, to suffer one to perish without reproof. Taylor.
2. Pronoun answering to an antecedent.
Learn the right joining of substantives with adjectives, and the relative with the antecedent. Ascham's Schoolmaster.
3. Somewhat respecting something else.
When the mind so considers one thing, that it sets it by another, and carries its view from one to the other, this is relation and respect; and the denominations given to positive things, intimating that respect, are relatives. Locke.

RELATIVELY. adv. [from relative.] As it respects something else; not absolutely.
All those things, that seem so foul and disagreeable in nature, are not really so in themselves, but only relatively. More.
These being the greatest good or the greatest evil, either absolutely so in themselves, or relatively so to us; it is therefore good to be zealously affected for the one against the other. Sprat.
Consider the absolute affections of any being as it is in itself, before you consider it relatively, or survey the various relations in which it stands to other beings. Watts.

RELATIVENESS. n. f. [from relative.] The state of having relation.
To RELAX. v. a. [relaxo, Lat.]
1. To slacken; to make less tense.
The finews, when the southern wind bloweth, are more relax. Bacon's Natural History.
2. To remit; to make less severe or rigorous.
The statute of mortmain was at several times relaxed by the legislature. Swift.
3. To make less attentive or laborious.
Nor praise relax, nor difficulty fright. Vanity of Wisbe.
4. To ease; to divert.
5. To open; to loose.
It serv'd not to relax their ferried files. Milton.

To RELAX. v. n. To be mild; to be remiss; to be not rigorous.

REL

If in some regards the chose
To curb poor Paulo in too close;
In others the relax'd again,
And govern'd with a looser rein. Prior.

RELAXATION. n. f. [relaxatio, Fr. relaxatio, Lat.]
1. Diminution of tension; the act of loosening.
Cold sweats are many times mortal; for that they come by a relaxation or forsaking of the spirits. Bacon.
Many, who live healthy in a dry air, fall into all the diseases that depend upon relaxation in a moist one. Arbutnot.
2. Cessation of restraint.
The sea is not higher than the land, as some imagined the sea flood upon heap higher than the shore; and at the deluge a relaxation being made, it overflow'd the land. Burnet.
3. Remission; abatement of rigour.
They childishly granted, by common consent of their whole senate, under their town seal, a relaxation to one Bertelier, whom the elderhip had excommunicated. Hocker.
The relaxation of the statute of mortmain, is one of the reasons which gives the bishop terrible apprehensions of poverty coming on us. Swift.
4. Remission of attention or application.
As God has not so devoted our bodies to toil, but that he allows us some recreation: so doubtless he indulges the same relaxation to our minds. Government of the Tongue.
There would be no business in solitude, nor proper relaxations in business. Addison's Freeholder.

RELAX. v. n. [relaxo, Fr.] Horfies on the road to relieve others.
To RELEASE. v. a. [relascere, Lat.]
1. To set free from confinement or servitude.
Pilate said, whom will ye that I release unto you? Mat.
You releas'd his courage, and set free
A valour fatal to the enemy. Dryden.
Why should a reasonable man put it into the power of fortune to make him miserable, when his ancestors have taken care to release him from her? Dryden.
2. To set free from pain.
3. To free from obligation.
Too secure, because from death releas'd some days. Mil.
4. To quit; to let go.
He had been base, had he releas'd his right,
For such an empire none but kings should fight. Dryden.
5. To relax; to slacken. Not in use.
It may not seem hard, if in cases of necessity certain profitable ordinances sometimes be releas'd, rather than all men always strictly bound to the general rigor thereof. Hocker.

RELEASE. n. f. [relasche, Fr. from the verb.]
1. Dimission from confinement, servitude or pain.
O fatal search! in which the lab'ring mind,
Still press'd with weight of woe, still hopes to find
A shadow of delights, a dream of peace,
From years of pain, one moment of release. Prior.
2. Relaxation of a penalty.
3. Remission of a claim.
The king made a great feast, and made a release to the provinces, and gave gifts. Ezra. ii. 18.
The king would not have one penny abated, of what had been granted by parliament; because it might encourage other countries to pray the like release or mitigation. Bacon.
4. Acquittance from a debt signed by the creditor.
To RELEGATE. v. a. [relegare, Fr. relego, Lat.] To banish; to exile.
RELEGATION. n. f. [relegatio, Fr. relegatio, Lat.] Exile; judicial banishment.
According to the civil law, the extraordinary punishment of adultery was deportation or relegation. Ayliffe.

To RELENT. v. n. [relentir, Fr.]
1. To soften; to grow less rigid or hard; to give.
In some houses, sweetmeats will relent more than in others. Bacon.
In that soft season, when descending show'rs
Call forth the greens, and wake the rising flow'rs;
When opening buds salute the welcome day,
And earth relenting feels the genial ray. Pope.
2. To melt; to grow moist.
Crows seem to call upon rain, which is but the comfort they seem to receive in the relenting of the air. Bacon.
Salt of tartar, brought to fusion, and placed in a cellar, will, in a few minutes, begin to relent, and have its surface softened by the imbibed moisture of the air, wherein if it be left long, it will totally be dissolved. Boyle.
All nature mourns, the skies relent in show'rs,
Hush'd are the birds, and clos'd the drooping flow'rs;
If Delia smile, the flow'rs begin to spring,
The skies to brighten, and the birds to sing. Pope.
3. To grow less intense.
I have marked in you a relenting truly, and a slackening of the main career, you had so notably begun, and almost performed. Sidney.
The workmen let gla'ss cool by degrees in such relentings of fire, as they call their nealing heats, lest it should shiver in pieces by a violent succeeding of air. Digby on Bodies.

REL

4. To soften in temper; to grow tender; to feel compassion.
Can you behold
My tears, and not once relent? Shakefp. Henry VI.
I'll not be made a soft and dull-eyed fool.
To shake the head, relent, and sigh, and yield
To christian intercessors. Shakefp. Merch. of Venice.
Undoubtedly he will relent, and turn
From his displeasure. Milton.
He sung, and hell consented
To hear the poet's pray'r;
Stern Prosperine relenting,
And gave him back the fair.
To RELINT. v. a.
1. To slacken; to remit. Obsolete.
Apace he shot, and yet he fled apace,
And oftentimes he would relent his pace,
That him his foe more fiercely should pursue. Pa. Queen.
2. To soften; to mollify. Obsolete.
Air hated earth, and water hated fire,
Till love relenting their rebellious ire. Spenser.

RELENTLESS. adj. [from relent.]
1. Unpitiful; unmoved by kindness or tenderness.
For this th' avenging pow'r employs his darts;
Thus will persist, relentless in his ire,
Till the fair slave be render'd to her fire. Dryden.
Why should the weeping hero now Relentless to their wiles prove. Prior.
2. In Milton, it perhaps signifies unremitted; intensely fixed upon disquieting objects.
Only in destroying, I find ease
To my relentless thoughts. Milton's Par. Lost.

RELEVANT. adj. [French.] Relieving. Dist.
RELEVATION. n. f. [relevatio, Lat.] A raising or lifting up.
RELIANCE. n. f. [from rely.] Trust; dependance; confidence; repose of mind. With or before the object of trust.
His days and times are past,
And my reliance on his fracted dates
Has smit my credit. Shakefp. Timon of Athens.
That pellucid gelatinous substance, which he pitches upon with so great reliance and positiveness, is chiefly of animal constitution. Woodward.
He secured and encreased his prosperity, by an humble behaviour towards God, and a dutiful reliance on his providence. Atterbury's Sermons.
They afforded a sufficient conviction of this truth, and a firm reliance on the promises contained in it. Rogers.
Resignation in death, and reliance on the divine mercies, give comfort to the friends of the dying. Clarissa.
Misfortunes often reduce us to a better reliance, than that we have been accustomed to fix upon. Clarissa.

RELICK. n. f. [reliquie, Lat. reliquus, Fr.]
1. That which remains; that which is left after the loss or decay of the rest. It is generally used in the plural.
Up dreary dame of darkness queen,
Go gather up the reliques of thy race,
Or else go them avenge. Fairy Queen, b. i.
2. It is often taken for the body deserted by the soul.
What needs my Shakespeare for his honour'd bones,
The labour of an age in piled stones;
Or that his hallow'd reliques should be hid
Under a star-ypoointed pyramid.
In peace, ye shades of our great grandfathers, rest;
Eternal spring, and rising flow'rs adorn
The reliques of each venerable urn. Dryden.
Shall our reliques second birth receive?
Sleep we to wake, and only die to live?
Thy reliques, Rowe, to this fair shrine we trust,
And sacred place by Dryden's awful dust;
Beneath a rude and nameless stone he lies,
To which thy tomb shall guide enquiring eyes. Pope.
3. That which is kept in memory of another, with a kind of religious veneration.
Cows flutter'd into rags, then reliques leaves
The sport of winds. Milton.
This church is very rich in reliques; among the rest, they show a fragment of Thomas à Becket, as indeed there are very few treasures of reliques in Italy, that have not a tooth or a bone of this saint. Addison's Remarks on Italy.

RELICKLY. adv. [from relick.] In the manner of reliques.
Thriftily wench scraps kitchen stuff,
And barrelling the droppings and the snuff
Of wasting candles, which in thirty year
Relickly kept, perhaps buys wedding cheer. Donne.

RELICT. n. f. [relicte, old Fr. relicta, Lat.] A widow; a wife desolate by the death of her husband.

REL

If the fathers and husbands were of the household of faith, then certainly their reliques and children cannot be strangers in this household. Sprat's Sermons.
Chaste reliques!
Honour'd on earth, and worthy of the love
Of such a spouse, as now resides above. Garth.

RELIEF. n. f. [relief, Fr.]
1. The prominence of a figure in stone or metal; the seeming prominence of a picture.
The figures of many ancient coins rise up in a much more beautiful relief than those on the modern; the face sinking by degrees in the several declensions of the empire, till about Constantine's time, it lies almost even with the surface of the medal. Addison on Ancient Medals.
Not with such majesty, such bold relief,
The forms august of kings, or conqu'ring chief,
E'er swell'd on marble, as in verse have shin'd,
In polish'd verse, the manners and the mind. Pope.
2. The recommendation of any thing, by the interposition of something different.
3. Alleviation of calamity; mitigation of pain or sorrow.
Thoughts in my unquiet breast are risen,
Tending to some relief of our extremes. Milton.
4. That which frees from pain or sorrow.
So should we make our death a glad relief
From future shame. Dryden's Knight's Tale.
Nor dar'd I to presume, that press'd with grief,
My flight should urge you to this dire relief;
Stay, stay your steps. Dryden's Æneis.
5. Dismission of a sentinel from his post.
For this relief, much thanks; 'tis bitter cold,
And I am sick at heart. Shakefp. Hamlet.
6. [Reliefum, law Lat.] Legal remedy of wrongs.
RELIEVABLE. adj. [from relieve.] Capable of relief.
Neither can they, as to reparation, hold plea of things, wherein the party is relievable by common law. Hale.

To RELIEVE. [relevo, Lat. relever, Fr.]
1. To recommend by the interposition of something dissimilar.
As the great lamp of day,
Through diff'rent regions, does his course pursue,
And leaves one world but to revive a new;
While, by a pleasing change, the queen of night
Relieves his lustre with a milder light. Steeley.
Since the inculcating precept upon precept will prove tiresome, the poet must not encumber his poem with too much business; but sometimes relieve the subject with a moral reflection. Addison's Essay on the Georgicks.
2. To support; to assist.
Parallels, or like relations, alternately relieve each other; when neither will pass afunder, yet are they pleasurable together. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
3. To ease pain or sorrow.
4. To succour by assistance.
From thy growing store,
Now lend assistance, and relieve the poor;
A pittance of thy land will set him free. Dryden.
5. To set a sentinel at rest, by placing another on his post.
Honest soldier, who hath relieved you?
—Bernado has my place, give you good night. Shakefp.
Relieve the centries that have watch'd all night. Dryden.
6. To right by law.
RELIEVER. n. f. [from relieve.] One that relieves.
He is the protector of his weakness, and the reliever of his wants. Rogers's Sermons.

RELIEVO. n. f. [Italian.] The prominence of a figure or picture.
A convex mirror makes the objects in the middle come out from the superficies: the painter must do so in respect of the lights and shadows of his figures, to give them more relief and more strength. Dryden's Dunciad.

To RELIGHT. v. a. [re and light.] To light anew.
His pow'r can heal me, and relight my eye. Pope.

RELIGION. n. f. [religio, Fr. religio, Lat.]
1. Virtue, as founded upon reverence of God, and expectation of future rewards and punishments.
He that is void of fear, may soon be just,
And no religion binds men to be traitors. Benj. Johnson.
One spoke much of right and wrong,
Of justice, of religion, truth and peace
And judgment from above. Milton.
If we consider it as directed against God, it is a breach of religion; if as to men, it is an offence against morality. South.
By her inform'd, we best religion learn,
Its glorious object by her aid discern. Blackmore.
Religion or virtue, in a large sense, includes duty to God and our neighbour; but in a proper sense, virtue signifies duty towards men, and religion duty to God. Watts.
2. A system of divine faith and worship as opposite to others.
The image of a brute, adorn'd
With gay religions, full of pomp and gold. Milton.
The christian religion, rightly understood, is the deepest and choicest piece of philosophy that is. More.

REL

The doctrine of the gospel proposes to men such glorious rewards and such terrible punishments as no religion ever did, and gives us far greater assurance of their reality and certainty than ever the world had.

Tillotson.
RELIGIONIST. n. f. [from religion.] A bigot to any religious persuasion.

The lawfulness of taking oaths may be revealed to the quakers, who then will stand upon as good a foot for preferment as any other subject; under such a motley administration, what pullings and hawlings, what a zeal and bias there will be in each religionist to advance his own tribe, and depress the others.

Swift.
RELIGIOUS. adj. [religieux, Fr. religiosus, Lat.]

1. Pious; disposed to the duties of religion.

It is a matter of sound consequence, that all duties are by so much the better performed, by how much the men are more religious, from whose habits the same proceed. Hook.
When holy and devout religious christians

Are at their beads, 'tis hard to draw them from thence;
So sweet is zealous contemplation!

Shakep.
Their lives
Religious titled them the sons of God.

Milton.
2. Teaching religion.

He God doth late and early pray,
More of his grace than gifts to lend;
And entertains the harmless day
With a religious book or friend.

Watton.
3. Among the Romanists, bound by the vows of poverty, chastity and obedience.

Certain friars and religious men were moved with some zeal, to draw the people to the christian faith.

France has vast numbers of ecclesiasticks, secular and religious.
Abbot.

What the protestants would call a fanatic, is in the Roman church a religious of such an order; as an English merchant in Lisbon, after some great disappointments in the world, resolved to turn capuchin.

Addison's State of the War.

4. Exact; strict.

RELIGIOUSLY. adv. [from religion.]
1. Piously; with obedience to the dictates of religion.

2. According to the rites of religion.

These are their brethren, whom you Goths behold
Alive and dead, and for their brethren slain
Religiously they ask a sacrifice.

Shakep. Titus Andronic.
3. Reverently; with veneration.

Dost thou in all thy addresses to him, come into his presence with reverence, kneeling and religiously bowing thyself before him.

Duppa's Rules to Devotion.
4. Exactly; with strict observance.

The privileges, justly due to the members of the two houses and their attendants, are religiously to be maintained.

Bacon.
RELIGIOUSNESS. n. f. [from religions.] The quality or state of being religious.

To RELINQUISH. v. a. [relinquo, Lat.]

1. To forsake; to abandon; to leave; to desert.

The habitation there was utterly relinquished.

Abbot.
The English colonies grew poor and weak, though the English lords grew rich and mighty; for they placed Irish tenants upon the lands relinquished by the English.

Davies.
2. To quit; to release; to give up.

The ground of God's sole property in any thing is, the return of it made by man to God; by which act he relinquishes and delivers back to God all his right to the use of that thing, which before had been freely granted him by God.

South's Sermons.
3. To forbear; to depart from.

In case it may be proved, that amongst the number of rites and orders common unto both, there are particulars, the use whereof is utterly unlawful, in regard of some special bad and noisome quality; there is no doubt but we ought to relinquish such rites and orders, what freedom forever we have to retain the other still.

Hooker, b. iv. f. 11.
RELINQUISHMENT. n. f. [from relinquish.] The act of forsaking.

Government or ceremonies, or whatsoever it be, which is popish, away with it: this is the thing they require in us, the utter relinquishment of all things popish.

Hooker.
That natural tenderness of conscience, which must first create in the soul a sense of sin, and from thence produce a sorrow for it, and at length cause a relinquishment of it, is took away by a customary repeated course of sinning. South.

RELISH. n. f. [from relecher, Fr. to lick again. Minshew, Skinner.]

1. Taste; the effect of any thing on the palate; it is commonly used of a pleasing taste.

Boyle on Colours.
These two bodies, whose vapours are so pungent, spring from saltpetre, which betrays upon the tongue no heat nor corrosiveness, but coldness mixed with a somewhat languid relish retaining to bitterness.

Boyle.

REL

Much pleasure we have lost, while we abstin'd
From this delightful fruit, nor known till now

True relish, tasting. Milton.
Could we suppose their relishes as different there as here, yet the manna in heaven suits every palate. Locke.

Sweet, bitter, four, harsh and salt are all the epithets we have to denominate that numberless variety of relishes to be found distinct in the different parts of the same plant.

2. Taste; small quantity just perceptible.

The king becoming graces;
As justice, verity, temperance, staidness,
Devotion, patience, courage, fortitude;
I have no relish of them.

Shakep. Macbeth.

That can thy light relumine.

Shakep. Othello.
To RELY. v. n. [re and lie.] To lean upon with confidence; to put trust in; to rest upon; to depend upon.

Go in thy native innocence! rely
On what thou hast of virtue; summon all!
For God tow'rd thee hath done his part, do thine.

Milton.
Egypt does not on the clouds rely,
But to the Nile owes more than to the sky.

Waller.
Thus Solon to Pisistratus reply'd,
Demanded, on what succour he rely'd,
When with so few he boldly did engage;

Denham.
He said, he took his courage from his age.
Though reason is not to be relied upon, as universally sufficient to direct us what to do; yet it is generally to be relied upon and obeyed, where it tells us what we are not to do.

South.
Fear relies upon a natural love of ourselves, and is complicated with a necessary desire of our own preservation.

Till.
Such variety of arguments only distract the understanding that relies on them.

Locke.
The pope was become a party in the cause, and could not be relied upon for a decision.

Atterbury.
Do we find so much religion in the age, as to rely on the general practice for the measures of our duty?

Rogers.
No prince can ever rely on the fidelity of that man, who is a rebel to his Creator.

Rogers.
To REMAIN. v. n. [remans, Lat.]

1. To be left out of a greater quantity or number.

That that remains, shall be buried in death. Job xxvii. 15.
Bake that which ye will bake to-day; and that which remaineth over, lay up until the morning.

Ex. xvi. 23.
2. To continue; to endure; to be left.

He for the time remain'd stupidly good.
If what you have heard, shall remain in you, ye shall continue in the son.

Milton.

Childless thou art, childless remain.
In the families of the world, there remains not to one above another the least pretence to inheritance.

Locke.
4. Not to be lost.

Now somewhat sing, whose endless souncenace
Among the shepherds may for aye remain.

Spenser.
I was increased more than all that were before me, also my wisdom remained with me.

Ecclesi. ii. 9.
5. To be left as not comprised.

That a father may have some power over his children, is easily granted; but that an elder brother has so over his brethren, remains to be proved.

Locke.
To REMAIN. v. a. To await; to be left to.

Such end had the kid; for he would weaned be
Of craft, coloured with simplicity;
And such end, pardie, does all them remain
That of such fallers friendship shall be vain.

Spenser.
With oaken staff
I'll raise such outcries on thy clatter'd iron,
Which long shall not withhold me from thy head,
That in a little time, while breath remains thee,

REM

Thou oft shalt wish thyself at Gath to boast,
But never shalt see Gath.

Milton.
If thence he 'scape, what remains him less
Than unknown dangers.

Milton.
The easier conquest now
Remains thee, aided by this host of friends,
Back on thy foes more glorious to return.

Milton.
REMAIN. n. f. [from the verb.] Generally used in the plural.

For the other part of memory, called reminiscence, which is the retrieving of a thing at present forgot, or but confusedly remembered, by setting the mind to ransack every little cell of the brain; while it is thus busied, how accidentally does the thing sought for offer itself to the mind? South.
REMINISCENTIAL. adj. [from reminiscence.] Relating to reminiscence.
Would truth dispense, we could be content with Plato, that knowledge were but remembrance, that intellectual acquisition were but reminiscential evocation. Brown.
REMISS. adj. [from remis, Fr. remissus, Lat.]
1. Not vigorous; slack.
The water defers the said corpuscles, unless it flow forth with a precipitate motion; for then it hurries them out along with it, till its motion becomes more languid and remiss.
Woodward's Natural History.
2. Not careful; slothful.
Mad ire and wrathful fury makes me weep,
That thus we die, while remiss traitors sleep. Shakefp.
If when by God's grace we have conquered the first difficulties of religion, we grow careless and remiss, and neglect our guard, God's spirit will not always strive with us. Tillot.
Your candour, in pardoning my errors, may make me more remiss in correcting them. Dryden.
3. Not intense.
These nervous, bold, those languid and remiss;
Here cold salutes, but there a lover's kiss. Rescommon.
REMISSIBLE. adj. [from remis.] Admitting forgiveness.
REMISSION. n. f. [from remission, Fr. remissio, Lat.]

In September and October these diseases do not abate and remission in proportion to the remission of the sun's heat. Woodv.
This difference of intention and remission of the mind in thinking, every one has experimented in himself. Locke.
3. In phyltick, remission is when a distemper abates, but does not go quite off before it returns again.
4. Release.
Not only an expedition, but the remission of a duty or tax, were transmitted to posterity after this manner. Addison.
Another ground of the bishop's fears is the remission of the first fruits and tenths. Swift.
5. Forgiveness; pardon.
My penance is to call Lucetta back,
And ask remission for my folly past. Shakefp.
That plea
With God or man will gain thee no remission. Milton.
Many believe the article of remission of sins, but they believe it without the condition of repentance or the fruits of holy life. Taylor's Rule of Living Holy.
REMISSLY. adv. [from remiss.]
1. Carelessly; negligently; without close attention.
How should it then be in our power to do it coldly or remissly?
so that our desire being natural, is also in that degree of earnestness whereunto nothing can be added. Hooker.
2. Not vigorously; not with ardour or eagerness; slackly.
There was not an equal concurrence in the prosecution of this matter among the bishops; some of them proceeding more remissly in it. Clarendon.
REMISSNESS. n. f. [from remiss.] Carelessness; negligence;
coldness; want of ardour; inattention.
Future evils,
Or new, or by remissness new conceiv'd,
Are now to have no successive degrees. Shakefp.
No great offenders 'scape their dooms;
Small praise from lenity and remissness comes. Denham.
Jack, through the remissness of constables, has always found means to escape. Arbutnot's History of John Bull.
The great concern of God for our salvation, is so far from an argument of remissness in us, that it ought to excite our utmost care. Rogers's Sermons.
To REMIT. v. a. [from remitto, Lat.]
1. To relax; to make less intense.
So willingly doth God remit his ire.
Our supreme foe may much remit
His anger; and perhaps thus far remov'd,
Not mind us not offending, satisfy'd
With what is punish'd. Milton.
2. To forgive a punishment.
With suppliant pray'rs their pow'rs appease;
The soft Napæan race will soon repent
Their anger, and remit the punishment. Dryden.
The magistrate can often, where the publick good demands not the execution of the law, remit the punishment of criminal offences by his own authority, but yet cannot remit the satisfaction due to any private man. Locke.
3. [From remitte, Fr.] To pardon a fault.
At my lovely Tamora's intreats,
I do remit these young men's heinous faults. Shakefp.

REM

Whose soever sins ye remit, they are remitted unto them;
and whose soever sins ye retain, they are retained. Jo. xx. 23.
4. To give up; to resign.
In grievous and inhuman crimes, offenders should be re- mitted to their prince to be punished in the place where they have offended. Hayward.
Th' Egyptian crown I to your hands remit;
And, with it, take his heart who offers it. Dryden.
Heaven thinks fit
Thee to thy former fury to remit. Dryden's Tyrant Love.
5. [From remitte, Fr.] To defer; to refer.
The bishop had certain proud instructions in the front, though there were a pliant clause at the foot, that remitted all to the bishop's discretion. Bacon's Henry VII.
I remit me to themselves, and challenge their natural ingenuity to say, whether they have not sometimes such shiverings within them. Government of the Tongue.
6. To put again in custody.
This bold return with seeming patience heard,
The pris'ner was remitted to the guard. Dryden.
7. To send money to a distant place.
They obliged themselves to remit after the rate of twelve hundred thousand pounds sterling per annum, divided into fo many monthly payments. Addison's Remarks on Italy.
8. To restore. Not in use.
The archbishop was retained prisoner, but after a short time remitted to his liberty. Hayward.
To REMIT. v. n.
1. To slacken; to grow less intense.
When our passions remit, the vehemence of our speech
remits too. Brown's Notes on the Odyssey.
2. To abate by growing less eager.
As, by degrees, they remitted of their industry, loathed their business, and gave way to their pleasures, they let fall those generous principles, which had raised them to worthy thoughts. South's Sermons.
3. In phyltick, to grow by intervals less violent, though not wholly intermitting.
REMITMENT. n. f. [from remit.] The act of remitting to custody.
REMITTANCE. n. f. [from remit.]
1. The act of paying money at a distant place.
2. Sum sent to a distant place.
A compact among private persons furnished out the several remittances. Addison's Remarks on Italy.
REMITTER. n. f. [from remitte, Fr.] In common law, a restitution of one that hath two titles to lands or tenements, and is seized of them by his latter title, unto his title that is more ancient, in case where the latter is defective. Covel.
You said, if I return'd next size in Lent,
I should be in remitter of your grace;
In th' interim my letters should take place
Of affidavits. Donne.
REMNANT. n. f. [corrupted from remanent.] Residue; that which is left; that which remains.
Poor key-cold figure of a holy king!
Thou bloodless remnant of that royal blood,
Be't lawful that I invoke thy ghost? Shakefp. Rich. III.
Bear me hence
From forth the noise and rumour of the field,
Where I may think the remnant of my thoughts. Shakefp.
About his shelves
Remnants of packthread and old cakes of roses
Were thinly scatter'd. Shakefp. Romeo and Juliet.
I was entreated to get them some respite and breathing by a cessation, without which they saw no probability to preserve the remnant that had yet escaped. King Charles.
Their Andes are far higher than those with us; whereby it seems that the remnants of the generation of men were in such a deluge saved. Bacon.
The remnant of my tale is of a length
To tire your patience. Dryden's Knight's Tale.
A feeble army and an empty senate,
Remnants of mighty battles fought in vain. Addison.
See the poor remnants of these slighted hairs!
My hands shall rend what e'en thy rapine spares. Pope.
The frequent use of the latter was a remnant of popery, which never admitted scripture in the vulgar tongue.
Swift.
REMNANT. adj. [corruptly formed from remanent.] Remaining; yet left.
It bid her feel
No future pain for me; but instant wed
A lover more proportion'd to her bed;
And quiet dedicate her remnant life
To the just duties of an humble wife. Prior.
REMOLTEN. part. [from remelt.] Melted again.
It were good to try in glass works, whether the crude materials, mingled with glass already made and remolten, do not facilitate the making of glass with less heat. Bacon.

REM

REMONSTRANCE. n. f. [remonstrance, Fr. from remonstrare.]
1. Show; discovery. Not in use.
You may marvel, why I would not rather
Make rash remonstrance of my hidden power,
Than let him be so lost. Shakespeare. Measure for Measure.
2. Strong representation.
The same God, which revealeth it to them, would also give them power of confirming it unto others, either with miraculous operation, or with strong and invincible remonstrance of sound reason. Hooker, b. v. f. 10.
A large family of daughters have drawn up a remonstrance, in which they set forth, that their father, having refused to take in the Spectator, they offered to 'bate him the article of bread and butter in the tea-table. Addison's Spectator.
Importunate passions surround the man, and will not suffer him to attend to the remonstrances of justice. Rogers.
To REMONSTRATE. v. n. [remonstrare, Lat. remonstrare, Fr.] To make a strong representation; to show reasons on any side in strong terms.
REMORA. n. f. [Latin.]
1. A let or obstacle.
2. A fish or a kind of worm that sticks to ships, and retards their passage through the water.
Of fishes you shall find in arms the whale, herring, roach and remora. Peacham on Blazoning.
The remora is about three quarters of a yard long; his body before three inches and a half over, thence tapering to the tail end; his mouth two inches and a half over; his chops ending angularly; the nether a little broader; and produced forward near an inch; his lips rough with a great number of little prickles. Grew.
To REMORSE. v. a. [remorse, Latin.] To hinder; to delay. Diſt.
REMORSE. n. f. [remorsus, Lat.]
1. Pain of guilt.
Not that he believed they could be restrained from that impious act by any remorse of conscience, or that they had not wickedness enough to design and execute it. Clarendon.
2. Tenderness; pity; sympathetick sorrow.
Many little esteem of their own lives, yet for remorse of their wives and children, would be withheld. Spenser.
Shylock, thou lead'st this fashion of thy malice
To the last hour of act; and then 'tis thought,
Thou'lt shew thy mercy and remorse more strange,
Than is thy strange apparent cruelty. Shakespeare. Merchant of Venice.
The rogues slighted me into the river, with as little remorse as they would have drowned a bitch's blind puppies. Shakespeare.
Curse on th' unpard'ning prince, whom tears can draw
To no remorse; who rules by lion's law. Dryden.
REMORSEFUL. adj. [remorse and full.] Tender; compassionate.
O Eglamour, think not I flatter,
Valiant and wife, remorseful, well accomplish'd, Shakespeare.
Love, that comes too late,
Like a remorseful pardon slowly carried,
To the great tender turns a frowe offence. Shakespeare.
The gaudy, blabbing, and remorseful day
Is crept into the bosom of the sea. Shakespeare. Henry VI.
REMORSELESS. adj. [from remorse.] Unpitying; cruel; savage.
Where were the nymphs, when the remorseless deep Clos'd o'er the head of your lov'd Lycidas. Milton.
O the inexpressible horror that will seize upon a sinner, when he stands arraigned at the bar of divine justice! when he shall see his accuser, his judge, the witnesses, all his remorseless adversaries. South's Sermons.
REMOTE. adj. [remotus, Lat.]
1. Distant; not immediate.
In this narrow scantling of capacity, it is not all remote and even apparent good that affects us. Locke.
2. Distant; not at hand.
3. Removed far off; placed not near.
Wherever the mind places itself by any thought, either amongst, or remote from all bodies, it can, in this uniform idea of space, no where find any bounds. Locke.
In quiet shades, content with rural sports,
Give me a life, remote from guilty courts. Granville.
4. Foreign.
5. Distant; not closely connected.
An unadvised transiency from the effect to the remotest cause. Glanvill.
Syllogism serves not to furnish the mind with intermediate ideas, that shew the connection of remote ones. Locke.
6. Alien; not agreeing.
All those propositions, how remote soever from reason, are so sacred, that men will sooner part with their lives, than suffer themselves to doubt of them. Locke.
7. Abstracted.
REMOTELY. adv. [from remote.] Not nearly; at a distance.
It is commonly opinioned, that the earth was thinly inhabited, at least not remotely planted before the flood. Brown.
Two lines in Mezentius and Lausus are indeed remotely allied to Virgil's sense, but too like the tenderness of Ovid, Dry.

REMA

While the fainting Dutch remotely five
In the first front amidst a slaughter'd pile,
High on the mound he dy'd. Smith.
REMOVEDNESS. n. f. [from remote.] State of being remote;
distance; not nearness.
The joys of heaven are like the stars, which by reason of our remoteness appear extremely little. Boyle.
Titian employed brown and earthly colours upon the forepart, and has reserved his greater light for remotenesses and the back part of his landscapes. Dryden.
If the greatest part of bodies escape our notice by their remoteness, others are no less concealed by their minuteness. Locke.
His obscurities generally arise from the remoteness of the article of the customs, persons and things he alludes to. Addison.
REMOVAL. n. f. [from removere, Lat.] The act of removing; the state of being removed to distance.
All this safety were removal, and thy defence absence. Shakespeare.
This act persuades me,
'Tis the removal of the duke and her. Shakespeare.
The consequent strictly taken, may be a fallacious illusion, in reference to antecedency or consequence; as to conclude from the position of the antecedent unto the position of the consequent, or from the removal of the consequent to the removal of the antecedent. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
REMOVABLE. adj. [from remove.] Such as may be removed.
The Irish bishops have their clergy in such subjection, that they dare not complain of them; for knowing their own incapacity, and that they are therefore removable at their bishop's will, yield what pleaseth him. Spenser.
In such a chapel, such curate is removable at the pleasure of the rector of the mother church. Ayliffe's Parergon.
REMOVABLE. n. f. [from remove.]
1. The act of putting out of any place.
By which removal of one extremity with another, the world, seeking to procure a remedy, hath purchased a mere exchange of the evil before felt. Hooker.
2. The act of putting away.
The removal of such a disease is not to be attempted by active remedies, no more than a thorn in the flesh is to be taken away by violence. Arbutnot.
3. Diminution from a post.
If the removal of these persons from their posts has produced such popular commotions, the continuance of them might have produced something more fatal. Addison.
Whether his removal was caused by his own fears or other men's artifices, supposing the throne to be vacant, the body of the people was left at liberty to chuse what form of government they pleased. Swift.
4. The state of being removed.
The sitting still of a paralytick, whilst he prefers it to a removal, is voluntary. Locke.
To REMOVE. v. a. [removere, Lat. removere, Fr.]
1. To put from its place; to take or put away.
Good God remove
The means that makes us strangers! Shakespeare. Macbeth.
He removeth away the speech of the truth, and taketh away the understanding of the aged. Job xii. 20.
Remove thy stroke away from me; I am consumed by the blow. Psalms xxxix. 13.
So would he have removed thee out of the straight into a broad place. Job xxxvi. 16.
He longer in this paradise to dwell
Permits not; to remove thee I am come,
And send thee from the garden forth to till
The ground. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xi.
Whether he will remove his contemplation from one idea to another, is many times in his choice. Locke.
You, who fill the blissful seats above!
Let kings no more with gentle mercy sway,
But every monarch be the scourge of God,
If from your thoughts Ulysses you remove,
Who rul'd his subjects with a father's love. Pope's Odyssey.
2. To place at a distance.
They are farther removed from a title to be innate, and the doubt of their being native impressions on the mind, is stronger against these moral principles than the other. Locke.
To REMOVE. v. n.
1. To change place.
2. To go from one place to another.
A short exile must for show precede;
The term expir'd, from Candia they remove,
And happy each at home enjoys his love. Dryden.
How oft from pomp and state did I remove To feed despair. Prior.
REMOVE. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. Change of place.
2. Susceptibility of being removed. Not in use.
What is early received in any considerable strength of impression, grows into our tender natures; and therefore is of difficult remove. Glanvill's Sceps.
3. Translation

REM

3. Translation of one to the place of another.
Rosaline, this favour thou shalt wear;
Hold, take you this, my sweets, and give me thine;
So shall Biron take me for Rosaline:
And change your favours too; so shall your loves Woo contrary deceiv'd by these removes. Shakespeare.
4. State of being removed.
This place should be both school and university, not needing a remove to any other house of scholarship. Milton.
He that considers how little our constitution can bear a remove into parts of this air, not much higher than that we breathe in, will be satisfied, that the allwise architect has suited our organs, and the bodies that are to effect them, one to another. Locke.
5. Act of moving a cheffman or draught.
6. Departure; act of going away.
So look'd Astruc, her remove design'd,
On those distressed friends she left behind. Waller.
7. The act of changing place.
Let him, upon his removes from one place to another, procure recommendation to some person of quality residing in the place whither he removeth. Bacon's Essays.
8. A stop in the scale of gradation.
In all the visible corporeal world, quite down from us, the descent is by easy steps, and a continued series of things, that in each remove differ very little one from the other. Locke.
A freeholder is but one remove from a legislator, and ought to stand up in the defence of those laws. Addison.
9. A small distance.
The fiercest contentions of men are between creatures equal in nature, and capable, by the greatest distinction of circumstances, of but a very small remove one from another. Rogers.
10. Act of putting a horse's shoes upon different feet.
His horse wanted two removes, your horse wanted nails. Sw.
REMOVED. particp. adj. [from remove.] Remote; separate from others.
Your accent is something finer, than you could purchase in so removed a dwelling. Shakespeare. As You Like it.
REMOVEDNESS. n. f. [from removed.] The state of being removed; remoteness.
I have eyes under my service, which look upon his removedness. Shakespeare.
REMOVED. n. f. [from remove.] One that removes.
The mislayer of a merstone is to blame; but the unjust judge is the capital remover of landmarks, when he defineth amiss. Bacon.
Hasty fortune maketh an enterpriser and remover, but the exercised fortune maketh the able man. Bacon.
To REMOUNT. v. n. [remounter, Fr.] To mount again.
Stout Cymon soon remounts, and clef't in two
His rival's head. Dryden.
The rest remounts with the ascending vapours, or is washed down into rivers, and transmitted into the sea. Woodward.
RENUMERABLE. adj. [from remunerate.] Rewardable.
To REMUNERATE. v. a. [remunero, Lat. remunerare, Fr.]
To reward; to repay; to requite; to recompense.
Is he not then beholden to the man,
That brought her for this high good turn so far?
Yes; and will nobly remunerate. Shakespeare. Titus Andronicus.
Money the king thought not fit to demand, because he had received satisfaction in matters of so great importance; and because he could not remunerate them with any general pa-don, being prevented therein by the coronation pardon. Bacon.
In another parable, he represents the great beneficence of wherewith the Lord shall remunerate the faithful servant. Boyle.
REMUNERATION. n. f. [remuneration, Fr. remuneratio, Lat.]
Reward; requital; recompense; repayment.
Bear this significant to the country maid, Jaquenetta; there is remuneration; for the best ward of mine honour is rewarding my dependants. Shakespeare. Love's Labour Lost.
He begets a security of himself, and a careless eye on the last remunerations. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
A collation is a donation of some vacant benefice in the church, especially when such donation is freely bestowed without any prospect of an evil remuneration. Ayliffe.
REMUNERATIVE. adj. [from remunerate.] Exercised in giving rewards.
The knowledge of particular actions seems requisite to the attainment of that great end of God, in the manifestation of his punitive and remunerative justice. Boyle.
To REMURMUR. v. a. [re and murmur.] To utter back in murmurs; to repeat in low hoarse sounds.
Her fate is whisper'd by the gentle breeze;
And told in sighs to all the trembling trees;
The trembling trees, in ev'ry plain and wood,
Her fate remurmur to the silver flood. Pope.
To REMURMUR. v. n. [remurmure, Lat.] To murmur back;
to echo a low hoarse sound.
Her fellow nymphs the mountains tear
With loud laments, and break the yielding air;
The realms of Mars remurmur'd all around,
And echoes to th' Athenian shores rebound. Dryden.

REN

His untimely fate, th' Angitian woods
In sighs remurmur'd to the Fucine floods. Dryden.
RENA'RD. n. f. [renard, a fox, Fr.] The name of a fox in fable.
Before the break of day,
Renard through the hedge had made his way. Dryden.
RENA'SCENT. adj. [renascens, Lat.] Produced again; rising again into being.
RENA'SCIBLE. adj. [renascor, Lat.] Possible to be produced again.
To RENA'VIGATE. [re and navigare.] To sail again.
RENCOUNTER. n. f. [rencontre, Fr.]
1. Clash; collision.
You may as well expect two bowls should grow sensible by rubbing, as that the rencounter of any bodies should awaken them into perception. Collier.
2. Personal opposition.
Virgil's friends thought fit to alter a line in Venus's speech, that has a relation to the rencounter. Addison.
So when the trumpet founding gives the sign,
The jutting chiefs in rude rencounter join:
So meet, and so renew the dextrous fight;
Their clattering arms with the fierce shock rebound. Gran.
3. Loose or casual engagement.
The confederates should turn to their advantage their apparent odds in men and horse; and by that means out-number the enemy in all rencounters and engagements. Addison.
4. Sudden combat without premeditation.
To RENCOUNTER. v. n. [rencontrer, Fr.]
1. To clash; to collide.
2. To meet an enemy unexpectedly.
3. To skirmish with another.
4. To fight hand to hand.
To REND. v. a. [pret. and pret. pass. rent.] [rentan, Saxon.]
To tear with violence; to lacerate.
Will you hence
Before the tag return, whose rage doth rend
Like interrupted waters, and o'erbear
What they are used to bear. Shakespeare. Coriolanus.
He rent a lion as he would have rent a kid, and he had nothing in his hand. Jud. xiv. 4.
I will not rend away all the kingdom, but give one tribe to thy son. 1 Kings xi. 13.
By the thund'rer's stroke it from th' root is rent,
So sure the blows, which from high heaven are sent. Cowley.
What you command me to relate,
Renews the sad remembrance of our fate,
An empire from its old foundations rent. Dryden.
Look round to see
The lurking gold upon the fatal tree;
Then rend it off. Dryden's Æneis.
Is it not as much reason to say, when any monarchy was shattered to pieces, and divided amongst revolted subjects, that God was careful to preserve monarchical power, by rending a settled empire into a multitude of little governments. Locke.
When its way th' impetuous passion found,
I rend my tresses, and my breast I wound. Pope.
From cloud to cloud the rending lightnings rage. Thomson.
RENDER. n. f. [from rend.] One that rends; a tearer.
To RENDER. v. a. [rendre, Fr.]
1. To return; to pay back.
What shall I render unto the Lord for all his benefits. Pf.
They that render evil for good are adversaries. Pf. xxxviii.
Will ye render me a recompense? Joel iii. 4.
Let him look into the future state of bliss or misery, and see there God, the righteous judge, ready to render every man according to his deeds. Locke.
2. To restore; to give back.
Hither the seas at stated times resort,
And shove the laden vessels into port;
Then with a gentle ebb retire again,
And render back their cargo to the main. Addison.
3. To give upon demand.
The sluggard is wiser in his own conceit, than seven men that can render a reason. Proverbs xxvi. 16.
4. To invest with qualities; to make.
Because the nature of man carries him out to action, it is no wonder if the same nature renders him solicitous about the issue. South's Sermons.
Love
Can answer love, and render bliss secure; Thomson.
5. To represent; to exhibit.
I heard him speak of that same brother,
And he did render him the most unnatural
That liv'd amongst men. Shakespeare.
6. To translate.
Render it in the English a circle; but 'tis more truly rendered a sphere. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
He has a clearer idea of strigil and sistrum, a curry-comb and cymbal, which are the English names dictionaries render them by. Locke.

- He uses only a prudent dissimulation; the word we may almost literally render master of a great presence of mind. Broom's Notes on the Odyssey.
7. To surrender; to yield; to give up.
I will call him to so strict account,
That he shall render every glory up,
Or I will tear the reck'ning from his heart. Shakefp.
My rend'ring my person to them, may engage their affections to me. King Charles.
Once, with whom he used to advise, proposed to him to render himself upon conditions to the earl of Essex. Clarendon.
Would he render up Hermione,
And keep Aftyanax, I should be blest! A. Philips.
8. To offer; to give to be used.
Logick renders its daily service to wisdom and virtue. Watts.
- RENDER. n. f. [from the verb.] Surrender.
Newells
Of Cloten's death, we being not known, nor muster'd
Among the bands, may drive us to a render. Shakefp.
- RENDEZVOUS. n. f. [rendez vous, Fr.]
1. Assembly; meeting appointed.
A commander of many ships should rather keep his fleet together, than have it severed far asunder; for the attendance of meeting them again at the next rendezvous would consume time and victual. Raleigh's Apology.
2. A sign that draws men together.
The philosophers-stone and a holy war are but the rendezvous of cracked brains, that wear their feather in their head instead of their hat. Bacon.
3. Place appointed for assembly.
The king appointed his whole army to be drawn together to a rendezvous at Marlborough. Clarendon.
This was the general rendezvous which they all got to, and mingling more and more with that oily liquor, they sucked it all up. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
TO RENDEZVOUS. v. n. [from the noun.] To meet at a place appointed.
- RENDITION. n. f. [from render.] Surrendering; the act of yielding.
- RENEGADE. n. f. [renegado, Spanish; renegat, Fr.]
1. One that apostatizes from the faith; an apostate.
There lived a French renegade in the same place, where the Castilian and his wife were kept prisoners. Addison.
2. One who deserts to the enemy; a revolter.
Some fraggling soldiers might prove renegadoes, but they would not revolt in troops.
If the Roman government subsisted now, they would have had renegade seamen and shipwrights enough. Arbutnot.
- TO RENEGE. v. a. [renege, Lat. reniter, Fr.] To disown.
His captain's heart,
Which, in the scuffles of great fights, hath burst
The buckles on his breast, reneges all temper. Shakefp.
Such smiling rogues as these loath every passion,
Reneges, affirm, and turn their halcyon beaks
With every gale and vary of their masters. Shakefp.
The design of this war is to make me renege my conscience and thy truth. King Charles.
- TO RENEW. v. a. [re and new; renova, Lat.]
1. To renovate; to restore the former state.
In such a night
Medea gather'd the enchanted herbs,
That did renew old Æson. Shakefp. Merch. of Venice.
It is impossible for those that were once enlightened—if they shall fall away to renew them again unto repentance. Hebrews vi. 6.
Let us go to Gilgal, and renew the kingdom there. 1 Sam.
Renew'd to life, that the might daily die,
I daily doom'd to follow. Dryden's Theo. and Honor.
2. To repeat; to put again in act.
Thy famous grandfather
Doth live again in thee; long may'st thou live,
To bear his image, and renew his glories! Shakefp.
The body percuss'd hath, by reason of the percussive, a trepidation wrought in the minute parts, and so reneweth the percussive of the air. Bacon's Natural History.
The bearded corn enu'd
From earth unask'd, nor was that earth renew'd. Dryden.
3. To begin again.
The last great age, foretold by sacred rhymes,
Renews its finish'd course, Saturnian times Rowl round again. Dryden's Virgil's Pastorals.
4. In theology, to make anew; to transform to new life.
Be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind, that ye may prove what is that perfect will of God. Rom. xii. 2.
- RENEWABLE. adj. [from renew.] Capable to be renewed.
The old custom upon many estates is to let for leases of lives, renewable at pleasure. Swift's Miscellanies.
- RENEWAL. n. f. [from renew.] The act of renewing; renovation.
It behoved the deity, persisting in the purpose of mercy to mankind, to renew that revelation from time to time, and to rectify abuses, with such authority for the renewal and recti-

- fication, as was sufficient evidence of the truth of what was revealed. Forbes.
- RENITENCY. n. f. [from renitent.] That resistance in solid bodies, when they press upon, or are impelled one against another, or the resistance that a body makes on account of weight. Quincy.
- RENITENT. adj. [renitens, Lat.] Acting against any impulse by elastic power.
By an inflation of the muscles, they become soft; and yet renitent, like so many pillows, dissipating the force of the pressure, and so taking away the sense of pain. Ray.
- RENNET. n. f. See RUNNET.
- A putridous ferment coagulates all humours, as milk with rennet is turned. Floyer on the Humours.
- RENNET. n. f. [properly reinette, a little queen.] A kind RENETTING. s. of apple.
- A golden rennet is a very pleasant and fair fruit, of a yellow flush, and the best of bearers for all sorts of soil; of which there are two sorts, the large fort and the small. Mort.
Ripe pulpy apples, as pippins and rennetings, are of a syrupy tenacious nature. Mortimer's Husbandry.
- TO RENOVATE. v. a. [renovo, Lat.] To renew; to restore to the first state.
All nature feels the renovating force
Of winter, only to the thoughtless eye
In ruin seen. Thomson's Winter.
- RENOVATION. n. f. [renovation, Fr. renovatio, Lat.] Renewal; the act of renewing; the state of being renewed.
Sound continueth some small time, which is a renovation, and not a continuance; for the body percuss'd hath a trepidation wrought in the minute parts, and so reneweth the percussive of the air. Bacon's Natural History.
The kings entered into speech of renewing the treaty; the king saying, that though king Philip's person were the same, yet his fortunes were rais'd; in which case a renovation of treaty was used. Bacon's Henry VII.
- To second life,
Wak'd in the renovation of the just,
Reigns him up, with heav'n and earth renew'd. Milton.
- TO RENOUNCE. v. a. [renuncio, Fr. renuncio, Lat.]
1. To disown; to abnegate.
From Thebes my birth I own; and no disgrace
Can force me to renounce the honour of my race. Dryden.
2. To quit upon oath.
This world I do renounce; and in your fights Shake patiently my great affliction off. Shakefp. K. Lear.
- TO RENOUNCE. v. n. To declare renunciation. The following passage is a mere Gallicism: renoncez a men sang.
On this firm principle I ever stood;
He of my sons, who fails to make it good,
By one rebellious act renounces to my blood. Dryden.
- RENOUANCEMENT. n. f. [from renounce.] Act of renouncing; renunciation.
I hold you as a thing enskied and fainted;
By your renouncement, an immortal spirit. Shakefp.
- RENOUWN. n. f. [renommée, Fr.] Fame; celebrity; praise widely spread.
She
Is daughter to this famous duke of Milan,
Of whom so often I have heard renouwn. Shakefp.
'Tis of more renouwn
To make a river, than to build a town. Wallr.
Nor envy we
Thy great renouwn, nor grudge thy victory. Dryden.
- TO RENOWN. v. a. [renommer, Fr. from the noun.] To make famous.
Let us satisfy our eyes
With the memorials and the things of fame,
That do renoun this city. Shakefp. Twelfth Night.
Soft elocution does thy style renoun,
Gentle or sharp according to thy choice,
To laugh at follies, or to lash at vice. Dryden.
In solemn silence stand
Stern tyrants, whom their cruelties renoun,
And emperors in Parian marble frown. Addison.
A bard, whom pilfer'd pastorals renoun,
Just writes to make his barrenness appear. Petr.
- RENOUWNED. particip. adj. [from renoun.] Famous; celebrated; eminent; famed.
These were the renouwned of the congregation, princes of the tribes, heads of thousands. Nam. i. 16.
That thrice renouwned and learned French king, finding Petrarch's tomb without any inscription, wrote one himself; saying, shame it was, that he who sung his mistress's praise seven years before her death, should twelve years want an epitaph. Peacham on Poetry.
- The rest were long to tell, though far renoun'd. Milton.
Of all the cities in Roman lands,
The chief and most renoun'd Ravenna stands,
Adorn'd in ancient times with arms and arts. Dryden.
Ilva,
An isle renoun'd for steel and unexhausted mines. Dryden.

REP

- RENT. n. f. [from rend.] A break; a laceration.
Thou viper
Hast cancell'd kindred, made a rent in nature,
And through her holy bowels gnaw'd thy way,
Through thy own blood to empire. Dryden.
He who sees this vast rent in so high a rock, how the convex parts of one side exactly tally with the concave of the other, must be satisfied, that it was the effect of an earthquake. Addison's Remarks on Italy.
- TO RENT. v. a. [rather to rend.] To tear; to lacerate.
A time to rent, and a time to sew. Ecclesi. iii. 7.
- TO RENT. v. n. [now written rant.] To roar; to bluster; we fill say, a tearing fellow, for a noisy bully.
He ventur'd to diminish his fear,
That partings went to rent and tear,
And give the desperate attack
To danger still behind its back. Hudibras, p. iii.
- RENT. n. f. [rente, Fr.]
1. Revenue; annual payment.
Idol ceremony,
What are thy rents? what are thy comings in?
O ceremony threw me but thy worth! Shakefp. Hen. V.
I bought an annual rent of two,
And live just as you see I do. Pope's Epist. of Horace.
2. Money paid for any thing held of another.
Such is the mould, that the blest tenant feeds
On precious fruits, and pays his rent in weeds. Waller.
Folks in mudwall tenement,
Present a peppercorn for rent. Prior.
- TO RENT. v. a. [renter, Fr.]
1. To hold by paying rent.
When a servant is called before his master, it is often to know, whether he passed by such a ground, if the old man, who rents it, is in good health. Addison's Spectator.
2. To set to a tenant.
- RENTABLE. adj. [from rent.] That may be rented.
- RENTAL. n. f. [from rent.] Schedule or account of rents.
- RENTIER. n. f. [from rent.] He that holds by paying rent.
The estate will not be let for one penny more or less to the rentier, amongst whomsoever the rent he pays be divided. Locke.
- RENTIER. adj. [rentier, Fr.] Overturned. Spenser.
- RENUNCIATION. n. f. [renunciatio, from renuncio, Lat.] The act of renouncing.
He that loves riches, can hardly believe the doctrine of poverty and renunciation of the world. Taylor.
- TO REORDAIN. v. a. [reordiner, Fr. re and ordain.] To ordain again, on supposition of some defect in the commission of ministry.
- REORDINATION. n. f. [from reordin.] Repetition of ordination.
He proceeded in his ministry without expecting any new mission, and never thought himself obliged to a reordination. Atterbury.
- TO REPACIFY. v. a. [re and pacify.] To pacify again.
Henry, who next commands the state,
Seeks to repacify the people's hate. Daniel.
- REPAIR. part. of repair.
- TO REPAIR. v. a. [repare, Lat. reparar, Fr.]
1. To restore after injury or dilapidation.
Let the priests repair the breaches of the house. 2 Kings.
The fines imposed were the more repaid against, because they were assigned to the rebuilding and repairing of St. Paul's Church. Clarendon.
Heav'n soon repair'd her mural breach.
2. To amend any injury by an equivalent.
He justly hath driv'n out his rebel foes
To deepest hell; and to repair their loss Created this new happy race of men. Milton's Par. Lost.
3. To fill up anew, by something put in the place of what is lost.
To be reveng'd,
And to repair his numbers thus impair'd. Milton.
- REPAIR. n. f. [from the verb.] Reparation; supply of loss; restoration after dilapidation.
Before the curing of a strong disease,
Ev'n in the instant of repair and health,
The fit is strongest. Shakefp. King Lear.
Temperance, in all methods of curing the gout, is a regular and simple diet, proportioning the daily repairs to the daily decays of our wasting bodies. Temple's Miscellanies.
All automata need a frequent repair of new strength, the causes whence their motion does proceed, being subject to fail. Wilkins's Mathematical Magick.
- TO REPAIR. v. n. [reparer, Fr.] To go to; to betake himself.
May all to Athens back again repair. Shakefp.
Depart from hence in peace,
Search the wide world, and where you please repair. Dryden.
'Tis fix'd; th' irrevocable doom of Jove:
Haste then, Cyllenius, through the liquid air,
Go mount the winds, and to the shades repair. Pope.
- REPAIR. n. f. [repare, Fr. from the verb.]
1. Refort; abode.

REP

- So 'scapes th' insulfing fire his narrow jail,
And makes small outlets into open air;
There the fierce winds his tender force assail,
And beat him downward to his first repair. Dryden.
2. Act of betaking himself any whither.
The king sent a proclamation for their repair to their houses, and for a preservation of the peace. Clarendon.
- REPAIRER. n. f. [from repair.] Amender; restorer.
He that governs well, leads the blind, but he that teaches, gives him eyes; and it is a glorious thing to have been the repairer of a decayed intellect. South's Sermons.
O faced rest!
O peace of mind! repairer of decay,
Whose balms renew the limbs to labours of the day. Dryd.
- REPA'NDUS. adj. [repandus, Lat.] Bent upwards.
Though they be drawn repandus or convexly crooked in one piece, yet the dolphin that carrieth Anion is concavously inverted, and hath its spine depressed in another. Brown.
- REPARABLE. adj. [reparable, Fr. reparabilis, Lat.] Capable of being amended, retrieved, or supplied by something equivalent.
The parts in man's body easily reparable, as spirits, blood and flesh, die in the embracement of the parts hardly reparable, as bones, nerves and membranes. Bacon.
When its spirit is drawn from wine, it will not, by the re-union of its constituent liquors, be reduced to its pristine nature; because the workmanship of nature, in the disposition of the parts, was too elaborate to be imitable, or reparable by the bare apposition of those divided parts to each other. Boyle.
An adulterous person is tied to restitution of the injury, so far as it is reparable, and can be made to the wronged person; to make provision for the children begotten in unlawful embraces. Taylor's Rule of Living Holy.
- REPARABLY. adv. [from reparable.] In a manner capable of remedy by restitution, amendment or supply.
- REPARATION. n. f. [reparation, Fr. reparatio, from repare, Lat.]
1. The act of repairing.
Antonius Philopoli took care of the reparation of the highways. Arbutnot on Coins.
2. Supply of what is wasted.
When the organs of sense want their due repose and necessary reparations, the soul exerts herself in her several faculties. Addison.
In this moveable body, the fluid and solid parts must be consumed; and both demand a constant reparation. Arbutnot.
3. Recompense for any injury; amends.
The king should be able, when he had cleared himself, to make him reparation. Bacon.
I am sensible of the scandal I have given by my loose writings, and make what reparation I am able. Dryden.
- REPARATIVE. n. f. [from repair.] Whatever makes amends for loss or injury.
New preparatives were in hand, and partly reparatives of the former beaten at sea. Wotton's Buckingham.
- REPARTEE. n. f. [repartie, Fr.] Smart reply.
The fools overflowed with smart reparties, and were only distinguished from the intended wits, by being called coxcombs. Dryden's Dufresnoy.
- Sullen was Jupiter just now:
And Cupid was as bad as he;
Hear but the younger's repartee. Prior.
- TO REPARTEE. v. n. To make smart replies.
High flights he had, and wit at will,
And to her tongue lay seldom still;
For in all visits who but she,
To argue, or to repartee? Prior.
- TO REPASS. v. a. [repasser, Fr.] To pass again; to pass back.
Well we have pass'd, and now repass'd the seas,
And brought desir'd help. Shakefp. Henry VI.
We shall find small reason to think, that Abraham pass'd and repass'd those ways more often than he was enforced so to do, if we consider that he had no other comforter in this wearisome journey, than the strength of his faith in God. Ral.
If his soul hath wing'd the destin'd flight,
Homeward with pious speed repass the main,
To the pale shade funeral rites ordain. Pope's Odyssey.
- TO REPASS. v. n. To go back in a road.
Five girdles bind the skies, the torrid zone
Glow with the passing and repassing sun. Dryden.
- REPA'ST. n. f. [repar, Fr. re and paslus, Lat.]
1. A meal; act of taking food.
From dance to sweet repass they turn
Desirous; all in circles as they stood,
Tables are set. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. v.
What neat repass shall feast us, light and choice,
Of Attick taste, with wine. Milton.
Sleep, that is thy best repass,
Yet of death it bears a taste,
And both are the same thing at last. Denham.
The day
Had summon'd him to due repass at noon. Dryden.

Keep regular hours for repast and sleep. Arbutnot.
 2. Food; victuals.
 Go, and get me some repast;
 I care not what, so it be wholesome food. Shakeſp.
 To REPA'ST. v. a. [repaiſtre, Fr. from the noun.] To feed;
 to feaſt.
 To his good friends I'll ope my arm,
 And, like the kind life-rend'ring pelican,
Repaſt them with my blood. Shakeſp.
REPA'STURE. n. f. [re and paſture.] Entertainment. Not in uſe.
 He from forage will incline to play;
 But if thou ſtrive, poor ſoul, what art thou then?
 Food for his rage, repaſture for his den. Shakeſp.
 To REPA'Y. v. a. [repayer, Fr. re and pay.]
 1. To pay back in return, in requital, or in revenge.
 According to their deeds he will repay recompenſe to his enemies; to the iſlands he will repay recompenſe. Iſ. lix. 18.
 The falſe honour, which he had ſo long enjoyed, was plentifully repaid in contempt. Bacon.
 2. To recompenſe.
 He clad
 Their nakedneſs with ſkins of beaſts; or ſlain,
 Or as the ſnake with youthful coat repaid. Milton.
 3. To requite either good or ill.
 The pooreſt ſervice is repaid with thanks. Shakeſp.
 Fav'ring heav'n repaid my glorious toils
 With a ſack'd palace and barbarick ſpoils. Pope.
 I have fought well for Perſia, and repaid
 The benefit of birth with honeſt ſervice. Rowe.
 4. To reimburse with what is owed.
 If you repay me not on ſuch a day,
 Such ſums as are expenſ'd in the condition,
 Let the forfeit be an equal pound of your fair fleſh. Shak.
REPAYMENT. n. f. [from repay.]
 1. The act of repaying.
 2. The thing repaid.
 The centefima uſura it was not lawful to exceed; and what was paid over it, was reckoned as a repayment of part of the principal. Arbutnot on Coſins.
 To REPEAL. v. a. [rappeller, Fr.]
 1. To recall. Out of uſe.
 I will repeal thee, or be well affur'd,
 I here forget all former griefs;
 Cancel all grudge, repeal thee home again. Shakeſp.
 2. To abrogate; to revoke.
 Laws, that have been approved, may be again repealed, and diſputed againſt by the authors themſelves. Hooker's Pref.
 Adam ſoon repeal'd
 The doubts that in his heart aroſe. Milton's Par. Loſt.
 Statutes are ſilently repealed, when the reaſon ceases for which they were enacted. Dryden's Preface to Fables.
REPEAL. n. f. [from the verb.]
 1. Recall from exile. Not in uſe.
 If the time thruſt forth
 A cauſe for thy repeal, we ſhall not ſend
 O'er the vaſt world to ſeek a ſingle man. Shakeſp.
 2. Revocation; abrogation.
 The king being advertiſed, that the over-large grants of lands and liberties made the lords ſo inſolent, did abſolutely reſume all ſuch grants; but the earl of Deſmond above all found himſelf grieved with this reſumption or repeal of liberties, and declared his diſlike. Davies on Ireland.
 If the preſbyterians ſhould obtain their ends, I could not be ſorry to find them miſtaken in the point which they have moſt at heart, by the repeal of the teſt; I mean the benefit of employments. Swift's Preſbyterian Plea.
 To REPEAT. v. a. [repeto, Lat. repetere, Fr.]
 1. To iterate; to uſe again; to do again.
 Theſe evils thou repeat'st upon thyſelf,
 Have baniſh'd me from Scotland. Shakeſp. Macbeth.
 He, though his power
 Creation could repeat, yet would be loth
 Us to aboliſh. Milton.
 Where ſudden alterations are not neceſſary, the ſame effect may be obtained by the repeated force of diet with more ſafety to the body. Arbutnot on Aliments.
 2. To ſpeak again.
 The psalms, for the excellency of their uſe, deſerve to be oftner repeated; but that their multitude permitteth not any oftner repetition. Hooker.
 3. To try again.
 Neglecting for Creuſa's life his own,
Repeats the danger of the burning town.
 Beyond this place you can have no retreat,
 Stay here, and I the danger will repeat. Dryden.
 4. To recite; to rehearſe.
 Thou their natures know'ſt, and gav'ſt them names,
 Needleſs to thee repeated. Milton.
 He repeated ſome lines of Virgil, ſuitable to the occaſion.
Waller's Liſt.
REPEATEDLY. adv. [from repeated.] Over and over; more than once.

REP

And are not theſe vices, which lead into damnation, repeatedly, and moſt forcibly cautioned againſt? Stephen.
REPEAT. n. f. [from repeat.]
 1. One that repeats; one that recites.
 2. A watch that ſtrikes the hours at will by compreſſion of a ſpring.
 To REPEL. v. a. [repello, Lat.]
 1. To drive back any thing.
 Neither doth Tertullian bewray this weakneſs in ſtriking only, but alſo in repelling their ſtrokes with whom he contendeth. Hooker, b. ii. f. 5.
 With hills of ſlain on ev'ry ſide,
 Hippomedon repell'd the hoſtile tide. Pope.
 2. To drive back an aſſailant.
 Stand faſt; and all temptation to tranſgreſs repel. Mil.
Repel the Tuſcan foes, their city ſeize, Protect the Latians in luxurious eaſe. Dryden's Enſei.
 Your foes are ſuch, as they, not you, have made,
 And virtue may repel, though not invade. Dryden.
 To REPEL. v. n.
 1. To act with force contrary to force impreſſed.
 From the ſame repelling power it ſeems to be, that flies walk upon the water without wetting their feet. Newton.
 2. In phyſick, to repel in medicine, is to prevent ſuch an afflux of a fluid to any particular part, as would raiſe it into a tumour. Quincy.
REPELLENT. n. f. [repellens, Lat.] An application that has a repelling power.
 In the cure of an eryſipelas, whiſt the body abounds with bilious humours, there is no admitting of repellents, and by diſcients you will encreaſe the heat. Wiſeman.
REPELLER. n. f. [from repel.] One that repels.
 To REPERT. v. n. [repertur, Fr.]
 1. To think on any thing paſt with ſorrow.
 God led them not through the land of the Philiftines, left peradventure the people repert, when they ſee war and they return. Exodus xiii. 17.
 Nor had I any reſervations in my own ſoul, when I paſſed that bill; nor repertings after. King Charles.
 Upon any deviation from virtue, every rational creature ſo deviating, ſhould condemn, renounce, and be ſorry for every ſuch deviation; that is, repert of it. South.
 Fiſt the relents
 With pity, of that pity then reperts. Dryden.
 Still you may prove the terror of your foes;
 Teach traitors to repert of faithleſs leagues. A. Philips.
 2. To expreſs ſorrow for ſomething paſt.
 Poor Enoch did before thy face repert. Shakeſp.
 3. To have ſuch ſorrow for ſin, as produces amendment of life.
 Nineveh reperted at the preaching of Jonas. Matt. xii. 41.
 To REPENT. v. a.
 1. To remember with ſorrow.
 If Deſdemona will return me my jewels, I will give over my ſuit, and repent my unlawful ſolicitation. Shakeſp.
 2. To remember with pious ſorrow.
 Thou, like a contrite penitent
 Charitably warn'd of thy ſins, doſt repert
 Theſe vanities and giddineſſes, lo
 I ſhut my chamber-door; come, let us go. Donne.
 His late follies he would late repert. Dryden.
 3. [Se repentir, Fr.] It is uſed with the reciprocal pronoun.
 I repert me, that the duke is ſlain. Shakeſp. Rich. III.
 No man reperted him of his wickedneſs; ſaying, what have
 I done? Jeremiah viii. 6.
 Judas, when he ſaw that he was condemned, reperted
 himſelf. Matthew xxvii. 3.
 My father has reperted him ere now,
 Or will repert him when he finds me dead. Dryden.
 Each age ſinn'd on;
 Till God aroſe, and great in anger ſaid,
 Lo! it reperteth me, that man was made. Prior.
REPENTANCE. n. f. [repentance, Fr. from repent.]
 1. Sorrow for any thing paſt.
 2. Sorrow for ſin, ſuch as produces newneſs of life; penitence.
 Repentance to altereth a man through the mercy of God, be he never ſo deſiled, that it maketh him pure. Whiſtiſt.
 Who by repentance is not ſatisfied,
 Is nor of heav'n nor earth; for theſe are pleaſed;
 By penitence th' eternal's wrath's appeas'd. Shakeſp.
 Repentance is a change of mind, or a converſion from ſin to God: not ſome one bare act of change, but a laſting durable ſtate of new life, which is called regeneration. Hammend.
 This is a confidence, of all the moſt irrational; for upon what ground can a man promiſe himſelf a future repentance, who cannot promiſe himſelf a futurity. South.
REPENTANT. adj. [repentant, Fr. from repent.]
 1. Sorrowful for the paſt.
 2. Sorrowful for ſin.
 Thus they, in lowlieſt plight, repentant ſtood. Milton.
 3. Expreſſing ſorrow for ſin.
 Alas! I have interr'd this noble king,
 And wet his grave with my repentant tears,
 I will with all expedient duty ſee you. Shakeſp. Rich. III.

REP

There is no malice in this burning coal;
 The breath of heav'n hath blown its ſpirit out,
 And ſtrew'd repentant aſhes on its head. Shakeſp. K. John.
 Relentleſs walls! whoſe darkſome round contains Repentant ſighs and voluntary pains. Pope.
 To REPERCUTE. v. a. [re and percutere, Fr.] To ſtock with people anew.
 An occurrence of ſuch remark, as the univerſal flood and the repercuting of the world, muſt be freſh in memory for about eight hundred years; eſpecially conſidering, that the peopling of the world was gradual. Hale's Origin of Mankind.
 To REPERCUSS. v. a. [repercutio, repercuſus, Lat.] To beat back; to drive back; to rebound. Not in uſe.
 Air in ovens, though it doth boil and dilate itſelf, and is repercuſſed, yet it is without noiſe. Bacon.
REPERCUSSION. n. f. [from repercutio; repercuſio, Lat. reper- cution, Fr.] The act of driving back; rebound.
 In echoes, there is no new elition, but a repercuſſion. Bacon.
 They various ways recoil, and ſwiftly flow
 By mutual repercuſſions to and fro. Blackmore.
REPERCUSSIVE. adj. [repercuſſivus, Fr.]
 1. Having the power of driving back or cauſing a rebound.
 2. Repellent.
 Blood is ſtanch'd by aſtringent and repercuſſive medicines.
Bacon's Natural Hiſtory.
 Deſluxions, if you apply a ſtrong repercuſſive to the place affected, and do not take away the cauſe, will ſhift to another place. Bacon.
 3. Driven back; rebounding. Not proper.
 Amid Carnarvon's mountains rages loud
 The repercuſſive roar: with mighty cruſh Tumble the ſmitten cliffs. Thomſon.
REPERTITIOUS. adj. [reperitus, Fr.] Found; gained by finding. Diſt.
REPERTORY. n. f. [repertoire, Fr. repertorium, Lat.] A treaſury; a magazine; a book in which any thing is to be found.
REPERTITION. n. f. [repertitio, Fr. repertitio, Lat.]
 1. Iteration of the ſame thing.
 The frequent repetition of aliment is neceſſary for repairing the fluids and ſolids. Arbutnot on Aliments.
 2. Recital of the ſame words over again.
 The psalms, for the excellency of their uſe, deſerve to be oftner repeated; but that the multitude of them permitteth not any oftner repetition. Hooker, b. v. f. 30.
 3. The act of reciting or rehearſing.
 Which you conquer Rome, the benefit,
 Which you ſhall thereby reap, is ſuch a name,
 Whole repetition will be dogg'd with curſes. Shakeſp.
 4. Recital from memory, as diſting from reading.
 To REPINE. v. n. [re and pine.] To fret; to vex himſelf;
 to be diſcontented.
 Of late,
 When corn was given them gratis, you repin'd. Shakeſp.
 The fines impoſed were the more repined againſt, becauſe they were aſſigned to the rebuilding of St. Paul's church. Clar.
 If you think how many diſeaſes, and how much poverty
 there is in the world, you will fall down upon your knees, and inſtead of repining at one affliction, will admire ſo many bleſſings received at the hand of God. Temple.
 The ghoulſt invading at violated night;
 And curſe th' invading ſun, and ſicken at the fight. Dryd.
 Juſt in the gate
 Dwell pale diſeaſes and repining age. Dryden.
REPINER. n. f. [from repine.] One that frets or murmurs.
 To REPLACE. v. a. [replacer, Fr. re and place.]
 1. To put again in the former place.
 The earl being apprehended, upon examination cleared himſelf ſo well, as he was replaced in his government. Bacon.
 The bowls, remov'd for fear,
 The youths replac'd; and ſoon reſtor'd the chear. Dryden.
 2. To put in a new place.
 His gods put themſelves under his protection, to be replaced in their promiſed Italy. Dryden's Ded. to Virg.
 To REPLANT. v. a. [replanter, Fr. re and plant.] To plant anew.
 Small trees being yet unripe, covered in autumn with dung until the ſpring, take up and replant in good ground. Bacon.
REPLANTATION. n. f. [from replant.] The act of planting again.
 To REPLAT. v. a. [re and plat.] To fold one part often over another.
 In Raphael's firſt works, are many ſmall foldings often replated, which look like ſo many whip-cords. Dryden.
 To REPLENISH. v. a. [repleo, from re and plenus, Lat. reple-
nire, old Fr.]
 1. To ſtock; to fill.
 Multiply and replenish the earth. Gen. i. 28.
 The waters
 With fiſh replenish'd, and the air with fowl. Milton.
 2. To ſuſtain; to ſupplement; to complete. Not proper, nor in uſe.
 We ſmother'd
 The moſt replenish'd ſweet work of nature,
 That from the prime creation e'er the fram'd. Shakeſp.

REP

To REPLE'NISH. v. n. To be ſtocked. Not in uſe.
 The humours in men's bodies encreaſe and decreaſe as the moon doth; and therefore purge ſome day after the full; for then the humours will not replenish ſo ſoon. Bacon.
REPLETE. adj. [replet, Fr. repletus, Lat.] Full; completely filled; filled to exuberance.
 The world's large tongue
 Proclaims you for a man replete with mocks;
 Full of comparifons and wounding flouts. Shakeſp.
 This mortification, if in over high a degree, is little better than the corroſion of poiſon; as ſometimes in antimony, if given to bodies not replete with humours; for where humours abound, the humours ſave the parts. Bacon's Nat. Hiſt.
 His words, replete with guile,
 Into her heart too eaſy entrance won. Milton.
 In a dog, out of whoſe eye being wounded the aqueous humour did copiouſly flow, yet in fix hours the bulb of the eye was again replete with its humour, without the application of any medicines. Ray on the Creation.
REPLETION. n. f. [repletion, Fr.] The ſtate of being over-full.
 The tree had too much repletion, and was oppreſſed with its own ſap; for repletion is an enemy to generation. Bacon.
 All dreams
 Are from repletion and complexion bred;
 From riſing fumes of undigeſted food. Dryden.
 Thirſt and hunger may be ſatisfy'd;
 But this repletion is to love deny'd. Dryden.
 The action of the ſtomach is totally ſtopped by too great repletion. Arbutnot on Aliments.
REPLEVABLE. adj. [replevabilis, barbarous Latin.] What may be replevied.
 To REPLEVIN. v. a. [replevio, low Lat. of re and plevin, Fr. to give a pledge.] To take back or ſet at liberty any thing ſeized upon ſecurity given.
 That you're a beaſt, and turn'd to graſs,
 Is no ſtrange news, nor ever was;
 At leaſt to me, who once, you know,
 Did from the pound replevin you. Hudibras, p. iii.
REPLICATION. n. f. [replica, Lat.]
 1. Rebound; repercuſſion. Not in uſe.
 Tyber trembled underneath his banks,
 To hear the replication of your ſounds,
 Made in his concave ſhores. Shakeſp. Julius Ceſar.
 2. Reply; answer.
 To be demanded of a ſponge, what replication ſhould be made by the ſon of a king? Shakeſp. Hamlet.
 This is a replication to what Menelaus had before offer'd, concerning the tranſplantation of Ulyſſes to Sparta. Brome.
 To REPLY. v. n. [repliquer, Fr.] To answer; to make a return to an answer.
 O man! who art thou that replyeſt againſt God? Rom. ix.
 Would we aſcend higher to the reſt of theſe lewd perſons, we ſhould find what reaſon Caſſio's painter had to reply upon the cardinal, who blamed him for putting a little too much colour into St. Peter and Paul's faces: that it was true in their life time they were pale mortified men, but that ſince they were grown ruddy, by bluſhing at the ſins of their ſucces-ſors. Atterbury's Sermons.
 His trembling tongue invoc'd his bride;
 With his laſt voice Eurydice he cry'd:
 Eurydice the rocks and river-banks reply'd. Dryden.
 To REPLY. v. a. To return for an answer.
 Perplex'd
 The tempter ſtood, nor had what to reply. Milton.
REPLY. n. f. [replique, Fr.] Answer; return to an answer.
 But now return,
 And with their faint reply this answer join. Shakeſp.
 If I ſent him word, it was not well cut; he would ſend me word, he cut it to pleaſe himſelf: if again, it was not well cut, this is called the reply churliſh. Shakeſp.
 One riſes up to make reply to eſtablish or confute what has been offer'd on each ſide of the queſtion. Watts.
 To whom with ſighs, Ulyſſes gave reply;
 Ah, why ill-fitting paſtime muſt I try? Pope.
REPLYER. n. f. [from reply.] He that makes a return to an answer.
 At an act of the commencement, the answerer gave for his queſtion, that an ariſtocracy was better than a monarchy:
 the replyer did tax him, that, being a private bred man, he would give a queſtion of ſtate: the answerer ſaid, that the replyer did much wrong the privilege of ſcholars, who would be much ſtrengthened if they ſhould give queſtions of nothing, but ſuch things wherein they are practiſed; and added we have heard yourſelf diſpute of virtue, which no man will ſay you put much in practice. Bacon's Apophthegms.
 To REPOLISH. v. a. [repolir, Fr. re and polir.] To poliſh again.
 A hundred clock is piecemeal laid
 Not to be loſt, but by the maker's hand
 Repoliſh'd, without error then to ſtand. Donne.
 To REPORT.

REP

- TO REPORT. v. a. [rapporter, Fr.]
1. To noie by popular rumour.
Is it upon record? or else reported successively from age to age?
Shaksp. Richard III.
It is reported,
That good duke Humphry traitorously is murder'd. Shak. Report, say they, and we will report it. Jer. xx. 10.
There is a king in Judah; and now shall it be reported to the king. Neb. vi. 7.
2. To give repute.
Timotheus was well reported of by the brethren. Acts xvi.
A widow well reported of for good works. 1 Tim. v. 10.
3. To give an account of.
4. To return; to rebound; to give back.
In Ticinum is a church with windows only from above, that reporteth the voice thirteen times, if you stand by the close end wall over against the door. Bacon.
REPORT. n. f. [from the noun.]
1. Rumour; popular fame.
2. Repute; public character.
My body's mark'd
With Roman swords; and my report was once
First with the best of note. Shaksp. Cymbeline.
In all approving ourselves as the ministers of God, by honour and dishonour, by evil report and good report. 2 Cor. iv.
3. Account returned.
We command our ambassadors to make report unto you. 1 Mac. xii. 13.
Sea nymphs enter with the swelling tide;
From Thetis sent as spies to make report,
And tell the wonders of her lov'd reign's court. Waller.
4. Account given by lawyers of cases.
After a man has studied the general principles of the law, reading the reports of adjudged cases, will richly improve his mind. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.
5. Sound; loud noise; repercussion.
The stronger species drowneth the lesser; the report of an ordinance, the voice. Bacon's Natural History.
The lashing billows make a long report,
And beat her sides. Dryden's Ceyx and Alcyon.
REPORTER. n. f. [from report.] Relater; one that gives an account.
There she appear'd; or my reporter devis'd well for her. Shaksp. Antony and Cleopatra.
Rumours were raised of great discord among the nobility; for this cause the lords assembled, gave order to apprehend the reporters of these surmises. Hayward.
If I had known a thing they concealed, I should never be the reporter of it. Pope.
REPORTINGLY. adv. [from reporting.] By common fame.
Others say thou dost deserve; and I Believe it better than reportingly. Shaksp.
REPOSAL. n. f. [from repose.] The act of reposing.
Dost thou think,
If I would stand against thee, would the reposal
Of any trust, virtue, or worth in thee,
Make thy words faith'd. Shaksp. King Lear.
TO REPOSE. v. a. [repono, Lat.]
1. To lay to rest.
Rome's readiest champions, repose you here,
Secure from worldly chances and mishaps;
Here lurks no treason, here no envy swells.
I will repose myself with her; to live with her hath no sorrow, but mirth. Wisdom viii. 16.
Have ye chos'n this place,
After the toil of battle, to repose
Your wearied virtue. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. i.
2. To place as in confidence or trust.
I repose upon your management, what is dearest to me, my fame. Dryden's Preface to Ann. Mirab.
That prince was conscious of his own integrity in the service of God, and relied on this as a sure foundation for that trust he repos'd in him, to deliver him out of all his distresses. Rogers's Sermons.
3. To lodge; to lay up.
Pebbles, repos'd in those cliffs amongst the earth, being not so dissoluble and likewise more bulky, are left behind. Woodward's Natural History.
TO REPOSE. v. n. [reposer, Fr.]
1. To sleep; to be at rest.
Within a thicket I repos'd; when round
I ruff'd up fall'n leaves in heap; and found,
Let fall from heaven, a sleep interminate. Chapman.
2. To rest in confidence.
And, for the ways are dangerous to pass,
I do desire thy worthy company,
Upon whose faith and honour I repose. Shaksp.
REPOSE. n. f. [repos, Fr.]
1. Sleep; rest; quiet.
Merciful pow'rs!
Restrain in me the cur'd thoughts, that nature
Gives way to in repose. Shaksp. Macbeth.

REP

- Th' hour
Of night, and of all things now retir'd to rest,
Mind us of like repose. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. iv.
Thoughtful of thy gain, I all the livelong day
Consume in meditation deep, recluse
From human converse; nor at shut of eve
Enjoy repose. Philips.
2. Cause of rest.
After great lights must be great shadows, which we call reposes; because in reality the sight would be tired, if attracted by a continuity of glittering objects. Dryden's Dufresnoy.
REPOSEDNESS. n. f. [from reposed.] State of being at rest.
TO REPOSE. v. a. [repositus, Lat.] To lay up; to lodge as in a place of safety.
Others repose their young in holes, and secure themselves also therein, because such security is wanting, their lives being sought. Deham's Physico-Theology.
REPOSITION. n. f. [from repositio.] The act of replacing.
Being fastidied in the reposition of the bone, take care to keep it so by deligation. Wise's Surgery.
REPOSITORY. n. f. [repositio, Fr. repositorium, Lat.] A place where any thing is safely laid up.
The mind of man, not being capable of having many ideas under view at once, it was necessary to have a repository to lay up those ideas. Locke.
He can take a body to pieces, and dispose of them, to us not without the appearance of irretrievable confusion, but with respect to his own knowledge into the most regular and methodical repositories. Rogers's Sermons.
TO REPOSE. v. a. [re and posses.] To possess again.
How comes it now, that almost all that realm is repossessed of them? Shaksp. Richard III.
Her suit is now to repossess those lands,
Which we in justice cannot well deny.
Nor shall my father repossess the land,
The father's fortune never to return. Pope's Odyssey.
TO REPREHEND. v. a. [reprehendo, Lat.]
1. To reprove; to chide.
All as before his sight, whose presence to offend with any the least unbecomeliness, we would be surely as loth as they, who most reprehend or deride that we do. Hooker, b. v. f. 29.
Pardon me for reprehending thee,
For thou hast done a charitable deed. Shaksp.
They, like dumb statues star'd;
Which, when I saw, I reprehended them;
And ask'd the mayor, what meant this wilful silence? Shaksp.
2. To blame; to censure.
I nor advise, nor reprehend the choice
Of Marcey-hill. Philips.
Friends reprehend him, reprehend him there:
For what? for stealing Gaffer Gap's gray mare. Gay.
3. To detect of fallacy.
This colour will be reprehended or encountered, by imputing to all excellencies in compositions a kind of poverty. Bacon.
4. To charge with as a fault. With of before the crime.
Aristippus, being reprehended of luxury by one that was not rich, for that he gave six crowns for a small fish, answered, why, what would you have given? the other said, some twelve pence: Aristippus said again, and six crowns is no more with me. Bacon's Aphorisms.
REPREHENDER. n. f. [from reprehend.] Blamer; censurer.
These fervent reprehenders of things, established by public authority, are always confident and bold-spirited men; but their confidence for the most part riseth from too much credit given to their own wits, for which cause they are seldom free from errors. Hooker's Dedication.
REPREHENSIBLE. adj. [reprehensibilis, Fr. reprehensibilis, Lat.]
Blameable; culpable; censurable.
REPREHENSIBLENESS. n. f. [from reprehensibilis.] Blameableness.
REPREHENSIBLY. adv. [from reprehensibilis.] Blameably;
culpably.
REPREHENSION. n. f. [reprehensio, Latin.] Reproof; open blame.
To a heart fully resolute counsel is tedious, but reprehension is loathsome.
There is likewise due to the publick a civil reprehension of advocates, where there appeareth cunning counsel, gross neglect, and slight information. Bacon's Essays.
The admonitions, fraternal or paternal of his fellow christians, or the governors of the church, then more publick reprehensions and incipations. Hammond.
What effect can that man hope from his most zealous reprehensions, who lays himself open to recrimination. Gz. of T.
REPREHENSIVE. adj. [from reprehend.] Given to reproof.
TO REPREHEND. v. a. [reprehendo, Lat. reprehendo, Fr.]
1. To exhibit, as if the thing exhibited were present.
Before him burn
Seven lamps, as in a zodiac representing
The heavenly fires. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xii.
2. To

REP

2. To describe; to show in any particular character.
This bank is thought the greatest load on the Genoese, and the managers of it have been represented as a second kind of senate. Addison's Remarks on Italy.
3. To fill the place of another by a vicarious character; to personate: as, the parliament represents the people.
4. To exhibit to show.
One of his cardinals admonished him against that unskilful piece of ingenuity, by representing to him, that no reformation could be made, which would not notably diminish the rents of the church. Decay of Piety.
REPRESENTATION. n. f. [representation, Fr. from represent.]
1. Image; likeness.
If images are worshipped, it must be as gods, which Celsus denied, or as representations of God; which cannot be, because God is invisible and incorporeal. Stillington.
2. Act of supporting a vicarious character.
3. Respectful declaration.
REPRESENTATIVE. adj. [representativus, Fr. from represent.]
1. Exhibiting a similitude.
They relieve themselves with this distinction, and yet own the legal sacrifices, though representative, to be proper and real. Atterbury.
2. Bearing the character or power of another.
This council of four hundred was chosen, one hundred out of each tribe, and seems to have been a body representative of the people; though the people collective reserved a share of power. Swift.
REPRESENTATIVE. n. f.
1. One exhibiting the likeness of another.
A statue of rumour whispering an idiot in the ear, who was the representative of credulity. Addison's Freeholder.
2. One exercising the vicarious power given by another.
I with the welfare of my country; and my morals and politics teach me to leave all that to be adjusted by our representatives above, and to divine providence. Blount to Pope.
3. That by which any thing is shown.
Difficulty must cumber this doctrine, which supposes that the perfections of God are the representatives to us, of whatever we perceive in the creatures. Locke.
REPRESENTER. n. f. [from represent.]
1. One who shows or exhibits.
Where the real works of nature, or veritable acts of story, are to be described, art, being but the imitator or secondary representer, must not vary from the verity. Brown.
2. One who bears a vicarious character; one who acts for another by deputation.
My muse officious ventures
On the nation's representatives. Swift.
REPRESENTMENT. n. f. [from represent.] Image or idea proposed, as exhibiting the likeness of something.
When it is blessed, some believe it to be the natural body of Christ; others, the blessings of Christ, his passion in representation, and his grace in real exhibition. Taylor.
We have met with some, whose realms made good their representments. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
TO REPRESENT. v. a. [represento, Lat. reprimer, Fr.]
1. To crush; to put down; to subdue.
Discontents and ill blood having used always to repress and appease in person, he was loth they should find him beyond sea. Bacon's Henry VII.
Some, taking dangers to be the only remedy against dangers, endeavoured to set up the sedition again, but they were speedily repressed, and thereby the sedition suppressed wholly. Hayward.
Such kings
Favour the innocent, repress the bold,
And, while they flourish, make an age of gold. Waller.
How can I
Repress the horror of my thoughts, which fly
The sad remembrance.
Thus long succeeding critics justly reign'd,
Licence repress'd, and useful laws ordain'd:
Learning and Rome alike in empire grew.
Armies stretch, repressing here
The frantick Alexander of the North. Thomson.
2. To compress. Not proper.
REPRESS. n. f. [from the verb.] Repression; act of crushing.
Not in use.
Loud outcries of injury, when they tend nothing to the repress of it, is a liberty rather assumed by rage and impatience, than authorized by justice. Government of the Tongue.
REPRESSION. n. f. [from repress.] Act of repressing.
No declaration from myself could take place, for the due repression of these tumults. King Charles.
REPRESSIVE. adj. [from repress.] Having power to repress;
acting to repress.
TO REPRIVE. v. a. [reprime, repris, Fr.] To respite after sentence of death; to give a respite.
Company, though it may relieve a man from his melancholy, yet cannot secure him from his conscience. South.
Having been condemned for his part in the late rebellion,

REP

- his majesty had been pleased to reprove him, with several of his friends, in order to give them their lives. Addison.
He reproveth the sinner from time to time, and continues and heaps on him the favours of his providence, in hopes that, by an act of clemency so undeserved, he may prevail on his gratitude and repentance. Rogers's Sermons.
REPRIVE. n. f. [from the verb.] Respite after sentence of death.
In his reprove he may be so fitted,
That his soul sicken not. Shaksp. Measure for Measure.
I hope it is some pardon or reprove
For Claudio. Shaksp. Measure for Measure.
He cannot thrive,
Unless her prayers, whom heav'n delights to hear,
And loves to grant, reprove from the wrath
Of greatest justice. Shaksp. All's well that ends well.
The morning Sir John Hotham was to die, a reprove was sent to suspend the execution for three days. Clarendon.
All that I ask, is but a short reprove,
Till I forget to love, and learn to grieve. Denham.
TO REPRIMAND. v. a. [reprimander, Fr. reprimo, Lat.] To chide; to check; to reprehend; to reprove.
Germanicus was severely reprimanded by Tiberius, for travelling into Egypt without his permission. Arbutnot.
REPRIMAND. n. f. [reprimande, reprimende, Fr. from the verb.]
Reproof; reprehension.
He inquires how such an one's wife or son do, whom he does not see at church; which is understood as a secret reprimand to the person absent. Addison's Spectator, N<sup>o</sup> 112.
TO REPRINT. v. a. [re and print.]
1. To renew the impression of any thing.
The business of redemption is to rub over the defaced copy of creation, to reprint God's image upon the soul, and to set forth nature in a second and a fairer edition. South.
2. To print a new edition.
My bookseller is reprinting the essay on criticism. Pope.
REPRISAL. n. f. [reprisalia, low Lat. reprisalle, Fr.] Something seized by way of retaliation for robbery or injury.
The English had great advantage in value of reprisals, as being more strong and active at sea. Hayward.
Sense must sure thy safest plunder be,
Since no reprisals can be made on thee. Pope.
REPRISER. n. f. [repriser, Fr.] The act of taking something in retaliation of injury.
Your care about your banks infers a fear
Of threatening floods and inundations near;
If so, a just reprisal would only be
Of what the land usurp'd upon the sea. Dryden.
TO REPROACH. v. a. [reprocher, Fr.]
1. To censure in opprobrious terms, as a crime.
Mezentius, with his ardour warm'd
His fainting friends, reproach'd their shameful flight, Repell'd the victors. Dryden's Æneis.
The French writers do not burden themselves too much with plot, which has been reproach'd to them as a fault. Dry.
2. To charge with a fault in severe language.
If ye be reproach'd for the name of Christ, happy are ye. 1 Peter iv. 14.
That shame
There sit not, and reproach us as unclean. Milton.
2. To upbraid in general.
These things are grievous; the upbraiding of house-room, and reproaching of the lender. Ecclesi. xxix. 28.
The very regret of being surpassed in any valuable quality, by a person of the same abilities with ourselves, will reproach our own laziness, and even shame us into imitation. Rogers.
REPROACH. n. f. [reproche, Fr. from the verb.] Censure; infamy; shame.
With his reproach and odious menace,
The knight embolling in his haughty heart,
Knit all his forces. Fairy Queen.
If black scandal or foul-fac'd reproach
Attend the sequel of your imposition,
Your mere enforcement shall acquittance me. Shaksp.
Thou, for the testimony of truth, hast borne Universal reproach. Milton.
REPROACHABLE. adj. [reproachable, Fr.] Worthy of reproach.
REPROACHFUL. adj. [from reproach.]
1. Scurrilous; opprobrious.
O monstrous! what reproachful words are these. Shaksp.
I have breath'd
My rapier in his bosom, and withal
Thrust these reproachful speeches down his throat. Shaksp.
An advocate may be punished for reproachful language, in respect of the parties in suit. Ayliffe's Parergon.
2. Shameful; infamous; vile.
To make religion a stratagem to undermine government, is contrary to this superstructure, most scandalous and re-proachful to christianity. Hammond's Fundamentals.
Thy punishment
He shall endure, by coming in the flesh
To a reproachful life and cur'd death. Milton's Par. Lost.
21 Q
REPROACHFULLY.

REP

REPROACHFULLY. adv. [from reproach.]
 1. Opprobriously; ignominiously; scurrilously.
 Shall I then be us'd reproachfully? Shakefp. Hen. VI.
 I will that the younger women marry, and give none occasion to the adversary to speak reproachfully. 1 Tim. v. 14.
 2. Shamefully; infamously.
 REPROBATE. adj. [reprobatus; Lat.] Lost to virtue; lost to grace; abandoned.
 They profess to know God, but in works deny him, being abominable, and to every good work reprobate. Tit. i. 16.
 Strength and art are easily outdone.
 By spirits reprobate. Milton.
 God forbid, that every single commission of a sin, though great for its kind, and withal acted against conscience, for its aggravation, should so far deprave the soul, and bring it to such a reprobate condition, as to take pleasure in other men's sins. South's Sermons.
 REPROBATE. n. f. A man lost to virtue; a wretch abandoned to wickedness.
 What if we omit
 This reprobate, till he were well inclin'd. Shakefp.
 I acknowledge myself for a reprobate, a villain, a traitor to the king, and the most unworthy man that ever lived. Ral.
 All the saints have profited by tribulations; and they that could not bear temptations, became reprobates. Taylor.
 TO REPROBATE. v. a. [reprobo, Lat.]
 1. To disallow; to reject.
 Such an answer as this is reprobated and disallowed of in law; I do not believe it, unless the deed appears. Ayliffe.
 2. To abandon to wickedness and eternal destruction.
 What should make it necessary for him to repent and amend, who either without respect to any degree of amendment is supposed to be elected to eternal bliss, or without respect to sin, to be irreversibly reprobated. Hammond.
 A reprobated hardness of heart does them the office of philosophy towards a contempt of death. L'Estrange.
 3. To abandon to his sentence, without hope of pardon.
 Drive him out
 To reprobated exile round the world,
 A captive, vagabond, abhor'd, accus'd. Southern.
 REPROBATENESS. n. f. [from reprobate.] The state of being reprobate.
 REPROBATION. n. f. [reprobation, Fr. from reprobate.]
 1. The act of abandoning or state of being abandoned to eternal destruction.
 This sight would make him do a desperate turn;
 Yea curse his better angel from his side,
 And fall to reprobation. Shakefp. Othello.
 Though some words may be accommodated to God's predestination, yet it is the scope of that text to treat of the reprobation of any man to hell-fire. Bramhall against Hobbs.
 God, upon a true repentance, is not so fatally tied to the spindle of absolute reprobation, as not to keep his promise, and seal merciful pardons. Maine.
 2. A condemnatory sentence.
 You are empower'd to give the final decision of wit, to put your stamp on all that ought to pass for current, and set a brand of reprobation on clipt poetry and false coin. Dryden.
 TO REPRODUCE. v. a. [re and produce; reproduire, Fr.]
 To produce again; to produce anew.
 If horse dung reprodueth oats, it will not be easily determined where the power of generation ceaseth. Brown.
 Those colours are unchangeable, and whenever all those rays with those their colours are mixed again, they reproduce the same white light as before. Newton's Opticks.
 REPRODUCTION. n. f. [from reproduce.] The act of producing anew.
 I am about to attempt a reproduction in vitriol, in which it seems not unlikely to be performable. Boyle.
 REPROOF. n. f. [from reprove.]
 1. Blame to the face; reprehension.
 Good Sir John, as you have one eye upon my follies, turn another into the register of your own, that I may pass with a reproof the easier. Shakefp. Merry Wives of Windsor.
 Fear not the anger of the wife; to raise;
 Those best can bear reproof, who merit praise. Pope.
 2. Censure; slander. Out of use.
 Why, for thy sake, have I suffer'd reproof? shame hath covered my face. Psalms lxx. 7.
 REPROVABLE. adj. [from reprove.] Culpable; blamable; worthy of reprehension.
 If thou dost find thy faith as dead after the reception of the sacrament as before, it may be thy faith was not only little, but reproveable. Taylor's Worthy Communicant.
 TO REPROVE. v. a. [reprovo, Fr.]
 1. To blame; to censure.
 I will not reprove thee for thy sacrifices. Psalms l. 8.
 2. To charge to the face with a fault; to check; to chide; to reprehend.
 What if they can better be content with one that can wink at their faults, than with him that will reprove them. Whitg.
 There is no slander in an allow'd fool, though he do nothing but rail; nor no railing in a known discreet man, though he do nothing but reprove. Shakefp. Twelfth Night.

REP

What if thy son
 Prove disobedient and reprov'd, retort,
 Wherefore didst thou beget me? Milton.
 If a great personage undertakes an action passionately, let it be acted with all the malice and impotency in the world, he shall have enough to flatter him, but not enough to reprove him. Taylor's Rule of Living Holy.
 3. To refute; to disprove.
 My lords,
 Reprove my allegation if you can. Shakefp. Henry VI.
 4. To blame for. With of.
 To reprove one of laziness, they will say, dost thou make idle a coat? that is a coat for idleness. Carew.
 REPROVER. n. f. [from reprove.] A reprehender; one that reproves.
 Let the most potent sinner speak out, and tell us, whether he can command down the clamours and revilings of a guilty conscience, and impose silence upon that bold reprover. South.
 This shall have from every one, even the reprovers of vice, the title of living well. Locke on Education.
 TO REPRUNE. v. a. [re and prune.] To prune a second time.
 Reprune apricots and peaches, faving as many of the young likeliest shoots as are well placed. Evelyn's Kalendar.
 REPTILE. adj. [reptile, Lat.] Creeping upon many feet. In the following lines reptile is confounded with serpent.
 Cleanse baits from filth, to give a tempting gloss, Cherish the fully'd reptile race with mois. Gay.
 REPTILE. n. f. An animal that creeps upon many feet.
 Terrestrial animals may be divided into quadrupeds or reptiles, which have many feet, and serpents which have no feet. Locke's Elements of Natural Philosophy.
 Holy retreat! fithness no female hither,
 Conscious of social love and nature's rites,
 Must dare approach, from the inferior reptile,
 To woman, form divine. Prior.
 REPUBLICAN. adj. [from republick.] Placing the government in the people.
 REPUBLICAN. n. f. [from republick.] One who thinks a commonwealth without monarchy the best government.
 These people are more happy in imagination than the rest of their neighbours, because they think themselves so; though such a chimerical happiness is not peculiar to republicans. Add.
 REPUBLICAN. n. f. [republica, Lat. republicque, Fr.] Commonwealth; state in which the power is lodged in more than one.
 Those that by their deeds will make it known,
 Whose dignity they do sustain;
 And life, state, glory, all they gain,
 Count the republick's, not their own. Benj. Franklin.
 They are indiged many millions more than their whole republick is worth. Addison's State of the War.
 REPUDIABLE. adj. [from repudiate.] Fit to be rejected.
 TO REPUDIATE. v. a. [repudio, Lat. repudier, Fr.] To divorce; to reject; to put away.
 Here is a notorious instance of the folly of the atheists, that while they repudiate all title to the kingdom of heaven, merely for the present pleasure of body, and their boasted tranquillity of mind, besides the extreme madness in running such a desperate hazard after death, they unwittingly deprive themselves here of that very pleasure and tranquillity they seek for.
 Let not those, that have repudiated the more inviting sins, show themselves philtred and bewitched by this. G. of Tongue.
 REPUDIATION. n. f. [repudiation, Fr. from repudiate.] Divorce; rejection.
 It was allowed by the Athenians, only in case of repudiation of a wife. Arbutnot on Cato.
 REPUGNANCE. n. f. [repugnance, Fr. from repugnans.]
 REPUGNANCY. n. f. [repugnance, Fr. from repugnans.]
 1. Inconsistency; contrariety.
 But where difference is without repugnancy, that which hath been can be no prejudice to that which is.
 It is no affront to omnipotence, if, by reason of the formal incapacity and repugnancy of the thing, we aver that the world could not have been made from all eternity. Bentley.
 2. Reluctance; unwillingness; struggle of opposite passion.
 Why do fond men expose themselves to battle,
 And let the foes quietly cut their throats,
 Without repugnancy? Shakefp. Timon of Athens.
 Thus did the passions act without any of their present jars, combats or repugnances, all moving with the beauty of uniformity and the stillness of composure. South's Sermons.
 That which causes us to lose most of our time, is the repugnance which we naturally have to labour. Dryden.
 REPUGNANT. adj. [repugnans, Fr. repugnans, Lat.]
 1. Disobedient; not obsequious.
 His antique sword,
 Rebellious to his arm, lies where it falls,
 Repugnant to command. Shakefp. Hamlet.
 2. Contrary; opposite.
 Why I reject the other conjectures is; because they have not due warrant from observation, but are clearly repugnant thereto. Woodward's Natural History.
 REPUGNANTLY.

REQ

REPUGNANTLY. adv. [from repugnans.] Contradictorily.
 They speak not repugnantly thereto. Brown's Vulg. Err.
 TO REPULULATE. v. n. [re and pullula, Lat. repullula, Fr.] To bud again.
 Though tares repululate, there is wheat still left in the field. Howel's Vocal Forest.
 REPULSE. n. f. [repulsio, Fr. repulsa, Latin.] The condition of being driven off or put aside from any attempt.
 My repulse at Hull seemed an act of so rude disloyalty, that my enemies had scarce confidence enough to abet it. K. Cha.
 Nor much expect
 A foe so proud will first the weaker seek;
 So bent, the more shall shame him his repulse. Milton.
 By fate repell'd, and with repulses tir'd. Denham.
 TO REPULSE. v. a. [repulsus, Lat.] To beat back; to drive off.
 The christian defendants still repulsed them with greater courage than they were able to assail them. Kneller.
 This fleet, attempting St. Minoes, were repulsed, and without glory or gain, returned into England. Hayward.
 Man complete to have discover'd and repuls'd
 Whatever wiles of foe or seeming friend. Milton.
 REPULSION. n. f. [repulsus, Lat.] The act or power of driving off from itself.
 Air has some degree of tenacity, whereby the parts attract one another; at the same time, by their elasticity, the particles of air have a power of repulsion or flying off from one another. Arbutnot.
 REPULSIVE. adj. [from repulsio.] Driving off; having the power to beat back or drive off.
 The parts of the salt or vitriol recede from one another, and endeavour to expand themselves, and get as far asunder as the quantity of water, in which they float, will allow; and does not this endeavour imply, that they have a repulsive force by which they fly from one another, or that they attract the water more strongly than one another? Newton's Opticks.
 TO REPURCHASE. v. a. [re and purchase.] To buy again.
 Once more we fit on England's royal throne,
 Repurchas'd with the blood of enemies;
 What valiant foe-men, like to autumn's corn,
 Have we mow'd down in top of all their pride? Shakefp.
 If the son alien those lands, and repurchase them again in fee, the rules of descent are to be observed, as if he were the original purchaser. Hale's Law of England.
 REPUTABLE. adj. [from repute.] Honourable; not infamous.
 If ever any vice shall become reputable, and be gloried in as a mark of greatness, what can we then expect from the man of honour, but to signalize himself. Rogers's Sermons.
 In the article of danger, it is as reputable to elude an enemy as defeat one. Broome.
 REPUTABLY. adv. [from reputable.] Without discredit.
 To many such worthy magistrates, who have thus reputably filled the chief seats of power in this great city, I am now addressing my discourse. Atterbury's Sermons.
 REPUTATION. n. f. [reputation, Fr. from repute.] Credit; honour; character of good.
 Reputation is an idle and most false imposition; oft got without merit, and lost without deserving; you have lost no reputation at all, unless you repute yourself such a loser. Shak.
 Verily, upon the lake of Geneva, has the reputation of being extremely poor and beggarly. Addison.
 A third interprets motions, looks and eyes;
 At every word a reputation dies. Pope's Rape of the Lock.
 TO REPUTE. v. a. [repute, Lat. reputer, Fr.] To hold; to account; to think.
 The king was reputed a prince most prudent. Shakefp.
 I do repute her grace
 The rightful heir to England's royal seat. Shakefp.
 I do know of those,
 That therefore only are reputed wife,
 For saying nothing. Shakefp. Merchant of Venice.
 Men, such as chuse
 Law practice for mere gain, boldly repute
 Worse than embrothel'd trumpets prostitute. Donne.
 If the grand vizier be so great, as he is reputed, in politicks he will never consent to an invasion of Hungary. Temple.
 REPUTE. n. f. [from the verb.]
 1. Character; reputation.
 2. Established opinion.
 He who reigns
 Monarch in heav'n, till then as one secure,
 Sat on his throne, upheld by old repute. Milton.
 REPUTELESS. adj. [from repute.] Disreputable; disgraceful.
 A word not elegant, but out of use.
 Opinion, that did help me to the crown,
 Had left me in reputeless banishment,
 A fellow of no mark nor livelihood. Shakefp. Hen. V.
 REQUEST. n. f. [requisit, Fr.]
 1. Petition; entreaty.
 But ask what you would have reform'd,
 I will both hear and grant you your requests. Shakefp.
 Haman stood up to make request for his life to Esther. Esdr.

REQ

All thy request for man, accepted son!
 Obtain; all thy request was my decree. Milton's Par. Lost.
 Ask him to lend
 To this, the last request that I shall send,
 A gentle ear. Denham.
 2. Demand; repute; credit; state of being desired.
 Tullus Aufidius will appear well in these wars, his great opposer Coriolanus being now in no request of his country. Shakefp. Coriolanus.
 Whilst this vanity of thinking, that men are obliged to write either systems or nothing, is in request, many excellent notions are suppressed. Boyle.
 Knowledge and fame were in as great request as wealth among us now. Temple.
 TO REQUEST. v. a. [requisier, Fr.] To ask; to solicit; to entreat.
 To-night we hold a solemn supper, Sir,
 And I'll request your presence. Shakefp. Macbeth.
 It was to be requested of Almighty God by prayer, that those kings would seriously fulfil all that hope of peace. Kaales.
 The virgin quire for her request,
 The god that sits at marriage feast;
 He at their invoking came,
 But with a scarce well-lighted flame. Milton.
 In things not unlawful, great persons cannot be properly said to request, because all things considered, they must not be denied. South's Sermons.
 REQUESTER. n. f. [from request.] Petitioner; soliciter.
 TO REQUICKEN. v. a. [re and quicken.] To reanimate.
 By and by the din of war 'gan pierce
 His ready sense, when straight his doubled spirit
 Requick'd what in flesh was fatigate,
 And to the battle came he. Shakefp. Coriolanus.
 REQUIEM. n. f. [Latin.]
 1. A hymn in which they implore for the dead requiem or rest.
 We should profane the service of the dead,
 To sing a requiem and such peace to her;
 As to peace-parted souls. Shakefp.
 2. Rest; quiet; peace. Not in use.
 The midwife kneel'd at my mother's throes,
 With pain produc'd, and nurs'd for future woes;
 Else had I an eternal requiem kept,
 And in the arms of peace for ever slept. Sandys.
 REQUIRABLE. adj. [from require.] Fit to be required.
 It contains the certain periods of times, and all circumstances requirable in a history to inform. Hale.
 TO REQUIRE. v. a. [require, Lat. requerir, Fr.]
 1. To demand; to ask a thing as of right,
 Ye me require
 A thing without the compals of my wit;
 For both the lineage and the certain fire,
 From which I sprung, are from me hidden yet. Spenser.
 We do require them of you, so to use them,
 As we shall find their merits. Shakefp. King Lear.
 This, the very law of nature teacheth us to do, and this the law of God requirerth also at our hands. Spelman.
 This imply'd
 Subjection, but requir'd with gentle sway;
 Of our alliance other lands desir'd,
 And what we seek of you, of us requir'd. Dryden.
 God, when he gave the world in common to all mankind, commanded men also to labour, and the penalty of his condition required it. Locke.
 2. To make necessary; to need.
 The king's business required haste. 1 Sam. xxi. 8.
 High from the ground the branches would require Thy utmost reach. Milton.
 But why, alas! do mortal men complain;
 God gives us what he knows our wants require,
 And better things than those which we desire. Dryden.
 REQUISITE. adj. [requisitus, Lat.] Necessary; needful; required by the nature of things.
 When God new modelled the world by the introduction of a new religion, and that in the room of one set up by himself, it was requisite, that he should recommend it to the reasons of men with the same authority and evidence that enforced the former. South's Sermons.
 Cold calleth the spirits to succour, and therefore they cannot so well close and go together in the head, which is ever requisite to sleep. Bacon's Natural History.
 Prepare your soul with all those necessary graces, that are more immediately requisite to this performance. Wake.
 REQUISITE. n. f. Any thing necessary.
 Res non parva labores, sed reliqua, was thought by a poet to be one of the requisites to a happy life. Dryden.
 For want of these requisites, most of our ingenious young men take up some cried up English poet, adore him, and imitate him, without knowing wherein he is defective. Dryden.
 This God on his part has declared for the requisites on ours, what we must do to obtain these blessings, is the great business of us all to know. Wake.
 REQUISITELY.

RES

REQUISITELY. adv. [from requisite.] Necessarily; in a requisite manner.

We discern how requisitely the several parts of scripture are fitted to several times, persons, and occurrences. Boyle.

REQUISITENESS. n. f. [from requisite.] Necessity; the state of being requisite.

Discerning how exquisitely the several parts of scripture are fitted to the several times, persons and occurrences intended, we shall discover not only the sense of the obscurer passages, but the requisiteness of their having been written so obscurely. Boyle.

REQUITAL. n. f. [from requite.]

1. Return for any good or bad office; retaliation.
Should we take the quarrel of sermons in hand, and revenge their cause by requital, thrusting prayer in a manner out of doors under colour of long preaching? Hooker.

Since you
Wear your gentle limbs in my affairs,
Be bold, you do so grow in my requital,
As nothing can unroot you. Shak. All's well that ends well.

We hear
Such goodness of your justice, that our soul
Cannot but yield you forth to public thanks, Forerunning your requital. Shaksp. Meas. for Meas.

I see you are obsequious in your love, and I profess requital. Shaksp. Lear.

No merit their averfion can remove,
Nor ill requital can efface their love. Waller.

2. Reward; recompense.
He ask'd me for a song,
And in requital of his leathern scrip,
And shew'd me similes of a thousand names,
Telling their strange and vigorous faculties. Milton.

I have ta'en a cordial,
Sent by the king or Haly, in requital
Of all my miseries, to make me happy. Denham.

In all the light that the heavens bestow upon this lower world, though the lower world cannot equal their benefaction, yet with a kind of grateful return it reflects those rays, that it cannot recompense; so that there is some return however, though there can be no requital. South's Sermons.

TO REQUITE. v. a. [from requite, Fr.] To repay; to retaliate good or ill; to recompense.

If he love me to madness, I shall never requite him. Shak.
He hath requited me evil for good. 1 Sam. xxv. 21.
Open not thine heart to every man, lest he requite thee with a shrewd turn. Ecclef. viii. 19.

When Joseph's brethren saw that their father was dead, they said, Joseph will requite us all the evil we did. Genesis l.
An avenger against his enemies, and one that shall requite kindness to his friends. Ecclef. xxx. 6.

Him within protect from harms;
He can requite thee, for he knows the charms
That call fame on such gentle acts as these. Milton.

Great idol of mankind, we neither claim
The praise of merit, nor aspire to fame!
'Tis all we beg thee to conceal from fight
Those acts of goodness which themselves requite:
O let us still the secret joy partake,
To follow virtue ev'n for virtue's sake. Pope.

Unhappy Wallace,
Great patriot hero! ill requited chief!
Thomson.

REMOUSE. n. f. [from remous, Saxon.] A bat.
REWARD. n. f. The rear or last troop.

REALE. n. f. [from reale, Fr.] Sale at second hand.
Monopolies and coemption of wares for reale, where they are not restrained, are great means to enrich. Bacon.

TO RESALUTE. v. a. [from resaluto, Lat. resaluto, Fr.] To salute or greet anew.

We drew her up to land,
And trod ourselves the resaluted sand.
To resalute the world with sacred light,
Leucothea wak'd. Milton.

TO RESAIL. v. a. [from resail, Fr.] To sail back.
From Pyle resailing, and the Spartan court,
Horrid to speak! in ambush is decreed. Pope's Odyssey.

TO RESCIND. v. a. [from rescindere, Lat. rescindere, Fr.] To cut off; to abrogate a law.

It is the imposing a sacramental obligation upon him, which being the condition, upon the performance whereof all the promises of endless bliss are made over, it is not possible to rescind or disclaim the standing obliged by it. Hammond.

I spake against the test, but was not heard;
These to rescind, and peccage to restore. Dryden.

RESCISSORY. adj. [from rescindere, Lat. rescindere, Fr.] Having the power to cut off.

TO RESCRIBE. v. a. [from rescribere, Lat. rescribere, Fr.] To write back.

RES

1. Whenever a prince on his being consulted rescribes or writes back Tolernamus, he dispenses with that act otherwise unlawful. Ayliffe's Parergon.

2. To write over again.
Calling for more paper to rescribe them, he shewed him the difference betwixt the ink-box and the sand-box. Havel.

RESCRIPT. n. f. [from rescriptum, Lat.] Edict of an emperor.

One finding a great mass of money digged under ground, and being somewhat doubtful, signified it to the emperor, who made a rescript thus; Use it. Bacon's Apophthegms.

The popes, in such cases, where canons were silent, did, after the manner of the Roman emperors, write back their determinations, which were filed rescripts or decretal epistles, having the force of laws. Ayliffe's Parergon.

TO RESCUE. v. a. [from rescure, old Fr.] To let free from any violence, confinement, or danger.

Sir Scudamore, after long sorrow, in the end met with Britomartis, who succoured him and rescued his love. Spens.
My uncles both are slain in rescuing me. Shaksp.

We're beset with thieves;
Rescue thy mistress, if thou be a man. Shaksp.
Dr. Bancroft understood the church excellently, and had almost rescued it out of the hands of the Calvinian party. Clar.

He that is so sure of his particular election, as to resolve he can never fall, if he commit those acts, against which scripture is plain, that they that do them shall not inherit eternal life, must necessarily resolve, that nothing but the removing his fundamental error can rescue him from the superstructure. Hammond's Fundamentals.

Who was that just man, who had not heav'n
Rescued, had in his righteousness been lost? Milton.
Riches cannot rescue from the grave,
Which claims alike the monarch and the slave. Dryden.

RESCUE. n. f. [from rescue, old Fr. rescussus, low Lat.] Deliverance from violence, danger, or confinement.

How comes it, you
Have help to make this rescue. Shaksp. Coriolanus.

RESCUER. n. f. [from rescue.] One that rescues.
RESEARCH. n. f. [from researche, Fr.] Enquiry; search.

By a skillful application of those notices, may be gained in such researches the accelerating and bettering of fruits, emptying mines and draining fens. Glanvill's Scip.

I submit those mistakes, into which I may have fallen, to the better consideration of others, who shall have made research into this business with more felicity. Holder.

A felicity adapted to every rank, such as the researches of human wisdom sought for, but could not discover. Rogers.

TO RESEARCH. v. a. [from researche, Fr.] To examine; to enquire.

It is not easy to research with due distinction, in the actions of eminent personages, both how much may have been blemished by the envy of others, and what was corrupted by their own felicity. Wotton's Buckingham.

TO RESEAT. v. a. [from reseat, Fr.] To seat again.
Upon his father's throne?
RESEIZER. n. f. One that seizes again.

RESEIZURE. n. f. [from reseat, Fr.] Repeated seizure; seizure a second time.

Here we have the charter of foundation; it is now the more easy to judge of the forfeiture or reseizure: deface the image, and you divest the right. Bacon.

RESEMBLANCE. n. f. [from resemblance, Fr.] Likeness; similitude; representation.

These sensible things, which religion hath allowed, are resemblances formed according to things spiritual, whereunto they serve as a hand to lead, and a way to direct. Hooker.

Fairest resemblance of thy maker fair,
Thee all things living gaze on. Milton.

One main end of poetry and painting is to please; they bear a great resemblance to each other. Dryden's Duffresnoy.

The quality produced hath commonly no resemblance with the thing producing it; wherefore, we look on it as a bare effect of power. Locke.

They are but weak resemblances of our intentions, faint and imperfect copies that may acquaint us with the general design, but can never express the life of the original. Addison.

So chymists boast they have a pow'r,
From the dead ashes of a flow'r,
Some faint resemblance to produce,
But not the virtue. Swift's Miscellanies.

I cannot help remarking the resemblance betwixt him and our author in qualities, fame, and fortune. Pope.

TO RESEMBLE. v. a. [from resembler, Fr.] To compare; to represent as like something else.

Most safely may we resemble ourselves to God, in respect of that pure faculty, which is never separate from the love of God. Raleigh's History of the World.

The torrid parts of Africa are resembled to a libbard's skin, the distance of whose spots represent the disperseness of habitations. Brerewood on Languages.

RES

2. To be like; to have likeness to.
If we see a man of virtues, mixed with infirmities, fall into misfortune, we are afraid that the like misfortunes may happen to ourselves, who resemble the character. Addison.

TO RESEND. v. a. [from re and send.] To send back; to send again. Not in use.

I sent to her, by this same coxcomb,
Tokens and letters, which she did resend. Shaksp.

TO RESENT. v. a. [from ressentir, Fr.] To take well or ill.

A serious consideration of the mineral treasures of his territories, and the practical discoveries of them by way of my philosophical theory, he then so well resented, that afterwards, upon a mature digestion of my whole design, he commanded me to let your lordships understand, how great an inclination he hath to further so hopeful a work. Bacon.

2. To take ill; to consider as an injury or affront. This is now the most usual sense.

Thou with scorn
And anger would'st resent the offer'd wrong. Milton.

RESENTER. n. f. [from resent.] One who feels injuries deeply.

The earl was the worst philosopher, being a great resenter, and a weak dissembler of the least disgrace. Wotton.

RESENTFUL. adj. [from resent and full.] Malignant; easily provoked to anger, and long retaining it.

RESENTINGLY. adv. [from resenting.] With deep sense; with strong perception; with anger.

Hylobares judiciously and resentingly recapitulates your main reasonings. More's Divine Dialogues.

RESENTMENT. n. f. [from resentment, Fr.]

1. Strong perception of good or ill.
He retains vivid resentments of the more solid morality. More's Divine Dialogues.

Some faces we admire and dote on; others, in our impartial apprehensions, no less deserving, we can behold without resentment; yea, with an invincible disregard. Glanvill.

What he hath of sensible evidence, the very grand work of his demonstration, is but the knowledge of his own resentment; but how the same things appear to others, they only know that are conscious to them; and how they are in themselves, only he that made them. Glanvill's Scip.

2. Deep sense of injury.
Can heav'nly minds such high resentment show,
Or exercise their spirit in human woe? Dryden.

I cannot, without some envy, and a just resentment against the opposite conduct of others, reflect upon that generosity, wherewith the heads of a struggling faction treat those who will undertake to hold a pen in their defence. Swift.

RESERVATION. n. f. [from reservation, Fr.]

1. Reserve; concealment of something in the mind.
Nor had I any reservations in my own soul, when I passed that bill, nor repentings after. King Charles.

We swear with Jesuitical equivocations and mental reservations. Sanderfon against the Covenant.

2. Something kept back; something not given up.
Ourself by monthly course,
With reservation of an hundred knights,
By you to be sustain'd, shall our abode
Make with you by due turns. Shaksp. King Lear.

This is academical reservation in matters of easy truth, or rather sceptical infidelity against the evidence of reason. Bacon.

These opinions Steele and his faction are endeavouring to propagate among the people concerning the present ministry; with what reservation to the honour of the queen, I cannot determine. Swift's Miscellanies.

3. Custody; state of being treasured up.
He will'd me,
In heedful reservation, to bestow them
As notes, whose faculties inclusive were,
More than they of note. Shaksp.

RESERVATORY. n. f. [from reservoir, Fr.] Place in which any thing is reserved or kept.

How I got such notice of that subterranean reservatory as to make a computation of the water now concealed therein, pursue the propositions concerning earthquakes. Woodward.

TO RESERVE. v. a. [from reserver, Fr. reservere, Lat.]

1. To keep in store; to save to some other purpose.
I could add many probabilities of the names of places; but they should be too long for this, and I reserve them for another. Spenser's State of Ireland.

Hast thou seen the treasures of the hail, which I have reserved against the day of trouble? Job xxxviii. 23.

David houghed all the chariot horses, but reserved of them for an hundred chariots. 2 Sam. viii. 4.

Flowers
Reserved from night, and kept for thee in store. Milton.

2. To retain; to keep; to hold.
Reserve thy state, with better judgment check
This hideous ruffiness. Shaksp.

Will he reserve his anger for ever? will he keep it to the end? Jer. iii. 5.

3. To lay up to a future time.
The Lord knoweth how to deliver the godly out of tempt-

RES

tations, and to reserve the unjust unto the day of judgment to be punished. 2 Peter ii. 9.

The breach seems like the fissures of an earthquake, and threatens to swallow all that attempt to close it, and reserves its cure only for omnipotence. Decay of Piety.

Conceal your esteem and love in your own breast, and reserve your kind looks and language for private hours. Swift.

RESERVE. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Store kept untouched.
The assent may be withheld upon this suggestion, that I know not yet all that may be said; and therefore, though I be beaten, it is not necessary I should yield, not knowing what forces there are in reserve behind. Locke.

2. Something kept for exigence.
The virgins, besides the oil in their lamps, carried likewise a reserve in some other vessel for a continual supply. Tillotson.

3. Something concealed in the mind.
However any one may concur in the general scheme, it is still with certain reserves and deviations, and with a salvo to his own private judgement. Addison's Freeholder.

4. Exception; prohibition.
Is knowledge so despis'd?
Or envy, or what reserve forbids to taste? Milton.

5. Exception in favour.
Each has some darling lust, which pleads for a reserve, and which they would fain reconcile to the expectations of religion. Rogers's Sermons.

6. Modesty; caution in personal behaviour.
Ere guardian thought cou'd bring its scatter'd aid,
My soul surpriz'd, and from herself disjoin'd,
Left all reserve, and all the sex behind. Prior.

RESERVED. adj. [from reserve.]

1. Modest; not loosely free.
To all obliging, yet reserved to all,
None could himself the favour'd lover call. Walsb.

2. Sullen; not open; not frank.
Nothing reserved or sullen was to see,
But sweet regards. Dryden.

RESERVEDLY. adv. [from reserved.]

1. Not with frankness; not with openness; with reserve.
I must give only short hints, and write but obscurely and reservedly, until I have opportunity to express my sentiments with greater copiousness and perspicuity. Woodward.

2. Scrupulously; coldly.
He speaks reservedly, but he speaks with force;
Nor can a word be chang'd but for a worse. Pope.

RESERVEDNESS. n. f. [from reserved.] Closeness; want of frankness; want of openness.

Observe their gravity
And their reservedness, their many cautions Fitting their persons. Benj. Johnson's Cataline.

By formality, I mean something more than ceremony and complement, even a solemn reservedness, which may well consist with honesty. Wotton.

There was great wariness and reservedness, and so great a jealousy of each other, that they had no mind to give or receive visits. Clarendon, b. viii.

Disimulation can but just guard a man within the compass of his own personal concerns, which yet may be more effectually done by that silence and reservedness, that every man may innocently practise. South's Sermons.

RESERVER. n. f. [from reserve.] One that reserves.

RESERVOIR. n. f. [from reservoir, Fr.] Place where any thing is kept in store.

There is not a spring or fountain, but are well provided with huge cisterns and reservoirs of rain and snow-water. Add.

Who sees pale Mammon pine amidst his store,
Sees but a backward steward for the poor;
This year a reservoir, to keep and spare;
The next, a fountain spouting through his heir. Pope.

TO RESEATTLE. v. a. [from resettler.] To settle again.

Will the house of Austria yield the least article, even of usurped prerogative, to resettle the minds of those princes in the alliance, who are alarmed at the consequences of the emperor's death. Swift.

RESETTLEMENT. n. f. [from resettle.]

1. The act of settling again.
To the quieting of my passions, and the resettlement of my discomposed soul, I consider that grief is the most absurd of all the passions. Norris's Miscellanies.

2. The state of settling again.
Some roll their cask to mix it with the lees, and, after a resettlement, they rack it. Mortimer's Husbandry.

RESISTANCE. n. f. [from resistant.] Residence; abode; dwelling. Resistance and resistant are now only used in law.

THE king forthwith banished all Flemings out of his kingdom, commanding his merchant adventurers, which had a resistance in Antwerp, to return. Bacon's Henry VII.

RESISTANT. adj. [from resistant, Fr.] Resistant; present in a place.
Solyman was come as far as Sophia, where the Turks great lieutenant in Europe is always resistant, before that the Hungarians were aware. Knoles's History of the Turks.

The Allobroges here resistant in Rome. Benj. Johnson.

TO RESIDE.

RES

- To RESIDE. v. n. [resideo, Lat. resider, Fr.]
 1. To have abode; to live; to dwell; to be present.
 How can God with such reside? Milton.
 In no fix'd place the happy souls reside;
 In groves we live, and lie on mossy beds. Dryden's Ensis.
 2. [Resido, Lat.] To sink; to subside; to fall to the bottom.
 Oil of vitriol and petroleum, a drachm of each, turn into a mouldy substance; there residing in the bottom a fair cloud and a thick oil on the top. Boyle.
 RESIDENCE. n. f. [residence, Fr.]
 1. Act of dwelling in a place.
 Something holy lodges in that breast,
 And with these raptures moves the vocal air,
 To testify his hidden residence. Milton.
 There was a great familiarity between the confessor and duke William; for the confessor had often made considerable residences in Normandy. Hale's Law of England.
 2. Place of abode; dwelling.
 Within the infant rind of this small flower,
 Poison hath residence and medicine power. Shakefp.
 Understand the same
 Of fish within their wat'ry residence. Milton's Par. Lost.
 Caprea had been the retirement of Augustus for some time, and the residence of Tiberius for several years. Addison.
 3. [From resido, Lat.] That which settles at the bottom of liquors.
 Separation is wrought by weight, as in the ordinary residence or settlement of liquors. Bacon.
 Our clearest waters, and such as seem simple unto sense, are much compounded unto reason, as may be observed in the evaporation of water, wherein, besides a terrene residence, some salt is also found. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
 RESIDENT. adj. [residens, Lat. resident, Fr.] Dwelling or having abode in any place.
 I am not concerned in this objection; not thinking it necessary, that Christ should be personally present or resident on earth in the millenium. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
 He is not said to be resident in a place, who comes thither with a purpose of retiring immediately; so also he is said to be absent, who is absent with his family. Ayliffe's Parergon.
 RESIDENT. n. f. [from the adj.] An agent, minister, or officer residing in any distant place with the dignity of an ambassador.
 The pope fears the English will suffer nothing like a resident or consul in his kingdoms. Addison.
 RESIDENTIARY. adj. [from resident.] Holding residence.
 Christ was the conductor of the Israelites into the land of Canaan, and their residential guardian. More.
 RESIDUAL. adj. [from residuum, Lat.] Relating to the RESIDUARY. s. residue; relating to the part remaining.
 'Tis enough to lose the legacy, or the residuary advantage of the estate left him by the deceased. Ayliffe.
 RESIDUE. n. f. [residu, Fr. residuum, Lat.] The remaining part; that which is left.
 The causes are all such as expel the most volatile parts of the blood, and fix the residue. Arbutnot on Aliments.
 To RESIST. v. a. [re and sisto, Fr.] To resist; to oppose.
 In wretched prison long he did remain,
 Till they outran his utmost date,
 And then therein resisted was again,
 And ruled long with honourable state. Fairy Queen, b. ii.
 To RESIGN. v. a. [resigner, Fr. resigno, Lat.]
 1. To give up a claim or possession.
 Your crown and kingdom, indirectly held. Shakefp.
 I'll to the king, and signify to him,
 That thus I have resign'd to you my charge. Shakefp.
 To her thou didst resign thy place. Milton.
 Phœbus resigns his darts, and Jove
 His thunder, to the god of love. Denham.
 Ev'ry Iliad would resign her breast;
 And ev'ry dear Hippolytus be blest. Prior.
 2. To yield up.
 Whoever shall resign their reasons, either from the root of deceit in themselves, or inability to resist such trivial ingana-tions from others, although their condition may place them above the multitude, yet are they still within the line of vulgarity. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
 Desirous to resign and render back
 All I receiv'd. Milton.
 Those, who always resign their judgment to the last man they heard or read, truth never sinks into those men's minds; but, camelion-like, they take the colour of what is laid before them, and as soon lose and resign it to the next that comes in their way. Locke.
 3. To give up in confidence. With up emphatical.
 What more reasonable, than that we should in all things resign up ourselves to the will of God. Tillotson.
 4. To submit; particularly to submit to providence.
 Happy the man, who studies nature's laws,
 His mind possessing in a quiet state,
 Fearless of fortune, and resign'd to fate. Dryden.
 A firm, yet cautious, mind,
 Sincere, though prudent; constant, yet resign'd. Pope.

RES

5. To submit without resistance or murmur.
 What thou art, resign to death. Shakefp. Henry VI.
 RESIGNATION. n. f. [resignation, Fr.]
 1. The act of resigning or giving up a claim or possession.
 Do that office of thine own good will;
 The resignation of thy state and crown. Shakefp. Rich. II.
 He intended to procure a resignation of the rights of the king's majesty's sisters and others, entitled to the possession of the crown. Hayward.
 2. Submission; unresisting acquiescence.
 We cannot expect, that any one should readily quit his own opinion, and embrace ours, with a blind resignation to an authority, which the understanding acknowledges not. Locke.
 There is a kind of sluggish resignation, as well as poorness and degeneracy of spirit, in a state of slavery, that very few will recover themselves out of it. Addison.
 3. Submission without murmur to the will of God.
 RESIGNER. n. f. [from resign.] One that resigns.
 RESIGNMENT. n. f. [from resign.] Act of resigning.
 RESIGNMENT. n. f. [from resign, Lat.] The act of starting RESIGNMENT. s. or leaping back.
 If you strike a ball fiddling, the rebound will be as much the contrary way; whether there be any such resignment in echoes, that is, whether a man shall hear better if he stand aside the body repercussing, than if he stand where he speaketh, may be tried. Bacon's Natural History.
 RESILIENT. adj. [resiliens, Lat.] Starting or springing back.
 RESILITION. n. f. [resilio, Lat.] The act of springing back;
 resilience.
 RESIN. n. f. [resine, Fr. resina, Lat.] The fat sulphurous parts of some vegetable, which is natural or procured by art, and will incorporate with oil or spirit, not an aqueous menstrum. Quincy.
 RESINOUS. adj. [from resin; resineux, Fr.] Containing resin; consisting of resin.
 Resinous gums, dissolved in spirit of wine, are less fall again,
 if the spirit be copiously diluted. Boyle on Colours.
 RESINOUSNESS. n. f. [from resinous.] The quality of being resinous.
 RESIPISCENCE. n. f. [resipiscence, Fr. resipiscencia, low Lat.]
 Wisdom after the fact; repentance.
 To RESIST. v. a. [resisto, Lat. resister, Fr.]
 1. To oppose; to act against.
 All the regions
 Do seemingly revolt; and, who resist,
 Are mock'd for valiant ignorance,
 And perish constant fools. Shakefp. Coriolanus.
 Submit to God; resist the devil, and he will flee. Ja. iv.
 2. To not admit impression or force.
 Nor keen nor solid could resist that edge. Milton.
 RESISTANCE. [resistance, Fr. This word, like many others, RESISTENCE. s. is differently written, as it is supposed to have come from the Latin or the French.]
 1. The act of resisting; opposition.
 Demetrius, seeing that the land was quiet, and that no resistance was made against him, sent away all his forces. 1 Mac.
 2. The quality of not yielding to force or external impression.
 The resistance of bone to cold is greater than of flesh; for that the flesh shrinketh, but the bone resisteth, whereby the cold becometh more eager. Bacon.
 Mufick so softens and disarms the mind,
 That not an arrow does resistance find. Waller.
 The idea of solidity we receive by our touch, and it arises from the resistance which we find in body to the entrance of any other body into the place it possesses. Locke.
 But that part of the resistance, which arises from the vis inertiae, is proportional to the density of the matter, and cannot be diminished by dividing the matter into smaller parts, nor by any other means, than by decreasing the density of the medium. Newton's Opticks.
 RESISTIBILITY. n. f. [from resistible.] Quality of resisting.
 Whether the resistibility of Adam's reason did not equivalence the facility of Eve's seduction, we refer unto school-men. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
 The name body, being the complex idea of extension and resistibility, together, in the same subject, these two ideas are not exactly one and the same. Locke.
 RESISTIBLE. adj. [from resist.] That may be resisted.
 That is irresistible; this, though potent, yet is in its own nature resistible by the will of man; though it many times prevails by its efficacy. Hale's Origin of Mankind.
 RESISTLESS. adj. [from resist.] Irresistible; that cannot be opposed.
 Our own eyes do every where behold the sudden and resistless assaults of death. Raleigh's History of the World.
 All at once to force resistless way.
 Since you can love, and yet your error see,
 The same resistless power may plead for me. Dryden.
 She chang'd her state;
 Resistless in her love, as in her hate. Dryden.
 Though thine eyes resistless glances dart,
 A stronger charm is thine, a generous heart. Logie.
 RESOLVABLE.

RES

- RESOLVABLE. adj. [from resolve.]
 1. That may be analysed or separated.
 Pride is of such intimate connection with ingratitude, that the actions of ingratitude seem directly resolvable into pride, as the principal reason of them. South.
 As the serum of the blood is resolvable by a small heat, a greater heat coagulates, so as to turn it horny like parchment. Arbutnot on Aliments.
 2. Capable of solution or of being made less obscure.
 The effect is wonderful in all, and the causes best resolvable from observations made in the countries themselves, the parts through which they pass. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
 RESOLUBLE. adj. [resoluble, Fr. re and solubilis, Lat.] That may be melted or dissolved.
 Three is not precisely the number of the distinct elements, whereinto mixt bodies are resolvable by fire. Boyle.
 To RESOLVE. v. a. [resolvo, Lat. resolvere, Fr.]
 1. To inform; to free from a doubt or difficulty.
 In all things then are our confusions best resolved, and in most agreeable fort unto God and nature resolved, when they are so far persuaded, as those grounds of persuasion will bear. Hooker, b. ii. f. 7.
 Give me some breath,
 Before I positively speak in this;
 I will resolve your grace immediately. Shakefp. Rich. III.
 I cannot brook delays, resolve me now;
 And what your pleasure is, shall satisfy me. Shakefp.
Resolve me, strangers, whence and what you are? Dryd.
 2. To solve; to clear.
 Examine, sift, and resolve their alleged proofs, till you come to the very root whence they spring, and it shall clearly appear, that the most which can be inferred upon such plenty of divine testimonies, is only this, that some things, which they maintain, do seem to have been out of scripture not absurdly gathered. Hooker, b. ii. f. 7.
 I resolve the riddle of their loyalty, and give them opportunity to let the world see, they mean not what they do, but what they say. King Charles.
 He always bent himself rather judiciously to resolve, than by doubts to perplex a business. Hayward.
 The gravers, when they have attained to the knowledge of these repoles, will easily resolve those difficulties which perplex them. Dryden's Duplew.
 The man, who would resolve the work of fate,
 May limit number. Prior.
 Happines, it was presently resolved by all, must be some one uniform end, proportioned to the capacities of human nature, attainable by every man, independent on fortune. Rogers's Sermons.
 3. To settle in an opinion.
 Long since we were resolved of your truth,
 Your faithful service, and your toil in war. Shakefp.
 4. To fix in a determination.
 Good proof
 This day affords, declaring thee resolv'd
 To undergo with me one guilt. Milton.
 I run to meet th' alarms,
Resolv'd on death, resolv'd to die in arms. Dryden.
Resolv'd for sea, the slaves thy baggage pack;
 Nothing retards thy voyage, unless Thy other lord forbids voluptuousness. Dryden's Persius.
 5. To fix in constancy; to confirm.
 Quit presently the chapel, or resolve you
 For more amazement:
 I'll make the statue move. Shakefp.
 6. To melt; to dissolve.
Resolving is bringing a fluid, which is new concreted, into the state of fluidity again. Arbutnot on Aliments.
 Vegetable salts resolve the coagulated humours of a human body, and attenuate, by stimulating the solids, and dissolving the fluids. Arbutnot on Aliments.
 7. To analyse.
 Into what can we resolve this strong inclination of mankind to this error? it is altogether unimaginable, but that the reason of so universal a consent should be constant. Tillotson.
 Ye immortal souls, who once were men,
 And now resolv'd to elements agen. Dryden.
 The decretals turn upon this point, and resolve all into a monarchical power at Rome. Baker's Reflections on Learning.
 To RESOLVE. v. n.
 1. To determine; to decree within one's self.
 Confirm'd, then I resolve
 Adam shall share with me. Milton.
 Covetousness is like the sea, that receives the tribute of all rivers, though far unlike it in lending any back; therefore those, who have resolved upon the thriving sort of piety, have seldom embarked all their hopes in one bottom. D. of Pi.
 2. To melt; to be dissolved.
 Have I not hideous death within my view?
 Retaining but a quantity of life,
 Which bleeds away, ev'n as a form of wax Resolveth from its figure 'gainst the fire. Shakefp.

RES

- No man condemn me, who has never felt
 A woman's power, or try'd the force of love;
 All tempers yield and soften in those fires,
 Our honours, interests, resolving down,
 Run in the gentle current of our joys. Southern's Oroonoko.
 When the blood stagnates in any part, it first coagulates, then resolves and turns alkaline. Arbutnot on Aliments.
 3. To be settled in opinion.
 Let men resolve of that as they please: this every intelligent being must grant, that there is something that is himself, that he would have happy. Locke.
 RESOLVE. n. f. [from the verb.] Resolution; fixed determination.
 I'm glad, you thus continue your resolve,
 To suck the sweets of sweet philosophy. Shakefp.
 When he fees
 Himself by dogs, and dogs by men pursu'd,
 He straight revokes his bold resolve, and more Repents his courage, than his fear before. Denham.
 Caesar's approach has summon'd us together,
 And Rome attends her fate from our resolves. Addis. Cato.
 RESOLVEDLY. adv. [from resolved.] With firmness and constancy.
 A man may be resolvedly patient unto death; so that it is not the mediocrity of resolution, which makes the virtue;
 nor the extremity, which makes the vice. Grew's Cofinal.
 RESOLVEDNESS. n. f. [from resolved.] Resolution; constancy; firmness.
 This resolvedness, this high fortitude in sin, can with no reason be imagined a preparative to its remission. D. of Piety.
 RESOLVENT. n. f. [resolvens, Latin.] That which has the power of causing solution.
 In the beginning of inflammation, they require repellents; and in the increase, somewhat of resolvents ought to be mixed. Wigman's Surgery.
 Lactescent plants, as lettuce and endive, contain a most wholesome juice, resolvent of the bile, anodyne and cooling.
Arbutnot on Aliments.
 RESOLVER. n. f. [from resolve.]
 1. One that forms a firm resolution.
 Thy resolutions were not before sincere; consequently God that law that, cannot be thought to have justified that unfincere resolver, that dead faith. Hammond's Pract. Catech.
 2. One that dissolves; one that separates parts.
 It may be doubted, whether or no the fire be the genuine and universal resolver of mixed bodies. Boyle.
 RESOLUTE. adj. [resolut, Fr.] Determined; fixed; constant; steady; firm.
 Be bloody, bold, and resolute; laugh to scorn
 The pow'r of man; for none of woman born Shall harm Macbeth. Shakefp. Macbeth.
 Edward is at hand
 Ready to fight; therefore be resolute. Shakefp. Hen. VI.
 RESOLUTELY. adv. [from resolute.] Determinately; firmly;
 constantly; steadily.
 We resolutely must,
 To the few virtues that we have, be just. Roscommon.
 A man, who lives a virtuous life, despises the pleasures of sin, and notwithstanding all the allurements of sense persists resolutely in his course. Tillotson's Sermons.
 Some of those facts he examines, some he resolutely denies;
 others he endeavours to extenuate, and the rest he distorts with unnatural turns. Swift's Miscellanies.
 RESOLUTENESS. n. f. [from resolute.] Determinateness; state of being fixed in resolution.
 All that my resoluteness to make use of my ears, not tongue, could do, was to make them acquiesce. Boyle.
 RESOLUTION. n. f. [resolutio, Lat. resolution, Fr.]
 1. Act of clearing difficulties.
 In matters of antiquity, if their originals escape due relation, they fall into great obscurities, and such as future ages seldom reduce into a resolution. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
 The unravelling and resolution of the difficulties, that are met with in the execution of the design, are the end of an action. Dryden's Oedipus.
 2. Analysis; act of separating any thing into constituent parts.
 To the present impulses of sense, memory and instinct, all the sagacities of brutes may be reduced; though witty men, by analytical resolution, have chymically extracted an artificial logic out of all their actions. Hale's Orig. of Mankind.
 3. Dissolution.
 In the hot springs of extreme cold countries, the first heats are unsufferable, which proceed out of the resolution of humidity congealed. Digby on Badies.
 4. [From resolute.] Fixed determination; settled thought.
 I th' progress of this business,
 Ere a determinate resolution,
 The bishop did require a respite. Shakefp. Henry VIII.
 O Lord, resolutions of future reforming do not always fastify thy justice, nor prevent thy vengeance for former miscarriages. King Charles.
 We spend our days in deliberating, and we end them without coming to any resolution. L'Estrange.
 How

RES

How much this is in every man's power, by making resolutions to himself, is easy to try.

The mode of the will, which answers to dubitation, may be called suspension; that which answers to invention, resolution; and that which, in the phantastick will, is obstinacy, is constancy in the intellectual.

5. Constancy; firmness; steadiness in good or bad.

The rest of the Helots, which were otherwise scattered, bent thitherward, with a new life of resolution; as if their captain had been a root, out of which their courage had sprung.

I would unstate myself to be in a due resolution.
They, who governed the parliament, had the resolution to act those monstrous things.

What reinforcement we may gain from hope,
If not what resolution from despair.

6. Determination of a cause in courts of justice.

Nor have we all the acts of parliament or of judicial resolutions, which might occasion such alterations.

RESOLUTIVE. adj. [resolutus, Lat. resolutif, Fr.] Having the power to dissolve.

RESONANCE. n. f. [resono, Lat.] Sound; resound.

An ancient musician informed me, that there were some famous lutes that attained not their full seasoning and best resonance, till they were about fourscore years old.

RESONANT. adj. [resonant, Fr. resonans, Lat.] Resounding. His volant touch

Fled and pursu'd transverse the resonant fugue.

TO RESORT. v. n. [resortir, Fr.]

1. To have recourse.

The king thought it time to resort to other counsels, and to provide force to chastise them, who had so much despised all his gentler remedies.

2. To go publicly.

Thither shall all the valiant youth resort,
And from his memory inflame their breasts
To matchless valour.

3. To repair to.

Hither the heroes and the nymphs resort.

4. To go to.

Hafted, resorting to the sumptuous high.

To Argos' realms the victor god resorts,
And enters cold Crotus' humble courts.

5. To fall back. In law.

The inheritance of the son never resorted to the mother or to any of her ancestors, but both were totally excluded from the succession.

RESORT. n. f. [resort, Fr.]

1. Frequency; assembly; meeting.

Unknown, unquestion'd in that thick resort.

2. Concourse; confluence.

The like places of resort are frequented by men out of place.

3. Act of visiting.

Join with me to forbid him her resort.

4. [Resort, Fr.] Movement; active power; spring.

Some know the resorts and falls of business, that cannot sink into the main of it.

In fortune's empire blindly thus we go,
We wander after pathless destiny,
Whose dark resorts since prudence cannot know,
In vain it would provide for what shall be.

TO RESOUND. v. a. [resono, Lat. resonner, Fr.]

1. To echo; to sound back; to celebrate by sound.

The sweet singer of Israel with his psalter loudly resounded the innumerable benefits of the Almighty Creator.

The found of hymns, wherewith thy throne
Incompass'd shall resound thee ever blest.

2. To sound; to tell so as to be heard far.

The man, for wisdom's various arts renown'd,
Long exercis'd in woes, oh muse! resound.

3. To return sounds; to sound with any noise.

With other echo late I taught your shades,
To answer and resound far other song.

TO RESOUND. v. n. To be echoed back.

What resounds in fable or romance of Uther's sons.

What is common fame, which sounds from all quarters of the world, and resounds back to them again, but generally a loud, rattling, impudent lye?

RESOURCE. n. f. [ressource, Fr. ressource, Lat. resurgere, Fr. to spring up.]

Some new or unexpected means that offer; resort; expedient.

Pallas view'd
His foes pursuing, and his friends pursu'd;
Us'd threatenings, mix'd with prayers, his last resource;
With these to move their minds, with those to fire their force.

TO RESOUND. v. a. [resound, Fr.] To sound anew.

Over wet at sowing time breedeth much dearth, inasmuch as they are forced to resound summer corn.

TO RESOUND. v. n. [resound, Fr.] To answer.

The great cannon to the clouds shall tell,
And the king's rowle the heav'n shall bruit again,
Resounding earthly thunder.

TO RESOUND. v. n. [resound, Fr.] To answer.

The great cannon to the clouds shall tell,
And the king's rowle the heav'n shall bruit again,
Resounding earthly thunder.

TO RESOUND. v. n. [resound, Fr.] To answer.

The great cannon to the clouds shall tell,
And the king's rowle the heav'n shall bruit again,
Resounding earthly thunder.

TO RESOUND. v. n. [resound, Fr.] To answer.

The great cannon to the clouds shall tell,
And the king's rowle the heav'n shall bruit again,
Resounding earthly thunder.

TO RESOUND. v. n. [resound, Fr.] To answer.

The great cannon to the clouds shall tell,
And the king's rowle the heav'n shall bruit again,
Resounding earthly thunder.

TO RESOUND. v. n. [resound, Fr.] To answer.

The great cannon to the clouds shall tell,
And the king's rowle the heav'n shall bruit again,
Resounding earthly thunder.

TO RESOUND. v. n. [resound, Fr.] To answer.

The great cannon to the clouds shall tell,
And the king's rowle the heav'n shall bruit again,
Resounding earthly thunder.

TO RESOUND. v. n. [resound, Fr.] To answer.

The great cannon to the clouds shall tell,
And the king's rowle the heav'n shall bruit again,
Resounding earthly thunder.

TO RESOUND. v. n. [resound, Fr.] To answer.

The great cannon to the clouds shall tell,
And the king's rowle the heav'n shall bruit again,
Resounding earthly thunder.

TO RESOUND. v. n. [resound, Fr.] To answer.

The great cannon to the clouds shall tell,
And the king's rowle the heav'n shall bruit again,
Resounding earthly thunder.

TO RESOUND. v. n. [resound, Fr.] To answer.

The great cannon to the clouds shall tell,
And the king's rowle the heav'n shall bruit again,
Resounding earthly thunder.

TO RESOUND. v. n. [resound, Fr.] To answer.

The great cannon to the clouds shall tell,
And the king's rowle the heav'n shall bruit again,
Resounding earthly thunder.

TO RESOUND. v. n. [resound, Fr.] To answer.

The great cannon to the clouds shall tell,
And the king's rowle the heav'n shall bruit again,
Resounding earthly thunder.

TO RESOUND. v. n. [resound, Fr.] To answer.

The great cannon to the clouds shall tell,
And the king's rowle the heav'n shall bruit again,
Resounding earthly thunder.

TO RESOUND. v. n. [resound, Fr.] To answer.

The great cannon to the clouds shall tell,
And the king's rowle the heav'n shall bruit again,
Resounding earthly thunder.

RES

TO RESPECT. v. a. [respectus, Lat.]

1. To regard; to have regard to.

Claudio, I quake,
Left thou should'st seven winters more respect
Than a perpetual honour.

2. [Respect, Fr.] To consider with a lower degree of reverence.

There is nothing more terrible to a guilty heart, than the eye of a respected friend.

Whoever tastes, let him with grateful heart
Respect that ancient loyal house.

3. To have relation to.

I always loved and respected Sir William.

4. To look toward.

The needle doth vary, as it approacheth the pole; whereas, were there such direction from the rocks, upon a nearer approachment, it would more directly respect them.

Palladius adviseth, the front of his house should respect the South, that in the first angle it receive the rising rays of the winter sun, and decline a little from the winter setting thereof.

RESPECT. n. f. [respectus, Fr. respectus, Lat.]

1. Regard; attention.

You have too much respect upon the world;

They lose it, that do buy it with much care.

2. Reverence; honour.

You know me dutiful, therefore
Let me not shame respect; but give me leave
To take that course by your consent and voice.

3. Partial regard.

It is not good to have respect of persons in judgment.

4. Goodwill.

Pembroke has got
A thousand pounds a year, for pure respect;
No other obligation?

5. Partial regard.

It is not good to have respect of persons in judgment.

6. Reverend character.

Many of the best respects in Rome,
Groaning under this age's yoke,
Have with'd, that noble Brutus had his eyes.

7. Manner of treating others.

You must use them with fit respects, according to the bonds of nature; but you are of kin to their persons, not errors.

8. Consideration; motive.

Whatever secret respects were likely to move them, for contenting of their minds, Calvin returned.

9. Relation; regard.

In respect of the suitors which attend you, do them what right in justice, and with as much speed as you may.

RES

RESPECTIVE. adj. [respectus, Lat.]

1. Particular; relating to particular persons or things.

Moses mentions the immediate causes, and St. Peter the more remote and fundamental causes, that constitution of the heavens, and that constitution of the earth, in reference to their respective waters, which made that world obnoxious to a deluge.

2. [Respectus, Fr.] Relative; not absolute.

The medium intended is not an absolute, but a respective medium: the proportion recommended to all is the same; but the things to be desired in this proportion will vary.

3. Worthy of reverence. Not in use.

What should it be, that he respects in her,
But I can make respective in myself.

4. Accurate; nice; careful; cautious. Obsolete.

Respective and wary men had rather seek quietly their own, and with that the world may go well, so it be not long of them, than with pain and hazard make themselves advisers for the common good.

RESPECTIVELY. adv. [respectivus, Lat.]

1. Particularly; as each belongs to each.

The interruption of trade between the English and Flemish began to pinch the merchants of both nations, which moved them by all means to dispose their sovereigns respectively to open the intercourse again.

2. Relatively; not absolutely.

If there had been no other choice, but that Adam had been left to the universal, Moses would not then have said, eastward in Eden, seeing the world hath not East nor West, but respectively.

3. Partially; with respect to private views. Obsolete.

Among the ministers themselves, one being so far in estimation above the rest, the voices of the rest were likely to be given for the most part respectively with a kind of secret dependency.

4. With great reverence. Not in use.

Honest Flaminius, you are very respectively welcome.

RESPIRATION. n. f. [respiro, Lat. respirare, Fr.]

1. The act of breathing.

Apollonius of Tyana affirmed, that the ebbing and flowing of the sea was the respiration of the world, drawing in water as breath, and putting it forth again.

2. Relief from toil.

Till the day
Appear of respiration to the just,
And vengeance to the wicked.

TO RESPIRE. v. n. [respiro, Lat. respirare, Fr.]

1. To breathe.

The ladies gasp'd, and scarcely could respire;
The breath they drew, no longer air, but fire,

2. To catch breath.

Till breathless both themselves aside retire,
Where foaming wrath, their cruel tuffs they whet,
And trample th' earth the whiles they may respire.

RES

2. Capable of discharging an obligation:
The necessity of a proportion of money to trade depends on money as a pledge, which writing cannot supply the place of; since the bill, I receive from one man, will not be accepted as security by another, he not knowing that the bill is legal, or that the man bound is honest or responsible. Locke.
- RESPONSIBLENESS. n. f. [from responsibile.] State of being obliged or qualified to answer.
- RESPONSION. n. f. [responsio, Lat.] The act of answering.
- RESPONSIVE. adj. [responsivus, Fr. from responsus, Lat.]
1. Answering; making answer.
A certificate is a responsive letter, or letter by way of answer. Ayliffe's Parergon.
  2. Correspondent; suited to something else.
Sing of love and gay desire,
Responsive to the warbling lyre. Fenton.
Be there Demodocus the bard of fame,
Taught by the gods to please, when high he sings
The vocal lay responsive to the strings. Pope's Odyssey.
- RESPONSORY. adj. [responsorius, Lat.] Containing answer.
- REST. n. f. [Hebr. ruṣṣ; Sax. ruſte, Dutch.]
1. Sleep; repose.
All things retir'd to rest, mind us of like repose. Milton.
My soft limbs are wearied into rest. Pope.
  2. The final sleep; the quietness of death.
Oft with holy hymns he charm'd their ears;
For David left him, when he went to rest,
His lyre. Dryden's Parson.
  3. Stillness; cessation of motion.
Pursu'd askest rest; for the subtle motion, which putrefaction requireth, is disturbed by any agitation. Bacon.
What cause mov'd the Creator, in his holy rest,
So late to build. Milton.
All things past are equally and perfectly at rest; and to this way of consideration of them are all one, whether they were before the world, or but yesterday. Locke.
  4. Quiet; peace; cessation from disturbance.
Learn of me, for I am meek and lowly in heart; and ye shall find rest unto your souls. Mat. xi. 29.
He giveth you rest from all your enemies. Deut. xii. 10.
Though the righteous be prevented with death; yet shall he be in rest. Wisd. iv. 7.
'Scap'd from such storms of pow'r, holding it best
To be below herself to be at rest. Daniel's Civil War.
The root cut off, from whence these tumults rose,
He should have rest, the commonwealth repose. Daniel.
Thus fenc'd, but not at rest or ease of mind. Milton.
With what a load of vengeance am I prest,
Yet never, never, can I hope for rest;
For when my heavy burden I remove,
The weight falls down, and crushes her I love. Dryden.
Like the sun, it had light and agility; it knew no rest but in motion, no quiet but in activity. South's Sermons.
Where can a frail man hide him? in what arms
Shall a short life enjoy a little rest. Fanshawe.
Thither, where sinners may have rest, I go. Pope.
The grave, where ev'n the great find rest. Pope.
The midnight murderer
Invades the sacred hour of silent rest. Anonym.
  5. Cessation from bodily labour.
There the weary be at rest. Job iii. 17.
  6. Support; that on which any thing leans or rests.
Forth prick'd Clorinda from the throng,
And gainst Tancredie set her spear in rest. Fairfax.
A man may think, that a musket may be shot off as well upon the arm, as upon a rest; but when all is done, good counsel setteth business straight. Bacon.
Their vizors clos'd, their lances in the rest,
Or at the helmet pointed, or the crest;
They sped the race. Dryden's Knight's Tale.
Take the handle in your right hand, and clasping the blade of it in your left, lean it steady upon the rest, holding the edge a little afloat over the work, so as a corner of the thin side of the chisel may bear upon the rest, and the flat side of the chisel may make a small angle with the rest. Moxon.
  7. Place of repose.
Sustain'd by him with comforts, till we end
In dust, our final rest and native home. Milton.
  8. Final hope.
He sets up his rest, to do more exploits with his mace, than a maurice pike. Shakep. Com. of Err.
Sea fights have been final to the war, but this is, when princes set up their rest upon the battle. Bacon.
This answer would render their counsels of less reverence to the people, if, upon those reasons, they should recede from what they had, with that confidence and disdain of the house of peers, demanded of the king; they therefore resolv'd to set up their rest upon that stake, and to go through with it, or perish in the attempt. Clarendon.

- fort of having done our duty; and for the rest, it offers us the best security that heaven can give. Locke.
- The pow'r in glory shone,
By her bent bow and her keen arrows known. Dryden's Knight's Tale.
- The rest a hunters. Dryden's Knight's Tale.
- REST. adj. [restes, Fr. quod restat, Lat.] Others; those not included in any proposition.
- By description of their qualities, many things may be learned concerning the rest of the inhabitants. Abbot.
They had no other consideration of the publick, than that no disturbance might interrupt their quiet in their own days; and that the rest, who had larger hearts and more publick spirits, would extend their labour, activity, and advice only to secure the empire at home by all peaceable arts. Clarendon.
Plato, and the rest of the philosophers, acknowledged the unity, power, wisdom, goodness, and providence of the supreme God. Stillington.
Arm'd like the rest, the Trojan prince appears,
And by his pious labour urges theirs. Dryden.
Upon so equal terms did they all stand, that no one had a fairer pretence of right than the rest. Woodward.
- To REST. v. n. [from the noun.]
1. To sleep; to be asleep; to slumber.
Fancy then retires
Into her private cell, when nature rests. Milton.
  2. To sleep the final sleep; to die.
Καμάραι Σωκράτη πρὸς τὸν ἀναγνώστη.
Glad I'd lay me down,
As in my mother's lap; there I should rest
And sleep secure. Milton.
  3. To be at quiet; to be at peace; to be without disturbance.
Thither let us tend
From off the tossing of these fiery waves,
There rest, if any rest can harbour there. Milton.
  4. To be without motion; to be still.
Over the tent a cloud shall rest by day. Milton.
  5. To be fixed in any rate or opinion.
He will not rest content, though thou givest many gifts. Pope.
Every creature has a share in the common blessings of providence; and every creature should rest well satisfied with its proportion in them. L'Estrange.
After such a lord I rest secure,
Thou wilt no foreign reins or Trojan load endure. Dryden.
There yet survives the lawful heir
Of Sancho's blood, whom, when I shall produce,
I rest assur'd to see you pale with fear. Dryden.
  6. To cease from labour.
Six days thou shalt do thy work, and on the seventh day thou shalt rest. Exodus xxiii. 12.
The ark went before, to search out a resting place for them. Numb. x. 33.
From work resting he blest'd the seventh day. Milton.
When you enter into the regions of death, you rest from all your labours and your fears. Taylor's Rule of Living Holy.
  7. To be satisfied; to acquiesce.
To urge the foe to battle,
Prompted by blind revenge and wild despair,
Were to refuse th' awards of providence,
And not to rest in heaven's determination. Milford.
  8. To lean; to be supported.
As the vex'd world, to find repose, at last Itself into Augustus' arms did cast;
So England now doth, with like toil oppress'd,
Her weary head upon your bosom rest. Waller.
On him I rested,
And, not without confiding, fix'd my fate. Dryden.
Sometimes it rests upon testimony, when testimony of right has nothing to do; because it is easier to believe, than to be scientifically instructed. Locke.
The philosophical use of words conveys the precise notions of things, which the mind may rest upon, and be satisfied with, in its search after knowledge. Locke.
  9. [Reste, Lat. reſter, Fr.] To be left; to remain.
Fall'n he is; and now
What rests, but that the mortal sentence pass
On his transgression. Milton's Par. Lost, l. x.
On his transgression.
There resteth the comparative; that is, its being granted, that it is either lawful or binding, yet whether other things be not preferred before it, as extirpation of heresies. Bacon.
- To REST. v. a.
1. To lay to rest.
Your piety has paid
All needful rites, to rest my wand'ring shade. Dryden.
  2. To place as on a support.
- RESTAGNANT. adj. [restagnans, Lat.] Remaining without flow or motion.
- Upon the tops of high mountains, the air, which bears against the restagnant quicksilver, is less pressed by the less ponderous incumbent air. Boyle.
- To RE-

RES

- To RESTAGNATE. v. n. [re and stagnare.] To stand without flow.
- The blood returns thick, and is apt to restagnate. Wifeman.
- RESTAGNATION. n. f. [from restagnare.] The state of standing without flow, course, or motion.
- RESTAURATION. n. f. [restauratio, Lat.] The act of recovering to the former state.
- Adam is in us an original cause of our nature, and of that corruption of nature which causeth death; Christ as the cause original of restoration to life. Hooker, b. v. f. 56.
O my dear father! restoration hang Thy medicine on my lips; and let this kiss
Repair those violent harms, that my two sisters
Have in thy reverence made. Shakep. King Lear.
Spermatical parts will not admit a regeneration, much less will they receive an integral restoration. Brown.
- To RESTORE. v. a. [re and stem.] To force back against the current.
- How they restem
Their backward course, bearing with frank appearance Toward Cyprus. Shakep. Othello.
- RESTFUL. adj. [rest and ful.] Quiet; being at rest.
Is not my arm of length,
That reacheth from the restful English court,
As far as Calais to my uncle's head. Shakep. Rich. III.
- RESTHARROW. n. f. A plant.
Restharrow hath a papilionaceous flower, which is succeeded by a swelling pod, and which is sometimes long, and at other times short; is bivalve, and filled with kidney-shaped seeds. Miller.
- RESTIFF. adj. [restif, Fr. restivo, Ital.]
1. Unwilling to stir; resolute against going forward; obstinate; stubborn. It is originally used of an horse, that, though not wearied, will not be driven forward.
All, who before him did ascend the throne,
Labour'd to draw three restive nations on. Recommon.
This restiff stubbornness is never to be excused under any pretence whatsoever. L'Estrange.
Some, with studious care,
Their restiff steeds in sandy plains prepare. Dryden.
The archangel, when discord was restive, and would not be drawn from her beloved monastery with fair words, drags her out with many stripes. Dryden's Dedication to Twynall.
So James the drowsy genius wakes
Of Britain, long entranc'd in charms,
Restiff, and slumbering on its arms. Dryden.
The pamper'd colt will discipline disdain,
Impatient of the lash, and restiff to the rein. Dryden.
  2. Being at rest; being less in motion. Not used.
- RESTLESS. n. f. [from restless.] Obsolete reluctance.
- Over virtues bring forth praise; but secret virtues bring forth fortune: certain deliveries of a man's self, which the Spanish name desembolura, partly expresseth, where there be not stands nor restlessness in a man's nature; but the wheels of his mind keep way with the wheels of his fortune. Bacon.
That it gave occasion to some men's further restlessness, is imputable to their own depraved tempers. King Charles.
- RESTITUTION. n. f. [restitutio, Lat.] The act of extinguishing.
- RESTITUTION. n. f. [restitutio, Lat.]
1. The act of restoring what is lost or taken away.
To subdue an usurper, should be no unjust enterprise or wrongful war, but a restitution of ancient rights unto the crown of England, from whence they were most unjustly expelled and long kept out. Spenser on Ireland.
He would pawn his fortunes
To hopeless restitution, so he might Be call'd your vanquisher. Shakep. Coriolanus.
Now is Cupid a child of conscience, he makes restitution. Shakep. Merry Wives of Windsor.
He restitution to the value makes;
Nor joy in his extorted treasure takes.
Whoever is an effective real cause of doing a neighbour wrong, by what instrument soever he does it, is bound to make restitution. Taylor's Rule of Living Holy.
In case our offence against God hath been complicated with injury to men, it is but reasonable we should make restitution. Tillotson's Sermons.
A great man, who has never been known willingly to pay a just debt, ought not all of a sudden to be introduced, making restitution of thousands he has cheated: let it suffice to pay twenty pounds to a friend, who has left his note. Arbutnot.
  2. The act of recovering its former state or posture.
In the woody parts of plants, which are their bones, the principles are so compounded, as to make them flexible without joints, and also elastic; that so their roots may yield to softies, and their trunks to the winds, with a power of restitution. Grew's Coptul.
- RESTLESS. adj. [from rest.]
Being without sleep.

RES

- Restless* he pass'd the remnants of the night,
Till the fresh air proclaim'd the morning nigh:
And burning ships, the martyrs of the fight,
With paler fires beheld the eastern sky. Dryden.
2. Unquiet; without peace.
Ease to the body some, none to the mind
From restless thoughts, that like a deadly swarm
Of hornets arm'd, no sooner found alone,
But rush upon me thronging, and present
Times past, what once I was, and what I'm now. Milton.
Could we not wake from that lethargick dream,
But to be restless in a worse extreme. Denham.
We find our souls disordered and restless, tossed and disquieted by passions, ever seeking happiness in the enjoyments of this world, and ever missing what they seek. Atterbury.
What tongue can speak the restless monarch's woes,
When God and Nathan were declar'd his foes. Prior.
3. Unconstant; unsettled.
He was stout of courage, strong of hand,
Bold was his heart, and restless was his spirit. Fairfax.
He's proud, fantastick, apt to change,
Restless at home, and ever prone to range. Dryden.
4. Not still; in continual motion.
How could nature on their orbs impose
Such restless revolution, day by day
Repeated. Milton.
- RESTLESSLY. adv. [from restless.] Without rest; unquietly.
When the mind casts and turns itself restlessly from one thing to another, strains this power of the soul to apprehend, that to judge, another to divide, a fourth to remember: thus tracing out the nice and scarce observable difference of some things, and the real agreement of others; at length it brings all the ends of a long hypothesis together. South.
- RESTLESSNESS. n. f. [from restless.]
1. Want of sleep.
Restlessness and intermission from sleep, grieved persons are molested with, whereby the blood is dried. Harvey.
  2. Want of rest; unquietness.
Let him keep the rest,
But keep them with repining restlessness!
Let him be rich and weary, that at least,
If goodness lead him not, yet weariness
May toss him to my breast. Herbert.
  3. Motion; agitation.
The trembling restlessness of the needle, in any but the north point of the compass, manifests its inclination to the pole; which its wavering and its rest bear equal witness to. Boyle.
- RESTORABLE. adj. [from restore.] What may be restored.
By cutting turf without any regularity, great quantities of restorable land are made utterly desolate. Swift.
- RESTORATION. n. f. [from restore; restauratio, Fr.] The act of replacing in a former state. This is properly restoration.
Hail, royal Albion, hail to thee,
Thy longing people's expectation!
Sent from the gods to let us free
From bondage and from usurpation:
Behold the different climes agree,
Rejoicing in thy restoration. Dryden's Albion.
The Athenians, now deprived of the only person that was able to recover their losses, repent of their rashness, and endeavour in vain for his restoration. Swift.
2. Recovery.
The change is great in this restoration of the man, from a state of spiritual darkness, to a capacity of perceiving divine truth. Rogers.
- RESTORATIVE. adj. [from restore.] That which has the power to recruit life.
Their taste no knowledge works at least of evil;
But life preserves, destroys life's enemy,
Hunger, with sweet restorative delight. Milton.
- RESTORATIVE. n. f. [from restore.] A medicine that has the power of recruiting life.
I will kiss thy lips;
Haply some poison yet doth hang on them,
To make me die with a restorative. Shakep. Rom. and Jul.
God saw it necessary by such mortifications to quench the boundless rage of an insatiable intemperance, to make the weakness of the flesh, the phylick and restorative of the spirit. South's Sermons.
Asses milk is an excellent restorative in consumptions. Mart.
He prescribes an English gallon of asses milk, especially as a restorative. Arbutnot.
- To RESTORE. v. a. [restaurare, Fr. restaurare, Lat.]
1. To give back what has been lost or taken away.
Restore the man his wife. Gen. xx. 7.
He shall restore in the principal, and add the fifth part more. Lev. vi. 5.
She lands him on his native shores,
And to his father's longing arms restores. Dryden.
  2. To bring back.
The father banish'd virtue shall restore,
And crimes shall threat the guilty world no more. Dryden.
Thus

RES

- Thus pencils can, by one slight touch, reflore
Smiles to that changed face, that wept before. Dryden.
3. To retrieve; to bring back from degeneration, declension, or ruin to its former state.
These artificial experiments are but so many essays, whereby men attempt to reflore themselves from the first general curse inflicted upon their labours. Wilkins's Mathem. Magick.
In his odyssies, Homer explains, that the hardest difficulties may be overcome by labour, and our fortune restored after the severest afflictions. Prior.
4. To recover passages in books from corruption.
RESTORER. n. f. [from restore.] One that restores.
Next to the son,
Destin'd restorer of mankind, by whom
New heav'n and earth shall to the ages rise. Milton.
I foretell you, as the restorer of poetry. Dryden.
Here are ten thousand persons reduced to the necessity of a low diet and moderate exercise, who are the only great restorers of our breed, without which, the nation would in an age become one great hospital. Swift.
- TO RESTRAIN. v. a. [refraindre, Fr. refringere, Lat.]
1. To withhold; to keep in.
If the restrain'd the riots of your followers,
'Tis to such wholesome end as clears her. Shakespeare.
The gods will plague thee,
That thou restrain'st from me the duty, which
To a mother's part belongs. Shakespeare. Coriolanus.
2. To repress; to keep in awe.
The law of nature would be in vain, if there were no body that, in the state of nature, had a power to execute that law, and thereby preserve the innocent and restrain offenders. Locke.
That all men may be restrained from doing hurt to one another, the execution of the law of nature is in that state put into every man's hand, whereby every one has a right to punish the transgressors to such a degree as may hinder its violation. Locke.
3. To suppress; to hinder; to repress.
A heavy summons lies like lead upon me,
Merciful pow'rs!
Refrain in me the cur'd thoughts, that nature Gives way to in repose. Shakespeare. Macbeth.
Compassion gave him up to tears
A space, till firmer thoughts restrain'd excess. Milton.
4. To abridge.
Me of my lawful pleasure she restrain'd,
And pray'd me oft forbearance. Shakespeare. Cymbeline.
Though they two were committed, at least restrained of their liberty, yet this discovered too much of the humour of the court. Clarendon, b. ii.
5. To hold in.
His horse, with a half checked bit, and a headfall of sheep's leather, which being restrained to keep him from stumbling, hath been often burst, and now repaired with knots. Shakespeare. As You Like It.
6. To limit; to confine.
We restrain it to those only duties, which all men, by force of natural wit, understand to be such duties as concern all men. Hobbes, b. i. c. 8.
Upon what ground can a man promise himself a future repentance, who cannot promise himself a futurity? whose life depends upon his breath, and is so restrained to the present, that it cannot secure to itself the reversion of the very next minute. South's Sermons.
Not only a metaphysical or natural, but a moral universality also is to be restrained by a part of the predicate; as all the Italians are politicians; that is, those among the Italians, who are politicians, are subtle politicians; i. e. they are generally so. Watts's Logic.
- RESTRAINABLE. adj. [from restrain.] Capable to be restrained.
Therein we must not deny a liberty; nor is the hand of the painter more restrainable, than the pen of the poet. Brown.
- RESTRAIN'DLY. adv. [from restrained.] With restraint; without latitude.
That Christ's dying for all is the express doctrine of the scripture, is manifested by the world, which is a word of the widest extent, and although it be sometimes used more restrainedly, yet never doth signify a far smaller proportionable part of the world. Hammond's Fundamentals.
- RESTRAINER. n. f. [from restrain.] One that restrains; one that withholds.
If nothing can relieve us, we must with patience submit unto that restraint, and expect the will of the restrainer. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
- RESTRAINT. n. f. [from restrain; refreint, Fr.]
1. Abridgement of liberty.
She will well excuse,
Why at this time the doors are barr'd against you;
Depart in patience,
And about evening come yourself alone,
To know the reason of this strange restraint. Shakespeare.

RES

- I request
Th' enfranchisement of Arthur, whose restraint
Doth move the murr'ring lips of discontent. Shakespeare.
It is to no purpose to lay restraints or give privileges to men, in such general terms, as the particular persons concerned cannot be known by. Locke.
I think it a manifest disadvantage, and a great restraint upon us. Edison on the Glass.
2. Prohibition.
What mov'd our parents to transgress his will
For one restraint, lords of the world besides? Milton.
3. Limitation; restriction.
If all were granted, yet it must be maintained within any bold restraints, far otherwise than it is received. Brown.
4. Repression; hindrance of will; act of withholding.
There is no restraint to the Lord to save, by many or by few. 1 Sam. xiv. 6.
- Thus it shall befall
Him who, to worth in women overtrusting,
Lest her will rule; restraint the will not brook. Milton.
Is there any thing, which reflects a greater lustre upon a man's person, than a severe temperance and a restraint of himself from vicious pleasures? South.
- TO RESTRICT. v. a. [refrictus, Lat.] To limit; to confine. A word scarce English.
In the enumeration of constitutions in this chapter, there is not one that can be limited and restricted by such a distinction, nor can perhaps the same person, in different circumstances, be properly confined to one or the other. Arbutnot.
- RESTRICTED. n. f. [refrictio, Fr.] Confinement; limitation.
This is to have the same restriction with all other recreations, that it be made a diversification not a trade. Go. of Ton.
Iron manufacture, of all others, ought the least to be encouraged in Ireland; or, if it be, it requires the most restriction to certain places. Temple's Miscellany.
All duties are matter of conscience; with this restriction, that a superior obligation suspends the force of an inferior. L'Estrange.
- Each other gift, which God on man bestows,
Its proper bounds and due restriction knows;
To one fix'd purpose dedicates its power. Prior.
Celsus's rule, with the proper restrictions, is good for people in health. Arbutnot.
- RESTRICTIVE. adj. [from restrict.]
1. Expressing limitation.
They, who would make the restrictive particle belong to the latter clause, and not to the first, do not attend to the reason. Stillingsfleet's Def. of Df. on Roman Idols.
2. [Restrictif, Fr.] Styptic; astringent.
I applied a plaster over it, made up with my common restrictive powder. Wise's Surgery.
- RESTRICTIVELY. adv. [from restrictive.] With limitation.
All speech, tending to the glory of God or the good of man, is aright directed; which is not to be understood so restrictively, as if nothing but divinity, or the necessary concerns of human life, may lawfully be brought into discourse. Government of the Tongue.
- TO RESTRICT. v. a. [refringere, Lat.] To limit; to confine.
- RESTRICTED. n. f. [refringens, Lat. refringent, Fr.] That which hath the power of restraining.
The two latter indicate phlebotomy for revulsion, refringents to stench, and incrustatives to thicken the blood. Harris.
- RESTY. adj. [refrictif, Fr.] Obstinate in standing still. See RESTIFF.
- Come, our stomachs
Will make what's homely favour, weariness
Can snore upon the flint, when resty sloth Finds the down pillow hard. Shakespeare. Cymbeline.
Men of discretion, whom people in power may with little ceremony load as heavy as they please, find them neither resty nor vicious. Swift.
- TO RESUBLIME. v. a. [re and sublime.] To sublime another time.
- When mercury sublimate is resublimed with fresh mercury, it becomes mercurius dulcis, which is a white tasteless earth scarce dissolvable in water, and mercurius dulcis resublimed with spirit of salt returns into mercury sublimate. Newton.
- TO RESULT. v. n. [resultare, Fr. resulto, Lat.]
1. To fly back.
With many a weary step, and many a groan,
Up the high hill he heaves a huge round stone;
The huge round stone, resulting with a bound,
Thunders impetuous down, and smoaks along the ground. Pope's Odyssey.
2. [Resultare, Fr.] To rise as a consequence; to be produced as the effect of causes jointly concurring.
Rue prospers much, if set by a fig tree; which is caused, not by reason of friendship, but by extraction of a contrary juice; the one drawing juice fit to result sweet, the other bitter. Bacon's Natural History.

RES

- Such huge extremes, when nature doth unite, Wonder from thence results, from thence delight. Denb.
Upon the dissolution of the first earth, this very face of things would immediately result. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
Pleasure and peace do naturally result from a holy and good life. Tillotson's Sermons.
The horror of an object may overbear the pleasure resulting from its greatness. Addison.
Their effects are often very disproportionable to the principles and parts that result from the analysis. Baker.
3. To arise as a conclusion from premises.
RESUL'T. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. Resilience; act of flying back.
Sound is produced between the string and the air, by the return or the result of the string, which was strained by the touch to his former place. Bacon's Natural History.
2. Consequence; effect produced by the concurrence of co-operating causes.
Did my judgment tell me, that the propositions sent to me were the results of the major part of their votes, I should then not suspect my own judgement for not speedily concurring with them. King Charles.
As in perfumes, compos'd with art and cost,
'Tis hard to say what scent is uppermost,
Nor this part musk or civet can we call,
Or amber, but a rich result of all;
So she was all a sweet, whose ev'ry part,
In due proportion mix'd, proclaim'd the maker's art. Dry.
Buying of land is the result of a full and fatiated gain: men in trade seldom lay out money upon land, till their profit has brought in more than trade can employ. Locke.
3. Inference from premises.
These things are a result or judgment upon fact. South.
4. Resolve; decision. Improper.
Rude, passionate, and mistaken results have, at certain times, fallen from great assemblies. Swift.
- RESUL'TANCE. n. f. [resultance, Fr.] The act of resulting.
RESUL'TABLE. adj. [from result.] What may be taken back.
This was but an indulgence, and therefore resultable by the victor, unless there intervened any capitulation to the contrary. Hale.
- TO RESUME. v. a. [resumo, Lat.]
1. To take back what has been given.
The sun, like this, from which our light we have,
Gaz'd on too long, resumes the light he gave. Denham.
Sees not my love, how time resumes
The glory which he lent these flow'rs;
Yet must they live but some few hours:
Time, what we forbear, devours. Waller.
2. To take back what has been taken away.
That opportunity,
Which then they had to take from's, to resume
We have again. Shakespeare. Cymbeline.
3. To take again.
He'll enter into glory, and resume his seat. Milton.
At this, with look serene, he rais'd his head;
Reason resum'd her place, and passion fled. Dryden.
4. Dryden uses it with again, but improperly, unless the resumption be repeated.
To him our common grandfire of the main
Had giv'n to change his form, and chang'd, resume again. Dryden.
5. To begin again what was broken off: as, to resume a discourse.
- RESUMPTION. n. f. [resumption, Fr. resumptus, Lat.] The act of resuming.
And if there be any fault in the last, it is the resumption of the dwelling too long upon his arguments. Denham.
- RESUMPTIVE. adj. [resumptus, Lat.] Taking back.
- RESUPINATION. n. f. [resupino, Lat.] The act of lying on the back.
- TO RESURVEY. v. a. [re and survey.] To review; to survey again.
I have, with curious eye, o'erlanc'd the articles;
Appoint some of your council presently
To sit with us, once more with better heed
To resurvey them. Shakespeare. Henry V.
- RESURRECTION. n. f. [resurrection, Fr. resurrectum, Lat.] Revival from the dead; return from the grave.
The Sadduces were griev'd, that they taught, and preached through Jesus the resurrection from the dead. Acts iv. 2.
Nor after resurrection shall he stay Longer on earth, than certain times t' appear
To his disciples. Milton.
He triumphs in his agonies, whilst the soul springs forward to the great object which he has always had in view, and leaves the body with an expectation of being remitted to her in a glorious and joyful resurrection. Addison's Spectator.
Perhaps there was nothing ever done in all past ages, and which was not a publick fact, so well attested as the resurrection of Christ. Watts.
- TO RESUSCITATE. v. a. [resuscitare, Latin.] To stir up anew; to revive.

RET

- We have beasts and birds for dissections, though divers parts, which you account vital, be perished and taken forth, resuscitating of some that seem dead in appearance. Bacon.
- RESUSCITATION. n. f. [from resuscitare.] The act of stirring up anew; the act of reviving, or state of being revived.
Your very obliging manner of enquiring after me, at your resuscitation, should have been sooner answered; I sincerely rejoice at your recovery. Pope.
- TO RETAIL. v. a. [retailer, Fr.]
1. To divide into small parcels.
Bound with triumphant garlands will I come,
And lead thy daughter to a conqueror's bed;
To whom I will retail my conquest won,
And she shall be sole victress, Cæsar's Cæsar. Shakespeare.
2. To sell in small quantities.
All encouragement should be given to artificers; and those, who make, should also vend and retail their commodities. Locke.
3. To sell at second hand.
The sage dame,
By names of toasts, retails each batter'd jade. Pope.
4. To tell in broken parts.
He is furnish'd with no certainties,
More than he haply may retail from me. Shakespeare.
- RETAIL. n. f. [from the verb.] Sale by small quantities.
The author, to prevent such a monopoly of sense, is resolved to deal in it himself by retail. Addison.
We force a wretched trade by beating down the sale,
And selling basely by retail. Swift's Miscellany.
- RETAILER. n. f. [from retail.] One who sells by small quantities.
From these particulars we may guess at the rest, as retailers do of the whole piece, by taking a view of its ends. Hakew.
- TO RETAIN. v. a. [retinere, Lat. retenir, Fr.]
1. To keep; not to lose.
Where is the patience now,
That you so oft have boasted to retain. Shakespeare. K. Lear.
Though th' offending part felt mortal pain,
Th' immortal part its knowledge did retain. Denham.
The vigor of this arm was never vain;
And that my wonted prowess I retain,
Witness these heaps of slaughter. Dryden.
A tomb and fun'ral honours I decreed;
The place your armour and your name retains. Dryden.
Whatever ideas the mind can receive and contemplate without the help of the body, it is reasonable to conclude, it can retain without the help of the body too. Locke.
2. To keep; not to lay aside.
Let me retain
The name and all the addition to a king;
The sway, beloved sons, be yours. Shakespeare. King Lear.
As they did not like to retain God in their knowledge,
God gave them over to a reprobate mind. Rom. i. 22.
Although they retain the word mandrake in the text, yet they retract it in the margin. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
Be obedient and retain Unalterably firm his love entire. Milton.
They, who have reformed painting in Germany, not having seen any of those fair reliques of antiquity, have retained much of that barbarous method. Dryden.
3. To keep; not to dismiss.
Receive him that is mine own bowels; whom I would have retained with me. Philem. xii. 13.
Hollow rocks retain the found of blustering winds. Mil.
4. To keep in pay; to hire.
A Benedictine convent has now retained the most learned father of their order to write in its defence. Addison.
- TO RETAIN. v. n.
1. To belong to; to depend on.
These betray upon the tongue no heat nor corrosiveness, but coldness mixed with a somewhat languid relish retaining to bitterness. Boyle.
In animals many actions depend upon their living form, as well as that of mixture, and though they wholly seem to retain to the body, depart upon disunion. Brown.
2. To keep; to continue. Not in use.
No more can impure man retain and move
In the pure region of that worthy love,
Than earthly substance can unforc'd aspire,
And leave his nature to converse with fire. Donne.
- RETAINER. n. f. [from retain.]
1. An adherent; a dependant: a hanger-on.
You now are mounted,
Where pow'rs are your retainers. Shakespeare. Henry VIII.
One darling inclination of mankind affects to be a retainer to religion; the spirit of opposition, that lived long before christianity, and can easily subsist without it. Swift.
2. In common law, retainer significth a servant not menial nor familiar, that is not dwelling in his house; but only using or bearing his name or livery. Cowel.
3. The act of keeping dependants, or being in dependance.
By another law, the king's officers and farmers were to forfeit their places and holds, in case of unlawful retainer, or partaking in unlawful assemblies. Bacon's Henry VII.

RET

A combination of honest men would endeavour to extirpate all the profligate immoral retainers to each side, that have nothing to recommend them but an implicit submission to their leaders. Addison's Spectator.

To RETAKE. v. a. [re and take.] To take again. A day should be appointed, when the remonstrance should be taken into consideration. Clarendon.

To RETALIATE. v. a. [re and talio, Lat.] To return by giving like for like; to repay; to requite.

It is very unlucky, to be obliged to retaliate the injuries of authors, whose works are so soon forgotten, that we are in danger of appearing the first aggressors. Swift.

If a first minister of state had used me as you have done, retaliating would be thought a mark of courage. Swift.

RETALIATION. n. f. [from retaliare.] Requital; return of like for like.

They thought it no irreligion to prosecute the severest retaliation or revenge; so that at the same time their outward man might be a saint, and their inward man a devil. South.

God, graciously becoming our debtor, takes what is done to others as done to himself, and by promise obliges himself to full retaliation. Calamy's Sermons.

To RETARD. v. a. [retardo, Lat. retarder, Fr.]

1. To hinder; to obstruct in swiftness of course. How Iphitus with me, and Pelias Slowly retire; the one retarded was By feeble age, the other by a wound. Denham.

2. To delay; to put off. Nor kings nor nations

One moment can retard th' appointed hour. Dryden.

It is as natural to delay a letter at such a season, as to retard a melancholy visit to a person one cannot relieve. Pope.

To RETARD. v. n. To stay back. Some years it hath also retarded, and come far later, than usually it was expected. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

RETARDATION. n. f. [retardation, Fr. from retard.] Hindrance; the act of delaying.

Out of this a man may devise the means of altering the colour of birds, and the retardation of hoary hairs. Bacon.

RETARDER. n. f. [from retard.] Hinderer; obstructor. This disputing way of enquiry, is so far from advancing science, that it is no inconsiderable retarder. Glanvill.

To RETCH. v. n. [hjacan, Saxon.] To force up something from the stomach.

RETCHLESS. adj. [Sometimes written wretchless, properly reckless.] See RECKLESS. Careless.

He struggles into breath, and cries for aid; Then helpless in his mother's lap is laid:

He creeps, he walks, and issuing into man, Grudges their life, from whence his own began;

Retchless of laws, affects to rule alone. Dryden.

RETENTION. n. f. [retentio, Lat.] The act of discovering to the view.

This is rather a restoration of a body to its own colour, or a retention of its native colour, than a change. Boyle.

RETENTION. n. f. [retentio, Fr. retentio, from retentus, Lat.]

1. The act of retaining. No woman's heart

So big to hold so much; they lack retention. Shakefp.

A forward retention of custom is as turbulent a thing, as an innovation; and they, that reverence too much old things, are but a scorn to the new. Bacon's Natural History.

2. Retention and retentive faculty is that state of contraction in the solid parts, which makes them hold fast their proper contents. Quincy.

3. Memory. The backward learner makes amends another way, expiating his want of docility with a deeper and a more rooted retention. South's Sermons.

Retention is the keeping of those simple ideas, which from sensation or reflection the mind hath received. Locke.

4. Limitation. His life I gave him, and did thereto add

My love without retention or restraint;

All his. Shakefp. Twelfth Night.

5. Custody; confinement; restraint. I sent the old and miserable king

To some retention and appointed guard. Shakefp. K. Lear.

RETENTIVE. adj. [retentus, Lat. retentivus, Fr.]

1. Having the power of retention. It keepeth sermons in memory, and doth in that respect, although not feed the soul of man, yet help the retentive force of that stomach of the mind. Hooker.

Have I been ever free, and must my house Be my retentive enemy, my goal?

From retentive cage Shakefp.

When fullen Philomel escapes, her notes She varies, and of past imprisonment

Sweetly complains. Philips.

In Totnam fields the brethren with amaze Prick all their ears up, and forget to gaze;

Long Chancery-lane retentive rolls the found, And courts to courts return it round and round. Pope.

RET

2. Having memory. To remember a song or tune, our souls must be an harmony continually running over in a silent whisper those musical accents, which our retentive faculty is preserver of. Glan.

RETENTIVENESS. n. f. [from retentive.] Having the quality of retention.

RETICENCE. n. f. [reticence, Fr. reticentia, from reticeo, Lat.] Concealment by silence. Di.

3. Act of withdrawing. Short retirement urges sweet return. Milton.

In this retirement of the mind from the senses, it retains a yet more incoherent manner of thinking, which we call dreaming. Locke.

RETO'LD. part. pass. of retell. Related or told again. Whatever Harry Percy then had said

At such a time, with all the rest retold, May reasonably die. Shakefp.

Upon his dead corpse there was such misuse By those Welchwomen done, as may not be Without much shame retold or spoken of. Shakefp.

To RETORT. v. a. [retortus, Lat.]

1. To throw back. His virtues, shining upon others,

Heat them, and they retort that heat again To the first giver. Shakefp. Troilus and Cressida.

He paid through hostile scorn; And with retorted scorn his back he turn'd. Milton.

2. To return any argument, censure, or incivility. His proof will easily be retorted, and the contrary proved, by interrogating; shall the adulterer inherit the kingdom of God? if he shall, what need I, that am now exhorted to reform my life, reform it? if he shall not, then certainly I, that am such, am none of the elect; for all, that are elect, shall certainly inherit the kingdom of God. Hammond.

What if toy son Prove disobedient, and reprovd, retort,

Wherefore didst thou beget me? Milton.

The respondent may shew, how the opponent's argument may be retorted against himself. Watts.

3. To curve back. It would be tried how the voice will be carried in an horn, which is a line arched; or in a trumpet, which is a line retorted; or in some pipe that were finuous. Bacon.

RETORT. n. f. [retorte, Fr. retortum, Lat.]

1. A censure or incivility returned. I laid his beard was not cut well, he was in the mind it was: this is called the retort courteous. Shakefp.

We ought to retrench those superfluous expences to qualify ourselves for the exercise of charity. Atterbury.

2. To confine. Improper. In some reigns, they are for a power and obedience that is unlimited; and in others, are for retrenching within the narrowest bounds, the authority of the princes, and the allegiance of the subject. Addison's Freeholder, N° 6.

To RETRENCH. v. n. To live with less magnificence or expence. Can I retrench? yes mighty well

Shrink back to my paternal cell, A little house, with trees a-row, And like its master, very low. Pope's Epist. of Horace.

RETRENCHMENT. n. f. [retranchement, Fr. from retrench.] The act of lopping away.

I had studied Virgil's design, his judicious management of the figures, the sober retrenchments of his sense, which always leaves somewhat to gratify our imagination, on which it may enlarge at pleasure. Dryden's Dedication to Virgil.

The want of vowels in our language has been the general complaint of our polite authors, who nevertheless have made these retrenchments, and consequently encreased our former scarcity. Addison.

I would rather be an advocate for the retrenchment, than the encrease of this charity. Atterbury.

To RETRIBUTE.

RET

TO RETRIBUTE. v. a. [retribuo, Lat. retribuere, Fr.] To pay back; to make repayment of.

Both the will and power to serve him are his upon so many scores, that we are unable to retribute, unless we do restore; and all the duties we can pay our maker are less properly requitals than restitutions. Boyle.

In the state of nature, a man comes by no arbitrary power to use a criminal, but only to retribute to him, so far as calm reason and conscience dictate, what is proportionate to his transgression. Locke.

RETRIBUTION. n. f. [retribution, Fr. from retribue.] Repayment; return accommodated to the action.

The king thought he had not remunerated his people sufficiently with good laws, which evermore was his retribution for treasure. Bacon's Henry VII.

All who have their reward on earth, the fruits Of painful superstition, and blind zeal, Nought seeking but the praise of men, here find Fit retribution, empty as their deeds. Milton's Par. Lost.

In good offices and due retributions, we may not be pinching and niggardly: it argues an ignoble mind, where we have wronged to higgie and dodge in the amends. Hall.

There is no nation, though plunged into never such gross idolatry, but has some awful sense of a deity, and a persuasion of a state of retribution to men after this life. South.

It is a strong argument for a state of retribution hereafter, that in this world virtuous persons are very often unfortunate, and vicious persons prosperous. Addison's Spectator.

RETRIBUTORY. adj. [from retribue.] Repaying; making RETRIBUTIVE. } repayment.

Something strangely retributive is working. Clarissa.

If one, like the old Latin poets, came among them, it would be a means to retrieve them from their cold trivial conceits, to an imitation of their predecessors. Berkeley to Pope.

RETROCESSION. n. f. [retrocession, Lat.] The act of going back.

RETROCOPIULATION. n. f. [retro and copulation.] Post-coition.

From the nature of this position, there ensueth a necessity of retrocopiulation. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

RETROGRADATION. n. f. [retrogradation, Fr. from retrograde.] The act of going backward.

As for the revolutions, stations, and retrogradations of the planets, observed constantly in most certain periods of time, sufficiently demonstrates, that their motions are governed by counsel. Ray on the Creation.

RETROGRADE. adj. [retrograde, Fr. retro and gradior, Lat.] 1. Going backward.

Princes, if they use ambitious men, should handle it so, as they be still progressive, and not retrograde. Bacon.

2. Contrary; opposite.

Your intent In going back to school to Wittenberg, It is most retrograde to our desire. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

3. In astronomy, planets are retrograde, when by their proper motion in the zodiac, they move backward, and contrary to the succession of the signs; as from the second degree of Aries to the first: but this retrogradation is only apparent and occasioned by the observer's eye being placed on the earth; for to an eye at the sun, the planet will appear always direct, and never either stationary or retrograde. Harris.

Their wand'ring course, now high, now low, then hid, Progressive, retrograde, or standing still, In fix thou seest. Shakespeare's Paradise Lost.

Two geomantick figures were display'd; One when direct, and one when retrograde. Dryden.

TO RETROGRADE. v. n. [retrograder, Fr. retro and gradior, Lat.] To go backward.

The race and period of all things here is to turn things more pneumatical and rare, and not to retrograde from pneumatical to that which is dense. Bacon.

RETROGRESSION. n. f. [retro and gressus, Lat.] The act of going backwards.

What will not ambition and revenge descend to. Milton.
 The fatyr in a rage
 Forgets his bus'ness is to laugh and bite, Dryden.
 And will of death and dire revenges write.
 Draco, the Athenian lawgiver, granted an impunity to any person that took revenge upon an adulterer. Broome.
REVENGEFUL. adj. [from revenge.] Vindictive; full of revenge; full of vengeance.
 May my hands
 Never brandish more revengeful steel
 Over the glittering helmet of my foe. Shakefp. Rich. II.
 If thy revengful heart cannot forgive,
 Lo! here I lend thee this sharp-pointed sword,
 Which hide in this true breast. Shakefp. Richard III.
 Into my borders now Jarbas falls,
 And my revengful brother scales the walls. Denham.
 Repenting England, this revengful day,
 To Philip's manes did an off'ring bring. Dryden.
REVENGEFULLY. adv. [from revengful.] Vindictively.
 He smil'd revengfully, and leap'd
 Upon the floor; thence gazing at the skies,
 His eye-balls fiery red, and glowing vengeance;
 Gods I accuse you not. Dryden and Lee's Oedipus.
REVENGER. n. f. [from revenge.]
 1. One who revenges; one who wreaks his own or another's injuries.
 May be, that better reason will assuage
 The rash revenger's heat; words, well dispos'd,
 Have secret pow'r to appease enflamed rage. Fairy Queen.
 I do not know,
 Wherefore my father should revengers want,
 Having a son and friends. Shakefp. Ant. and Cleop.
 So shall the great revenger ruin
 Him and his issue, by a dreadful fate. Sandys's Paraphrase.
 Morocco's monarch
 Had come in person, to have seen and known
 The injur'd world's revenger and his own. Waller.
 2. One who punishes crimes.
 What government can be imagined, without judicial proceedings? and what methods of judicature, without a religious oath, which supposes an omniscient being, as conscious to its falsehood or truth, and a revenger of perjury. Bentley.
REVENGEMENT. n. f. [from revenge.] Vengeance; return of an injury.
 It may dwell
 In her son's flesh to mind revengement,
 And be for all chaste dames an endless monument. F. & Q.
 By the periclose of the same verse, vagabond is understood for such a one as travelleth in fear of revengement. Raleigh.
REVENGINGLY. adv. [from revenging.] With vengeance;
 vindictively.
 I've belov'd a lady,
 The princeess of this country; and the air on't Revengingly enfeebles me. Shakefp. Cymbeline.
REVENUE. n. f. [from revenue, Fr. Its accent is uncertain.] Income; annual profits received from lands or other funds.
 They privily send over unto them the revenues, wherewith they are there maintained. Spenser's State of Ireland.
 She bears a duke's revenues on her back,
 And in her heart scorns our poverty. Shakefp. Hen. VI.
 Only I retain
 The name and all th' addition to a king;
 The sway, revenue, beloved sons, be yours. Shakefp.
 Many offices are of so small revenue, as not to furnish a man with what is sufficient for the support of his life. Temple.
 If the woman could have been contented with golden eggs, she might have kept that revenue on still. LEStrange.
 His vassals easy, and the owner blest,
 They pay a trifle, and enjoy the rest:
 Not so a nation's revenues are paid;
 The servant's faults are on the master laid. Swift.
 To REVERB. v. a. [from reverbera, Lat.] To strike against; to reverberate. Not in use.
 Referve thy state, with better judgment check
 This hideous rashness:
 The youngest daughter does not love thee least;
 Nor are those empty hearted, whose loud sound Reverbs no hollowness. Shakefp. King Lear.
REVERBERANT. adj. [from reverberans, Lat.] Refounding; beating back. The reading in the following passage should be, I think, reverberant.
 Hollow your name to the reverberate hills,
 And make the babbling gossip of the air
 Cry out, Olivia! Shakefp. Twelfth Night.
 To REVERBERATE. v. a. [from reverbera, Lat. reverbera, Fr.]
 1. To beat back.
 Start
 An echo with the clamour of thy drum,
 And ev'n at hand a drum is ready brad,
 That shall reverberate all as well as thine. Shakefp. K. John.
 Nor doth he know them for aught,
 Till he behold them formed in th' applause
 Where they're extended; which, like an arch, reverbrates
 The sound again. Shakefp.

As the sight of the eye is like a glass, so is the ear a finuous cave, with a hard bone, to stop and reverberate the sound. Bacon.
 As we, to improve the nobler kinds of fruits, are at the expence of walls to receive and reverberate the faint rays of the sun, so we, by the help of a good soil, equal the production of warmer countries. Swift.
 2. To heat in an intense furnace, where the flame is reverberated upon the matter to be melted or cleaned.
 Crocus martis, that is steel corroded with vinegar or sulphur, and after reverberated with fire, the loadstone will not attract. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
 To REVERBERATE. v. n.
 1. To be driven back; to bound back.
 The rays of royal majesty reverberated so strongly upon Villerio, that they dispelled all clouds. Hawth.
 2. To rebound.
REVERBERATION. n. f. [from reverbera, Fr. from reverbera, Lat.] The act of beating or driving back.
 To the reflection of visible, small glasses suffice; but to the reverberation of audibles, are required greater spaces. Bac.
 The first repetitions follow very thick; for two parallel walls beat the sound back on each other, like the several re-verberations of the same image from two opposite looking-glasses.
REVERBERATORY. adj. [from reverbera, Fr.] Returning;
 beating back.
 Good lime may be made of all kinds of flints, but they are hard to burn, except in a reverberatory kiln. Mason.
 To REVERBER. v. a. [from reverbera, Fr. reverbera, Lat.] To revenge; to honour; to venerate; to regard with awe.
 An emperor often stamp'd on his coins the face or ornaments of his colleague, and we may suppose Lucius Verus would omit no opportunity of doing honour to Marcus Aurelius, whom he rather revered as his father, than treated as his partner in the empire. Addison's Remarks on Italy.
 Love shall again revere your pow'r,
 And rise a swan, or fall a show'r. Prior.
 Taught 'em how clemency made pow'r rever'd,
 And that the prince below'd was truly fear'd. Prior.
 In my conquest he thy might declar'd,
 And for thy justice he thy name rever'd. Prior.
REVERENCE. n. f. [from reverence, Fr. reverentia, Lat.]
 1. Veneration; respect; awful regard.
 God is greatly to be feared in the assembly of the saints;
 and to be had in reverence of all about him. Pf. lxxxix. 7.
 When quarrels and factions are carried openly, it is a sign the reverence of government is lost. Bacon's Essays.
 Higher of the genial bed,
 And with mysterious reverence I deem. Milton.
 In your prayers, use reverent postures and the lowest gestures of humility, remembering that we speak to God, in our reverence to whom we cannot exceed. Taylor.
 A poet cannot have too great a reverence for readers. Dryd.
 The fear, acceptable to God, is a filial fear; an awful reverence of the divine nature, proceeding from a just esteem of his perfections, which produces in us an inclination to his service, and an unwillingness to offend him. Rogers.
 2. Act of obeisance; bow; courtesy.
 Now lies he there,
 And none so poor to do him reverence. Shakefp. Jul. Cæs.
 Mordecai bowed not, nor did him reverence. Esth. iii. 2.
 He led her easily forth,
 Where Godfrey sat among his lords and peers,
 She rever'd him, then blush'd as one dismay'd. Fairfax.
 Had not men the hoary heads rever'd,
 Or boys paid reverence, when a man appear'd,
 Both must have dy'd. Dryden's Juvenal.
 Upstarts the bedlam,
 And reverence made, accosted thus the queen. Dryden.
 The monarch
 Commands into the court the beauteous Emily:
 So call'd, she came; the senate rose and paid
 Becoming reverence to the royal maid. Dryden.
 3. Title of the clergy.
 Many now in health
 Shall drop their blood, in approbation
 Of what your reverence shall incite us to. Shakefp. Hen. V.
 4. Poetical title of a father.
 O my dear father! let this kiss
 Repair those violent harms, that my two sisters
 Have in thy reverence made. Shakefp. King Lear.
 To REVERENCE. v. a. [from the noun.] To regard with reverence; to regard with awful respect.
 Those that I reverence, those I fear, the wife;
 At fools I laugh, not fear them. Shakefp. Cymbeline.
 While they pervert pure nature's healthful rules
 To loathsome sickness, worthily since they God's image did not reverence in themselves. Milton.
 He flew Action, but despoil'd him not;
 Nor in his hate the funeral rites forgot;
 Arm'd as he was, he sent him whole below,
 And reverenc'd thus the manes of his foe. Dryden.

REVERENCER. n. f. [from reverence.] One who regards with reverence.
 The Athenians quite sunk in their affairs; had little commerce with the rest of Greece, and were become great reverers of crowned heads. Swift.
REVEREND. adj. [from reverend, Fr. reverendus, Lat.]
 1. Venerable; deserving reverence; expecting respect by his appearance.
 Let his lack of years be no impediment, to let him lack a reverend estimation. Shakefp. Merchant of Venice.
 Reverend and gracious senators. Shakefp.
 Onias, who had been high priest, reverend in conversation, and gentle in condition, prayed for the Jews. 2 Mac. xv. 12.
 Reverend old man! lo here confess he stands. Pope.
 2. The honorary epithet of the clergy. We stile a clergyman, reverend; a bishop, right reverend; an archbishop, most reverend.
 A reverend fire among them came,
 Who preach'd conversion and repentance. Milton.
REVERENT. adj. [from reverens, Lat.] Humble; expressing submission; testifying veneration.
 They forthwith to the place
 Repairing where he judg'd them, prostrate fell Before him reverent. Milton's Paradise Lost.
 Meet then the senior, far renown'd for sense,
 With reverent awe, but decent confidence. Pope.
REVERENTIAL. adj. [from reverentiell, Fr. from reverent.] Expressing reverence; proceeding from awe and veneration.
 That oaths made in reverential fear
 Of love and his wrath may any forswear. Dome.
 The least degree of contempt weakens religion; it properly consisteth in a reverential esteem of things sacred. South.
 The reason of the institution being forgot, the after-ages perverted it, supposing only a reverential gratitude paid to the earth as the common parent. Woodward's Nat. Hist.
 All look up, with reverential awe,
 At crimes that 'scape, or triumph o'er the law. Pope.
REVERENTIALLY. adv. [from reverential.] With show of reverence.
 The Jews, reverentially declining the situation of their temple, place their beds from North to South. Brown.
REVERENTLY. adv. [from reverent.] Respectfully; with awe; with reverence.
 Chide him for faults, and do it reverently. Shakefp.
 To nearest ports their shatter'd ships repair,
 Where by our dreadful cannon they lay aw'd;
 So reverently men quit th' open air,
 When thunder speaks th' angry gods abroad. Dryden.
 Then down with all thy boasted volumes, down;
 Only reserve the sacred one:
 Low, reverently low,
 Make thy stubborn knowledge bow:
 To look to heav'n be blind to all below. Prior.
REVERER. n. f. [from revere.] One who venerates; one who reveres.
 When the divine revelations were committed to writing, the Jews were such scrupulous reverers of them, that it was the business of the Pharisees, to number not only the sections and lines, but even the words and letters of the Old Testament. Government of the Tongue.
REVERSAL. n. f. [from reverse.] Change of sentence.
 The king, in the reversal of the attainders of his partakers, had his will. Bacon's Henry VII.
 To REVERSE. v. a. [from reversus, Lat.]
 1. To turn upside down.
 A pyramid reversed may stand upon his point, if balanced by admirable skill. Temple's Miscellanies.
 2. To overturn; to subvert.
 These now controul a wretched people's fate,
 These can divide, and these reverse the state. Pope.
 3. To turn back.
 Michael's sword stay'd not;
 But with swift wheel reverse, deep entering shar'd Satan's right side. Milton.
 4. To contradict; to repeal.
 Better it was in the eye of his understanding, that sometime an erroneous sentence definitive should prevail, till the same authority, perceiving such oversight, might afterwards correct or reverse it, than that strifes should have respite to grow, and not come speedily unto some end. Hooker's Pref.
 A decree was made, that they had forfeited their liberties; and albeit they made great moans, yet could they not procure this sentence to be reversed. Hayward.
 Death, his doom which I
 To mitigate thus plead, not to reverse,
 To better life shall yield him. Milton's Par. Lost.
 Though grace may have reversed the condemning sentence, and sealed the sinner's pardon before God, yet it may have left no transcript of that pardon in the sinner's breast. South.
 Those seem to do best, who, taking useful hints from facts, carry them in their minds to be judg'd of, by what they shall find in history to confirm or reverse these imperfect observations. Locke.

REV

 5. To turn to the contrary.
 These plain characters we rarely find,
 Though strong the bent, yet quick the turns of mind;
 Or puzzling contraries confound the whole,
 Or affectations quite reverse the soul. Pope.
 6. To put each in the place of the other.
 With what tyranny custom governs men; it makes that reputable in one age, which was a vice in another, and reverses even the distinctions of good and evil. Rogers.
 7. To recall; to renew. Obsolete.
 Well knowing true all he did rehearse,
 And to his fresh remembrance did reverse
 The ugly view of his deformed crimes. Fairy Queen.
 To REVERSE. v. n. [from reversere, reversus, Lat.] To return. Spens.
REVERSE. n. f. [from the verb.]
 1. Change; vicissitude.
 The strange reverse of fate you see;
 I pity'd you, now you may pity me. Dryden's Aurengz.
 By a strange reverse of things, Justinian's law, which for many ages was neglected, does now obtain, and the Theo-dosian code is in a manner antiquated. Baker.
 2. A contrary; an opposite.
 Count Tariff appeared the reverse of Goodman fact. Add.
 The performances, to which God has annexed the promises of eternity, are just the reverse of all the pursuits of sense. Reg.
 3. [From revers, Fr.] The side of the coin on which the head is not impressed.
 As the Romans set down the image and inscription of the consul, afterward of the emperor on the one side, so they changed the reverse always upon new events. Camden.
 Our guard upon the royal side;
 On the reverse our beauty's pride. Waller.
 Several reverses are owned to be the representations of antique figures. Addison on Ancient Medals.
REVERSIBLE. adj. [from reversibilis, Fr. from reverse.] Capable of being reversed.
REVERSION. n. f. [from reversion, Fr. from reverse.]
 1. The state of being to be possessed after the death of the present possessor.
 As were our England in reversion his,
 And he our subjects next degree in hope. Shakefp. Rich. II.
 A life in reversion is not half so valuable, as that which may at present be entered on. Hammond's Fundamentals.
 2. Succession; right of succession.
 He was very old, and had out-lived most of his friends;
 many persons of quality being dead, who had, for recom-
 pence of services, procured the reversion of his office. Clarend.
 Upon what ground can a man promise himself a future repentance, who cannot promise himself a futurity? whose life depends upon his breath, and is so restrained to the present, that it cannot secure to itself the reversion of the very next minute. South's Sermons.
 So many candidates there stand for wit,
 A place at court is scarce so hard to get;
 In vain they croud each other at the door;
 For e'en reversions are all begg'd before. Dryden.
REVERSIONARY. adj. [from reversion.] To be enjoyed in succession.
 There are multitudes of reversionary patents and reversionary promises of preferments. Arbutnot.
 To REVERT. v. a. [from reverti, Lat.]
 1. To change; to turn to the contrary.
 Wretched her subjects, gloomy sits the queen,
 Till happy chance revert the cruel scene;
 And apish folly, with her wild resort
 Of wit and jest, disturbs the solemn court. Prior.
 2. To reverberate.
 The stream boils
 Around the stone, or from the hollow'd bank
 Reverted plays in undulating flow. Thomson.
 To REVERT. v. n. [from reverti, old Fr.] To return; to fall back.
 My arrows,
 Too slightly timbred for so loud a wind,
 Would have reverted to my bow again. Shakefp. Hamlet.
 If his tenant and patentee shall dispose of his gift without his kingly assent, the lands shall revert to the king. Bacon.
REVERT. n. f. [from the verb.] Return; recurrence. A musical term.
 Hath not musick her figures the same with rhetoric? what is a revert but her antitrophe? Peachment of Musick.
REVERTIBLE. adj. [from reverti.] Returnable.
REVERV. n. f. [from reverti, Fr.] Loose musing; irregular thought.
 Revery is when ideas float in our mind, without any reflection or regard of the understanding. Locke.
 If the minds of men were laid open, we should see but little difference between that of the wife man and that of the fool; there are infinite reveries and numberless extravagancies pass through both. Addison.
 I am really so far gone, as to take pleasure in reveries of this kind. Pope.
 9
 To REVERSE.

REV

To REVES'T. v. a. [revestir, revêtir, Fr. revestir, Lat.]
1. To clothe again.

Her, natheless,
Th' enchanter finding fit for his intents,
Did thus revest, and deckt with due habiliments. Spenser.
When thou of life renewest the seeds,
The withered fields revest their cheerful weeds. Wotton.
2. To reinvest; to vest again in a possession or office.
REVESTIARY. n. f. [revestiaire, Fr. from revestir, Lat.] Place where dresses are deposited.

The effectual power of words the Pythagoreans extolled;
the impious Jews ascribed all miracles to a name, which was engraved in the revestary of the temple. Camden's Remains.
REVICTION. n. f. [revictum, Lat.] Return to life.

If the Rabines prophecy succeed, we shall conclude the days of the phoenix, not in its own, but in the last and general flames, without all hope of reviction. Brown.
To REVICTUAL. v. a. [re and victual.] To stock with victuals again.

It hath been objected, that I put into Ireland, and spent much time there, taking care to revictual myself and none of the rest. Raleigh's Apology.

To REVIE'W. v. a. [re and view.]

1. To look back.
So swift he flies, that his reviewing eye
Has lost the chafers, and his ear the cry. Denham.

2. To see again.
I shall review Sicilia; for whose fight
I have a woman's longing. Shakefp. Winter's Tale.

3. To consider over again; to retrace; to reexamine.
Segrais says, that the Æneis is an imperfect work, and that death prevented the divine poet from reviewing it; and, for that reason, he had condemned it to the fire. Dryden.

Shall I the long laborious scene review,
And open all the wounds of Greece anew. Pope.

4. To survey; to overlook; to examine.
REVIE'W. n. f. [review, Fr. from the verb.] Survey; re-examination.

We make a general review of the whole work, and a general review of nature; that, by comparing them, their full correspondency may appear. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

The works of nature will bear a thousand views and reviews; the more narrowly we look into them, the more occasion we shall have to admire. Aberbury's Sermons.

To REVILE. v. a. [re and vile.] To reproach; to vilify;
to treat with contumely.

Asked for their pass by every squire,
That list at will them to revile or snub. Spenser.

I read in's looks
Matter against me; and his eye revil'd
Me as his abject object. Shakefp. Henry VIII.

Fear not the reproach of men, neither be afraid of their revilings. Isaiah li. 7.

She still beareth him an invincible hatred, revileth him to his face, and raileth at him in all companies. Swift.

REVILER. n. f. [from the verb.] Reproach; contumely; ex-probation. Not used, but elegant.

I heard thee in the garden, and of thy voice Afraid, being naked, hid myself,—to whom
The gracious judge, without revile, reply'd. Milton.

REVILER. n. f. [from revile.] One who reviles; one who treats another with contumelious terms.

The bitterest revilers are often half-witted people. G. of T.

REVILINGLY. adv. [from revile.] In an opprobrious manner;
with contumely.

The love I bear to the civility of expression will not suffer me to be revilingly broad. Maine.

REVISAL. n. f. [from revise.] Review; reexamination.
The revisal of these letters has been a kind of examination of conscience to me; so fairly and faithfully have I set down in them the undisguised state of the mind. Pope.

To REVISE. v. a. [revissus, Lat.] To review; to overlook.
Lintot will think your price too much;
Not, Sir, if you revise it, and retouch. Pope.

REVISE. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. Review; reexamination.

The author is to be excused, who never, in regard to his eyes and other impediments, gives himself the trouble of corrections and revises. Boyle.

REVISER. n. f. [reviseur, Fr. from revise.] Examiner; superintendant.

REVISION. n. f. [revision, Fr. from revise.] Review.
To REVISIT. v. a. [revisiter, Fr. revissit, Lat.] To visit again.

Thou I revisit safe,
And feel thy foreign vital lamp; but thou
Revisit'st not these eyes, that rowl in vain,
To find thy piercing ray, and find no dawn. Milton.

Let the pale fire revisit Thebes, and bear
These pleasing orders to the tyrant's ear. Pope's Statius.

REVIVAL. n. f. [from revive.] Recall from a state of languour, oblivion, or obscurity.

REV

To REVIVE. v. n. [revivere, Fr. revivis, Lat.]

1. To return to life.
The Lord heard Elijah, and the soul of the child came unto him again, and he revived. 1 Kings xvii. 22.
So he dies;
But soon revives: death over him no power
Shall long usurp. Milton.

2. To return to vigour or fame; to rise from languour, oblivion, or obscurity.
I revive at this last fight, assur'd that man shall live. Milt.

To REVIVE. v. a.
1. To bring to life again.
Spot more delicious, than those gardens feign'd
Of reviv'd Adonis. Milton.

2. To raise from languour, insensibility, or oblivion.
Noise of arms, or view of martial guise,
Might not revive desire of knightly exercise. Fa. Quen.

God lighten our eyes, and give us a little reviving in our bondage. Ezra ix. 8.

3. To renew; to recollect; to bring back to the memory.
The memory is the power to revive again in our minds those ideas, which after imprinting have been laid aside out of sight. Locke.

The mind has a power in many cases to revive perceptions, which it has once had. Locke.

4. To quicken; to rouse.
I should revive the soldiers hearts;
Because I ever found them as myself. Shakefp.

What first Æneas in this place beheld,
Reviv'd his courage, and his fear expell'd. Dryden.

Old Egeus only could revive his son,
Who various changes of the world had known. Dryden.

REVIVER. n. f. [from revive.] That which invigorates or revives.

To REVIVIFICATE. v. a. [revivifier, Fr. re and vivifier,
Lat.] To recall to life.

REVIVIFICATION. n. f. [from revivificate.] The act of recalling to life.

As long as an infant is in the womb of its parent, so long are these medicines of revivification in preparing. Spektator.

REVIVISCENCY. n. f. [revivisco, reviviscencia, Lat.] Renewal of life.

Scripture makes mention of a restitution and reviviscency of all things at the end of the world. Burnet.

REUNION. n. f. [reunion, Fr. re and union.] Return to a state of juncture, cohesion, or concord.

She, that should all parts to reunion bow,
She that had all magnetick force alone,
To draw and fasten sundred parts in one. Donne.

To REUNITE. v. a. [re and unite.]
1. To join again; to make one whole a second time; to join what is divided.

By this match the line of Charles the great
Was reunited to the crown of France. Shakefp. Henry V.

2. To reconcile; to make those at variance one.
To REUNITE. v. n. To cohere again.

REVOCABLE. adj. [revocabile, Fr. revoco, revocabilis, Lat.]
1. That may be recalled.

Howsoever you flew bitterness, do not act any thing that is not revocable. Bacon's Essay.

2. That may be repealed.
REVOCABLENESS. n. f. [from revocable.] The quality of being revocable.

To REVOCATE. v. a. [revoco, Lat.] To recall; to call back.
His successor, by order, nullifies
Many his patents, and did revocate
And re-assume his liberalities. Daniel's Civil War.

REVOCATION. n. f. [revocation, Fr. revocatio, Lat.]
1. Act of recalling.

One, that saw the people bent for the revocation of Calvin, gave him notice of their affection. Hooker.

2. State of being recalled.
Elaiana's king commanded Chenandra to tell him that he had received advice of his revocation. Hovel's Pocal Forg.

3. Repeal; reversal.
If a grievance be inflicted on a person, he may appeal, it is not necessary to pray a revocation of such a grievance. Ayliffe.

To REVOKE. v. a. [revoco, Fr. revoco, Lat.]
1. To repeal; to reverse.

That society hath before consented, without revoking the same after. Hooker, b. i. f. 10.

When we abrogate a law as being ill made, the whole cause for which it was made still remaining, do we not herein revoke our very own deed, and upbraid ourselves with folly, yea all that were makers of it with oversight and error. Hook.

What reason is there, but that those grants and privileges should be revoked, or reduced to the first intention. Spenser.

Without my Aurengzebe I cannot live;
Revoke his doom, or else my sentence give. Dryden.

2. To check; to repress.
She strove their sudden rages to revoke,
That at the last suppressing fury mad,
They 'gan abstain. Fairy Queen, b. ii. 3. To

REV

3. To draw back.
Shame were to revoke
The forward footing for an hidden shade. Fairy Queen.
Seas are troubled, when they do revoke
Their flowing waves into themselves again. Davies.

REVOCEMENT. n. f. [from revoco.] Revocation; repeal; recall. Little in use.

Let it be nois'd,
That through our intercession, this revokement
And pardon comes. Shakefp. Henry VIII.

To REVOL'T. v. n. [revolter, Fr. revoltere, Italian.]
1. To fall off from one to another. It denotes something of pravity or rebellion.

All will revolt from me, and turn to him. Shakefp.
Spot more delicious, than those gardens do revolt,
Our people quarrel with obedience. Shakefp. K. John.

Jafon and his company revolted from the kingdom. 2 Mac.
His people hath a revolving and a rebellious heart; they are revolted and gone. Jer. v. 53.

2. To change. Not in use.
You are already love's firm votary,
And cannot soon revolt and change your mind. Shakefp.

REVOL'T. n. f. [revolte, Fr. from the verb.]
1. Defection; change of sides.

He was greatly strengthened, and the enemy as much enfeebled by daily revolts. Raleigh's History of the World.

If all our levies are made in Scotland or Ireland, may not those two parts of the monarchy be too powerful for the rest, in case of a revolt. Addison's State of the War.

2. A revolt; one who changes sides. Not in use.
You ingrate revolts,
You bloody Nero's, ripping up the womb
Of your dear mother England. Shakefp. King John.

3. Gross departure from duty.
Your daughter hath made a gross revolt;
Tying her duty, beauty, wit, and fortunes
To an extravagant and wheeling stranger. Shakefp.

REVOLTED. part. adj. [from revolt.] Having swerved from duty.
Thou single hast maintain'd
Against revolted multitudes the cause of truth. Milton.

REVOLTER. n. f. [from revolt.] One who changes sides; a defector; a renegade.

Fair honour that thou dost thy God, in trusting
He will accept thee to defend his cause,
A murderer, a revolter, and a robber. Milton's Agonistes.

He was not a revolter from the truth, which he had once embraced. Aberbury's Sermons.

Those, who are negligent or revolters, shall perish. Swift.

To REVOLVE. v. n. [revolve, Lat.]
1. To roll in a circle; to perform a revolution.

They do not revolve about any common center. Cheyne.
If the earth revolve thus, each house near the equator must move a thousand miles an hour. Watts's Impr. of the Mind.

Each revolving year,
The teeming ewes a triple offspring bear. Pope.

2. To fall in a regular course of changing positions; to devolve.
On the defection of an appeal, the jurisdiction does ipso jure revolve to the judge quo.

To REVOLVE. v. a. [revolve, Lat.]
1. To roll any thing round.

Then in the East her turn the shines,
Revolve'd on heav'n's great axis. Milton.

2. To consider; to meditate on.
You may revolve what tales I told you
Of courts, of princes, of the tricks of war. Shakefp.

REVOLUTION. n. f. [revolution, Fr. revolutus, Lat.]
1. Course of any thing which returns to the point at which it began to move.

On their orbs impose
Such restless revolution, day by day
Repeated. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. viii.

They will be taught by the diurnal revolution of the heavens. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

2. Space measured by some revolution.
At certain revolutions are they brought,
And feel by turns the bitter change. Milton.

Meteors have no more time allowed them for their mounting, than the short revolution of a day. Dryden.

The Persian wept over his army, that within the revolution of a single age, not a man would be left alive. Wake.

3. Change in the state of a government or country. It is used among us ὁμοθυμαδόν, for the change produced by the admission of king William and queen Mary.

4. Rotation in general; returning motion.
Fear
Comes thund'ring back with dreadful revolution
On my defenceless head. Milton.

To REVOLUT. v. a. [revolutis, Fr. re and vomit.] To vomit;
to vomit again.

They might cast it up, and take more vomiting and revo-luting what they drink. Hakewill on Providence.

REVULSION. n. f. [revulsion, Fr. revulsus, Lat.] The act of revolving or drawing humours from a remote part of the body.

Derivation differs from revulsion only in the measure of the distance, and the force of the medicines used: if we draw it to some very remote or contrary part, we call it revulsion;

RHE

if only to some neighbouring place, and by gentle means,
we call it derivation.

There is a way of revulsion to let blood in an adverse part. Bacon's Natural History.

I had heard of some strange cures of frenzies, by casual applications of fire to the lower parts, which seems reasonable enough, by the violent revulsion it may make of humours from the head. Temple's Miscellanies.

To REWARD. v. a. [re and award, to give in return.
Shimmer.]

1. To give in return.
Thou hast rewarded me good, whereas I have rewarded thee evil. 1 Sam. xxiv. 17.

They rewarded me evil for good. Psalms xxxv. 12.

2. To repay; to recompense for something good.
To judge th' unfaithful dead, but to reward
His faithful, and receive them into bliss. Milton.

The supreme being rewards the just, and punishes the unjust. Brown's Notes on the Odyssey.

REWARD. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. Recompense given for good.

Rewards and punishments do always presuppose something willingly done well or ill; without which respect, though we may sometimes receive good, yet then it is only a benefit and not a reward. Hooker, b. i. f. 9.

They have a good reward for their labour. Ecclesi. iv. 9.

To myself I owe this due regard,
Not to make love my gift, but my reward. Dryden.

Men have consented to the immortality of the soul and the recompenses of another world, promising to themselves some rewards of virtue after this life. Tillotson.

2. It is sometimes used with a mixture of irony, for punishment or recompense of evil.

REWARDABLE. adj. [from reward.] Worthy of reward.
Men's actions are judged, whether in their own nature rewardable or punishable. Hooker, b. i. f. 9.

The action that is but indifferent, and without reward, if done only upon our own choice, is an act of religion, and rewardable by God, if done in obedience to our superiors.

Taylor's Rule of Living Holy.
REWARDER. n. f. [from reward.] One that rewards; one that recompenses.

A liberal rewarder of his friends. Shakefp. Rich. III.

As the supreme Being is the only proper judge of our per-fections, so is he the only fit rewarder of them. Addison.

Ill judges, as well as rewarders, have popular assemblies been, of those who best deserved from them. Swift.

To REWARD. v. a. [re and word.] To repeat in the same words.
Bring me to the test,
And I the matter will reward; which madness
Would gambol from. Shakefp. Hamlet.

RHABARBARATE. adj. [from rhubarbarum, Lat.] Impregnated or tinged with rhubarb.

The salt humours must be evacuated by the fennate, rhobarbarate, and sweet manna purgers, with acids added, or the purging waters. Floyer on the Humours.

RHABDOMANCY. n. f. [ῥαβδος and μαντεία.] Divination by a wand.

Of peculiar rhodomancy is that which is used in mineral discoveries, with a forked hazel, commonly called Moses's rod, which, freely held forth, will stir and play if any mine be under it. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

RHAPSODY. n. f. [from rhapsody.] One who writes without regular dependence of one part upon another.

Ask our rhapsodist, if you have nothing but the excellence and loveliness of virtue to preach, and no future rewards or punishments, how many vicious wretches will you ever reclaim. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

RHAPSODY. n. f. [ῥαψωδία; ῥαψωδία, to sew, and ὄδῳ, a song.] Any number of parts joined together, without necessary dependence or natural connection.

Such a deed, as sweet religion makes
A rhapsody of words. Shakefp. Hamlet.

This confusion and rhapsody of difficulties was not to be supposed in each single sinner. Hammond.

He, that makes no reflexions on what he reads, only loads his mind with a rhapsody of tales fit for the entertainment of others. Locke.

The words slide over the ears, and vanish like a rhapsody of evening tales. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

RHETORICK. n. f. [ῥητορικὴ; rhētorikē, Fr.]
1. The act of speaking not merely with propriety, but with art and elegance.

We could not allow him an orator, who had the best thoughts, and who knew all the rules of rhetorique, if he had not acquired the art of using them. Dryden's Duffresney.

Of the passions, and how they are moved, Aristotle, in his second book of rhetorick, hath admirably discoursed in a little compass. Locke's Thoughts on Reading.

Grammar teacheth us to speak properly, rhetorick instructs to speak elegantly. Baker's Reflections on Learning.

RHO

2. The power of persuasion; oratory.
The heart's still rhetoric, diſcled with eyes. Shakeſp.
His ſober lips then did he ſoftly part,
Whence of pure rhetoric whole ſtreams outflow. Fairfax.
Enjoy your dear wit and gay rhetoric,
That hath ſo well been taught her dazzling fence. Milton.
RHETORICAL, adj. [rhetoricus, Lat. from rhetorick.] Pertaining to rhetoric; oratorical; figurative.
The apprehenſion is ſo deeply riveted into my mind, that rhetorical flouriſhes cannot at all looſen it. More.
Because Brutus and Caſſius met a blackmore, and Pompey had on a dark garment at Phariſalia, theſe were preſages of their overthrow, which notwithstanding are ſcarce rhetorical ſequels; concluding metaphors from realities, and from conceptions metaphorical inferring realities again. Brown.
The ſubject moral, logical, or rhetorical, which does not come under our ſenſes. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.
RHETORICALLY, adv. [from rhetorical.] Like an orator; figuratively; with intent to move the paſſions.
TO RHETORICATE, v. n. [rhetorico, low Lat. from rhetorick.] To play the orator; to attack the paſſions.
I will be much more ſeaſonable to reform, than apologize or rhetorate; not to ſuffer themſelves to periſh in the miſt of ſuch ſolicitations to be ſaved. Decay of Piety.
RHETORICIAN, n. f. [rhetorician, Fr. rhetor, Lat.] One who teaches the ſcience of rhetoric.
The ancient ſophiſts and rhetoricians, which ever had young auditors, lived till they were an hundred years old. Bacon.
'Tis the buſineſs of rhetoricians to treat the characters of the paſſions. Dryden's Duſſenay.
A man may be a very good rhetorician, and yet at the ſame time a mean orator. Baker's Reflections on Learning.
RHETORICIAN, adj. Suited a maſter of rhetoric.
Boldly preſum'd with rhetorician pride,
To hold of any queſtion either ſide. Blackmore.
RHEUM, n. f. [ῥέυμα; rheume, Fr.] A thin watery matter ooſing through the glands, chiefly about the mouth. Quincy.
I truſt not thoſe cunning waters of his eyes;
For villainy is not without ſuch a rheum;
And he long traded in it, makes it ſeem
Like rivers of remorſe. Shakeſp.
You did void your rheum upon my beard. Shakeſp.
Why holds thine eye that lamentable rheum,
Like a proud river peering o'er his bounds. Shakeſp.
Each changing ſeaſon does its poiſon bring,
Rheum chill the winter, agues blaſt the ſpring. Prior.
RHEUMATICK, adj. [ῥευματικὸς; from rheum.] Proceeding from rheum or a peccant watry humour.
The moon, the governers of floods,
Pale in her anger, waſhes all the air,
That rheumatick diſeaſes do abound. Shakeſp.
The blood taken away looked very ſiſy or rheumatick. Floy.
RHEUMATISM, n. f. [ῥευματισμός; rheumatisme, Fr. rheumatismus, Lat.] A painful diſtemper ſuppoſed to proceed from acrid humours.
Rheumatism is a diſtemper affecting chiefly the membrana communis muſculorum, which it makes rigid and unfit for motion; and it ſeems to be occaſioned almoſt by the ſame cauſes, as the muſcliculous glands in the joints are rendered ſtiff and gritty in the gout. Quincy.
The throding quincey 'tis my ſtar appoints,
And rheumatism I ſend to rack the joints. Dryden.
RHEUMY, adj. [from rheum.] Full of ſharp moiſture.
Is Brutus lick?
And will he ſeal out of his whoſome bed,
To dare the vile contagion of the night?
And tempt the rheumy and unpurged air,
To add unto his ſickneſs. Shakeſp. Julius Ceſar.
The South he looſ'd, who night and horror brings,
And fogs are ſhaken from his ſlaggy wings;
From his divided beard two ſtreams he pours;
His head and rheumy eyes diſtil in thow'rs. Dryden.
RHINOCEROS, n. f. [ῥίς and κέρας; rhinocerot, Fr.] A vaſt beaſt in the Eaſt Indies armed with a horn in his front.
Approach thou like the rugged Ruſſian bear,
The arm'd rhinoceros, or Hyrcanian tyger;
Take any ſhape but that, and my firm nerves Shall never tremble. Shakeſp. Macbeth.
If you draw your beaſt in an emblem, ſlew a landſcape of the country natural to the beaſt; as to the rhinoceros an Eaſt Indian landſcape, the crocodile, an Egyptian. Peaſham.
RHOMB, n. f. [ῥόμβος, Fr. rhombus, Lat. ῥόμβος.] In geometry, a parallelogram or quadrangular figure, having its four ſides equal, and conſiſting of parallel lines, with two oppoſite angles acute, and two obtuſe: it is formed by two equal and right cones joined together at their baſe. Trevoux and Harris.
Save the ſun his labour, and that ſweet
Nocturnal and diurnal rhomb ſuppos'd
Inviſible elſe above all ſtars, the wheel
Of day and night. Milton.
See how in warlike muſter they appear,
In rhombs and wedges, and half moons and wings. Milton.
RHOMBICK, adj. [from rhomb.] Shaped like a rhomb,

RIB

- Many other forts of ſtones are regularly figured; the aſteria in form of a ſtar, and they are of a rhombick figure. Grew.
RHOMBOID, n. f. [ῥομβοειδής; rhomboides, Fr.] A figure approaching to a rhomb.
Many other forts of ſtones are regularly figured; and they are of a rhombick figure; talk, of ſuch as are rhomboid. Grew.
RHOMBOIDAL, adj. [from rhomboid.] Approaching in ſhape to a rhomb.
Another rhomboidal ſelenites of a compreſſed form, had many others inſixed round the middle of it. Woodward.
RHUBARB, n. f. [ῥαβάρβα, Lat.] A medicinal root ſlightly purgative, referred by botaniſts to the dock.
What rhubarb, fenna, or what purgative drug Would ſcour theſe Engliſh hence. Shakeſp. Macbeth.
Having fixed the fontanel, I purged him with an infusion of rhubarb in ſmall ale. Wiſeman's Surgery.
RHYME, n. f. [ῥυθμός; rhythme, Fr.]
1. A harmonical ſucceſſion of ſounds.
2. The conſonance of verſes; the correſpondence of the laſt found of one verſe to the laſt found or ſyllable of another.
The youth with ſongs and rhymes:
Some dance, ſome hale the rope. Denham.
For rhyme the rudder is of verſes,
With which like ſhips they ſteer their courſes. Hudibras.
Such was the news, indeed, but ſongs and rhymes
Prevail as much in theſe hard iron times;
As would a plump of trembling fowl, that riſe
Againſt an eagle ſouling from the ſkies. Dryden.
If Cupid throws a ſingle dart,
We make him wound the lover's heart;
But if he takes his bow and quiver,
'Tis ſure he muſt tranſfix the liver;
For rhyme with reaſon may diſpenſe,
And found has right to govern ſenſe. Prior.
3. Poetry; a poem.
All his manly power it did diſperſe,
As he were warmed with enchanted rhymes,
That oftentimes he quak'd. Fairy Queen, b. i.
Who would not ſing for Lycidas? he knew Himſelf to ſing, and build the lofty rhyme. Milton.
Now ſportive youth,
Carol inſonate rhymes with ſuſtaining notes,
And quaver inharmonious. Philips.
RHYME or reason. Number or ſenſe.
I was promiſ'd on a time,
To have reason for my rhyme;
But from that time into this ſeaſon,
I had neither rhyme nor reason. Spenser.
The guiltineſs of my mind drove the groſſeneſs of the ſup-perry into a received belief, in deſpite of the teeth of all rhyme and reason, that they were fairies. Shakeſp.
TO RHYME, v. n.
1. To agree in ſound.
He was too warm on picking work to dwell,
But forgot his notions as they fell,
And, if they rhym'd and rattled, all was well. Dryden.
2. To make verſes.
Theſe fellows of infinite tongue, that can rhyme themſelves into ladies favours, they do always reaſon themſelves out again. Shakeſp. Henry V.
There march'd the bard and blockhead, ſide by ſide,
Who rhym'd for hire, and patroniz'd for pride. Dunciad.
RHYMER, n. f. [from rhyme.] One who makes rhymes;
RHYMSTER, s. a verſifier; a poet in contempt.
Scall'd rhymers will ballad us out o' tune. Shakeſp.
It was made penal to the Engliſh, to permit the Iriſh to graze upon their lands, to entertain any of their miniſters, rhymers, or news-tellers. Darvies on Ireland.
Rhymer come on, and do the worſt you can;
I fear not you, nor yet a better man. Dryden.
His rhyme is conſtrained at an age, when the paſſion of love makes every man a rhymers, though not a poet. Dryden.
I ſpeak of thoſe who are only rhymers. Dennis.
So modern rhymers wiſely blaſt
The poetry of ages paſt,
And from its ruin build their own. Shakeſp.
RHYTHMICAL, adj. [ῥυθμικός; rhythmique, Fr. from rhyth- or rhythm.] Harmonical; having proportion of one ſound to another.
RIB, n. f. [ῥίβη, Saxon.] A bone in the body.
1. Of theſe there are twenty-four in number, viz. twelve on each ſide the twelve vertebrae of the back; they are ſegments of a circle; they grow flat and broad, as they approach the ſternum; but the nearer they are to the vertebrae, the rounder and thicker they are; at which end they have a round head, which, being covered with a cartilage, is received into the finus in the bodies of the vertebrae: the ribs, thus articulated, make an acute angle with the lower vertebrae: the ribs have each a ſmall canal or finus, which runs along their under ſides, in which lies a nerve, vein, and artery: their extremities, which are faſtened to the ſternum, are cartilaginous, and the cartilages make an obtuſe angle with the bony part of the ribs; this angle reſpects the head: the cartilages are harder

RIC

- harder in women than in men, that they may better bear the weight of their breasts: the ribs are of two ſorts; the ſeven upper are called true ribs, becauſe their cartilaginous ends are received into the finus of the ſternum: the five lower are called falſe ribs, becauſe they are loſer and ſhorter, of which only the firſt is joined to the extremity of the ſternum, the cartilaginous extremities of the reſt being tied to one another, and thereby leaving a greater ſpace for the dilatation of the ſtomach and intrails: the laſt of theſe ſhort ribs is ſhorter than all the reſt: it is not tied to them, but ſometimes to the muculoſus obliquus deſcendens. Quincy.
Why do I yield to that ſuggeſtion?
Whole horrid image doth upxiſh my hair,
And make my ſeated heart knock at my ribs,
Againſt the uſe of nature! Shakeſp. Macbeth.
He open'd my left ſide, and took
From thence a rib, with cordial ſpirits warm
And life blood ſtreaming freſh. Milton's Par. Loſt, b. viii.
He, who firſt the paſſage try'd,
In harden'd oak his heart did hide,
And ribs of iron arm'd his ſide,
Who tempted firſt the briny flood. Dryden's Horace.
2. Any piece of timber or other matter which ſtrengthens the ſide.
I ſhould not ſee the ſandy hour glaſs run,
But I ſhould think of ſhallows and of flats;
And ſee my wealthy Andrew dock'd in ſand,
Vailing his high top lower than her ribs,
To kiſs her burial. Shakeſp. Merchant of Venice.
RIBALD, n. f. [ribaldus, Fr. ribaldo, Italian.] A looſe, rough, mean, brutal wretch.
That lewd ribald, with vile luſt advanced,
Laid firſt his filthy hands on virgin clean,
To ſpoil her dainty corſe to fair and ſheen. Fairy Queen.
Your ribald nag of Egypt,
The breeze upon her, like a cow in June,
Hoſts ſails, and ſails. Shakeſp. Antony and Cleopatra.
The buſy day,
Wak'd by the lark, has rouſ'd the ribald crows,
And dreaming night will hide our joys no longer. Shakeſp.
Ne'er one ſprig of laurel grac'd theſe ribalds,
From flaſhing Bentley down to piddling Tibbalds. Pope.
RIBALDRY, n. f. [from ribald; ribaldie, old Fr.] Mean, lewd, brutal language.
Mr. Cowley aſſerts, that obſcenity has no place in wit;
Buckingham ſays, 'tis an ill ſort of wit, which has nothing more to ſupport it than bare-faced ribaldry. Dryden.
The ribaldry of the low characters is different; the reeve, miller, and cook are diſtinguiſhed from each other. Dryden.
In the ſame antique loom theſe ſcenes were wrought,
Embelliſh'd with good morals and juſt thought,
True nature in her nobleſt light you ſee,
E'er yet debauch'd by modern gallantry
To trifling jeſts and fulſom ribaldry. Granville.
If the outward profeſſion of religion were once in practice among men in office, the clergy would ſee their duty and interit in qualifying themſelves for lay-converſation, when once they were out of fear of being choaked by ribaldry or prophaneneſs. Swift.
RIBAND, n. f. [rubande, ruban, Fr.] A ſheet of ſilk; a narrow web of ſilk, which is worn for ornament.
Quaint in green, the ſhall be looſe enrob'd,
With ribbands pendent, flaſhing 'bout her head. Shakeſp.
A ribband did the braided trefles bind,
The reſt was looſe. Dryden's Knight's Tale.
See! in the liſts they wait the trumpets ſound;
Some love device is wrought on ev'ry ſword,
And ev'ry riband bears ſome myſtick word. Granville.
RIBBED, adj. [from rib.]
1. Furniſhed with ribs.
Was I by rocks engender'd? rib'd with ſteel?
Such tortures to reſiſt, or not to feel?
Hung on each bough a ſingle leaf appears,
Which thrive'll'd in its infancy remains,
Like a cloſ'd fan, nor ſtretches wide its veins,
But as the ſeaſons in their circle run,
Opeſ its ribb'd ſurface to the nearer ſun. Gay.
2. Incloſed as the body by ribs.
Remember
The nat'ral brav'ry of your iſle, which ſlands
As Neptune's park, ribb'd and pale'd in,
With rocks unſcaleable, and roaring waters. Shakeſp.
RIBBON, n. f. See RIBAND.
TO RIBBONAST, v. n. [rib and raſt.] To beat ſoundly. A burleſque word.
That done, he riſes, humbly bows,
And gives thanks for the princely blows;
Departs not meanly proud, and boaſting
Of his magnificent ribboning. Butler.
I have been pinched in beſth, and well ribbonged under my former maſters; but I'm in now for ſkin and all. L'Eſtrange.
RIBWORT, n. f. A plant.
RIC, n. f. Ric denotes a powerful, rich, or valiant man; as in theſe verſes of Fortunatus:

RIC

- Hilperice potens, ſi interpres barbarus adiſit,*
Adjutor fortiſ hoc quoque nomen habet.
Hilperic Barbarians a ſtout helper term.
So Alſric is altogether ſtrong; Æthelric, nobly ſtrong or powerful: to the ſame ſenſe as Polycrates, Crato, Plutar-chus, Opimius. Gibſon's Camden.
RICE, n. f. [oryza, Lat.] One of the eſculent grains: it hath its grains diſpoſed into a panicle, which are almoſt of an oval figure, and are covered with a thick huſk, ſomewhat like barley: this grain is greatly cultivated in moſt of the Eaſtern countries. Miller.
Rice is the food of two thirds of mankind; it is kindly to human conſtitutions, proper for the conſumptive, and thoſe ſubject to hemorrhages. Arbutnot.
If the ſnuſt get out of the ſnuſſers, it may fall into a diſh of rice milk. Swift's Directions to the Butler.
RICH, adj. [riche, Fr. rico, Italian; rica, Saxon.]
1. Wealthy; abounding in wealth; abounding in money or poſſeſſions; opulent.
I am as rich in having ſuch a jewel,
As twenty ſeas, if all their ſand were pearl. Shakeſp.
The rich ſhall not give more, and the poor no leſs. Exad.
A thief bent to unhoard the caſh
Of ſome rich burgher. Milton.
Several nations of the Americans are rich in land, and poor in all the comforts of life. Locke.
He may look upon the rich as benefactors, who have beautiful the proſpect all around him. Seed.
2. Valuable; eſtimable; precious; ſplendid; ſumptuous.
Earth, in her rich attire, Milton.
Conſummate lovely ſmil'd.
3. Having any ingredients or qualities in a great quantity or degree.
So we th' Arabian coaſt do know
At diſtance, when the ſpices blow,
By the rich odour taught to ſteer,
Though neither day nor ſtar appear. Waller.
If life be ſhort, it ſhall be glorious,
Each minute ſhall be rich in ſome great action. Rowe.
Sauces and rich ſpices are fetched from India. Baker.
4. Fertile; fruitful.
There are, who fondly ſtudious of increaſe,
Rich foreign mold on their ill-natur'd land Induce. Philips.
RICHED, adj. [from rich.] enriched. Obſolete.
Of all theſe bounds,
With ſhadowy foreſts, and with champions rich'd,
With plenteous rivers and wide ſkirted meads,
We make thee lady. Shakeſp. King Lear.
RICHES, n. f. [richesſes, Fr.]
1. Wealth; money or poſſeſſion.
The inſtrumentalneſs of riches to charity has rendered it neceſſary by laws to ſecure propriety. Hammond.
Chemiſts ſeek riches by tranſmutation and the great elixir. Sprat.
Riches do not conſiſt in having more gold and ſilver, but in having more in proportion than our neighbours, whereby we are enabled to procure to ourſelves a greater plenty of the conveniencies of life, than comes within their reach, who, ſharing the gold and ſilver of the world in a leſs proportion, want the means of plenty and power, and ſo are poorer. Locke.
What riches give us, let us firſt enquire, Meat, fire, and cloaths; what more? meat, cloaths, and fire. Pope.
2. Splendid ſumptuous appearance.
The riches of heav'n's pavement, trodden gold. Milton.
RICHLY, adv. [from rich.]
1. With riches; wealthily; ſplendidly; magnificently.
In Belmont is a lady richly left,
And ſhe is fair, of wondrous virtues. Shakeſp.
Women richly gay in gems. Milton.
2. Plenteouſly.
In animals, ſome ſmells are found more richly than in plants. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
After a man has ſtudied the laws of England, the reading the reports of adjudged caſes will richly improve him. Watts.
3. Truly; abundantly. An ironical uſe.
There is ſuch licentiouſneſs among the baſeſt of the people, that one would not be ſorry to ſee them beſtowing upon one another a chaſtiſement, which they ſo richly deſerve. Addiſon.
RICHNESS, n. f. [from rich.]
1. Opulence; wealth.
Of virtue you have left proof to the world;
And virtue is grateful with beauty and richneſs adorn'd. Sid.
2. Finery; ſplendour.
3. Fertility; fecundity; fruitfulneſs.
This town is famous for the richneſs of the ſoil. Addiſon.
4. Abundance or perfection of any quality.
I amuſed myſelf with the richneſs and variety of colours in the weſtern parts of heaven. Spectator.
5. Pampering qualities.
The lively tincture of whoſe guſhing blood
Shou'd clearly prove the richneſs of his food. Dryden.
RICK,

RID

RICK. n. f. See REEK.

1. A pile of corn or hay regularly heaped up in the open field, and sheltered from wet.

An inundation

O'erflowed a farmer's barn and stable;
Whole ricks of hay and stacks of corn
Were down the sudden current born.

Swift.

Mice and rats do great injuries in the field, houses, barns, and corn ricks.

Mortimer's Husbandry.

2. A heap of corn or hay piled by the gatherer.
In the North they bind them up in small bundles, and make small ricks of them in the field.

Mortimer's Husbandry.

RICKETS. n. f. [rachitis, Lat.] A name given to the distemper at its appearance by Gilsson.The rickets is a distemper in children, from an unequal distribution of nourishment, whereby the joints grow knotty, and the limbs uneven: its cure is performed by evacuation and friction.

Quincy.

In some years, liver-grown, spleen, and rickets are put altogether, by reason of their likeness.

Graunt's Bills of Mort.

O were my pupil fairly knock'd o' th' head,
I shou'd possess th' estate, if he were dead;

Dryden.

He's so far gone with the rickets and th' evil,
That one small dose will send him to the devil.

Dryden.

So when at school we first declaim,
Old Busby walks us in a theme;

Quincy.

Whose props support our infant vein,
And help the rickets in the brain;

Quincy.

But when our souls their force dilate,
Our thoughts grow up to wit's estate.

Prior.

RICKETS. adj. [from rickets.] Diseased with the rickets.In a young animal, when the solids are too lax, the case of rickets children, the diet should be gently astringent.

Arb.

RICKLES. n. f. A plant.

Ainsworth.

RICKLE. n. f. [rictura, Lat.] A gaping.

Dict.

RID. v. a. [from hæbban, Saxon.]

1. To let free; to redeem.

It is he that delivereth me from my cruel enemies; thou halt rid me from the wicked man.

Psalm xviii. 49.

Rid me, and deliver me out of great waters.

Psalm cxliv.

I will bring you out from under their burthens, and rid you out of their bondage.

Exodus vi. 6.

2. To clear; to disencumber.

They were not before so willing to be rid of their learned pastor, as now importunate to obtain him again from them, who had given him entertainment.

Hooker.

I must rid all the seas of pirates.

Shakespeare.

We'll use his countenance; which being done,
Let her, who would be rid of him, devise
His speedy taking off.

Shakespeare. King Lear.

Upon the word, slept forth
Three of thy crew, to rid thee of that care.

B. Johnson.

I can put on
Thy terrors, as I put thy mildness on,
Image of thee in all things; and shall soon,
Arm'd with thy might, rid heav'n of these rebell'd.

Milton.

Did faints for this bring in their plate;
For when they thought the cause had need on't,

Hudibras.

Happy was he that could be rid on't.

Hudibras.

The god uneasy till he slept again,
Relov'd at once to rid himself of pain.

Dryden.

At any rate we desire to be rid of the present evil, which we are apt to think nothing absent can equal.

Locke.

The greater visible good does not always raise men's desire, in proportion to the greatness it appears to have; though every little trouble moves us, and sets on work to get rid of it.

Locke.

The ladies asked, whether we believed that the men of any town would, at the same conjuncture, have loaden themselves with their wives; or rather, whether they would not have been glad of such an opportunity to get rid of them?

Addison.

The father, seeing himself entirely rid of Theodosius, was not very much concerned at the obstinate refusal of his daughter.

Addison's Spectator, N° 164.

3. To dispatch.

Having the best at Barnet field,
We'll thither straight; for willingness rids away.

Shakespeare.

4. To drive away; to press away; to destroy.

Ah deathmen! you have rid this sweet young prince.

Shakespeare.

RIDANCE. n. f. [from rid.]

1. Deliverance.

Deliverance from sudden death, ridance from all adversity, and the extent of saving mercy towards all men.

Hooker.

2. Disencumbrance; loss of something one is glad to lose.

I have too griev'd a heart
To take a tedious leave: thus losers part.

and made circular breadways like an half cylinder, whose diameter is about ten inches or more, and about half an inch and half a quarter in thickness, are laid upon the upper part or ridge of the roof, and also on the hips.

Moxon.

6. Ridges of a horse's mouth are wrinkles or ridings of the flesh in the roof of the mouth, running across from one side of the jaw to the other like fleshy ridges, with interjacent furrows or sinking cavities.

Farrier's Dict.

TO RIDGE. v. a. [from the noun.] To form a ridge.Thou from heav'n Feign'dst at thy birth was given thee in thy hair,
Where strength can least abide, though all thy hairs
Were bristles rang'd like those that ridge the back
Of chaf'd wild boars, or rust'd porcupines.

Milton.

RIDGLING. n. f. [reis, Saxon, Lat. Ans.] A ram half ridg'd, i. e. castrated.Tend my herd, and see them fed;
To morning pastures, evening waters led:
And 'wend the Libyan ridg'd's butting head.

Dryden.

Tend them well, and see them fed
In pastures fresh, and to their watering led;
And 'wend the ridg'd's butting head.

Dryden.

RIDGELY. adj. [from ridge.] Rising in a ridge.Far in the sea against the foaming shore,
There stands a rock, the raging billows roar
Above his head in storms; but when 'tis clear,
Uncurl their ridgy backs, and at his feet appear.

Dryden.

RIDICULE. n. f. [ridicule, Fr. ridiculum, Lat.] Wit of that species that provokes laughter.Sacred to ridicule his whole life long,
And the sad burthen of some merry song.
Touch'd and sham'd by ridicule alone.

Pope.

Those, who aim at ridicule,
Should fix upon some certain rule,
Which fairly hints they are in jest.

Pope.

TO RIDICULE. v. a. [from the noun.] To expose to laughter; to treat with contemptuous merriment.I with the vein of ridiculing all that is serious and good may have no worse effect upon our state, than knight errantry had on theirs.

Temple.

He often took a pleasure to appear ignorant, that he might the better turn to ridicule those that valued themselves on their books.

Addison on Medals.

RIDICULOUS. adj. [ridicul, Fr. ridiculus, Lat.] Worthy of laughter; exciting contemptuous merriment.Thus was the building left Ridiculous; and the work confusion nam'd.

in his power not to be ridiculous.

South.

RIF

RIBICULOUSLY. adv. [from ridiculous.] In a manner worthy of laughter or contempt.Epicurus's discourse concerning the original of the world is so ridiculously merry, that the design of his philosophy was pleasure and not instruction.

South.

RIDICULOUSNESS. n. f. [from ridiculous.] The quality of being ridiculous.What sport do Tertullian, Minucius and Arnobius make with the images consecrated to divine worship? from the meanness of the matter they are made, the casualties of fire, and rottenness they are subject to, on purpose to represent the ridiculousness of worshipping such things.

Stillfleet.

RIDING. particip. adj. Employed to travel on any occasion.It is provided by another provincial constitution, that no suffragan bishop shall have more than one riding apparitor, and that archdeacons shall not have so much as one riding ap-paritor, but only a foot messenger.

Ayliffe's Paragon.

RIDING. n. f. [from ride.] A district visited by an officer.RIDINGCOAT. n. f. [riding and coat.] A coat made to keep out weather.When you carry your master's ridingcoat in a journey, wrap your own in it.

RIDINGHOOD. n. f. [riding and hood.] A hood used by women, when they travel, to bear off the rain.The pallium was like our ridinghood, and served both for a tunic and a coat.

Arbutnot on Coins.

Good housewives all the winter's rage despise,
Defended by the ridinghood's disguise.

Gay.

RIF. n. f. An elegant grain. The flowers have no leaves, but consist of several stamina, produced from the flower-cup; these flowers are collected into a small spike, and are disposed almost singly: from the flower-cup arises the pointal, afterward an oblong slender seed inclosed in an husk, which was before the flower-cup: this differs from wheat in having a flatter spike, the corn larger and more naked.

Miller.

RIFE. adj. [rype, Saxon; rijf, Dutch.] Prevalent; prevailing; abounding. It is now only used of epidemical distempers.While those restless desires, in great men rife,
To visit low folks did much disdain,

Sid.

This while, though poor, they in themselves did reign.

Sid.

Guyon closely did await Avantage; whilst his foe did rage most rife;
Sometimes athwart, sometimes he strook him straight,
And felled oft his blows.

Fairy Queen, b. ii.

The plague was then rife in Hungary.

Kneller.

Blessings then are plentiful and rife,
More plentiful than hope.

Herbert.

Space may produce new worlds; whereof so rife
There went a fame in heav'n, that he ere long Intended to create.

Milton's Paradise Lost, b. i.

This is the place,
Whence ev'n now the tumult of loud mirth
Was rife, and perfect in my list'ning ear.

Milton.

That grounded maxim
So rife and celebrated in the mouths
Of wisest men, that to the publick good
Private respects must yield.

Milton.

RIG

They have an idle tradition, that a misel bird, feeding upon a seed she cannot digest, expelleth it whole; which, falling upon a bough of a tree that hath some rift, putteth forth the miseltoe.

Either tropick
'Gan thunder, and both ends of heav'n; the clouds
From many a horrid rift abortive pour'd
Pierce rain, with lightning mixt.
Some pick out bullets from the vessels sides,
Some drive old oakum through each seam and rift.
To the dread rattling thunder
Have I giv'n fire, and rifted Jove's stout oak
With his own bolt.
At sight of him the people with a shout
Rifted the air.
On rifted rocks, the dragon's late abodes,
The green reeds trembles.

To RIFT, v. n.

1. To burst; to open.
I'd shriek, that even your ears
Should rift to hear me.
Some trees are best for ship-timber, as oaks that grow in moist grounds; for that maketh the timber tough, and not apt to rift with ordnance.

When ice is congealed in a cup, it will swell instead of contracting, and sometimes rift.
2. [Raver, Danish.] To belch; to break wind.
RIG, n. f. Rig, ridge, seem to signify the top of a hill falling on each side; from the Saxon, hrygg; and the Islandick, hryggur, both signifying a back.

To RIG, v. a. [from rig or ridge, the back.]
1. To dress; to accoutre. Cloaths are proverbially said to be for the back, and victuals for the belly.
Jack was rigged out in his gold and silver lace, with a feather in his cap; and a pretty figure he made in the world.

2. To fit with tackling.
He, like a foolish pilot, hath shipwreck'd
My vessel gloriously rigg'd.
The finner shall set forth like a ship launched into the wide sea, not only well built and rigged; but also carried on with full wind.
He bids them rig the fleet.
He rigged out another small fleet, and the Achæans engaged him with theirs.

RIGADON, n. f. [rigadon, French.] A dance.
RIGATION, n. f. [rigatio, Lat.] The act of watering.
RIGGER, n. f. [from rig.] One that rigs or dresses.
RIGGING, n. f. [from rig.] The sails or tackling of a ship.

To plow the deep,
To make fit rigging, or to build a ship.
His batter'd rigging their whole war receives;
All bare, like some old oak with tempests bent,
He stands, and fees below his scatter'd leaves.
RIGGISH, adj. [from rig, an old word for a whore.] Wanton; whorish.

Vilest things
Become themselves in her, that the holy priests
Bless her, when she is riggish.
To RIGGLE, v. a. [properly to wriggle.] To move backward and forward, as shrinking from pain.

RIGHT, adj. [from right, Dutch; ritto, Italian; rectus, Latin.]
1. Fit; proper; becoming; suitable; true; not erroneous; not wrong.

How forcible are right words! but what doth your arguing reprove?
The words of my mouth are plain to him that understandeth, and right to them that find knowledge.
The Lord God led me in the right way.
There being no law of nature, nor positive law of God, that determines which is the right heir in all cases, the right of succession could not have been certainly determined.
If there be no prospect beyond the grave, the inference is certainly right, let us eat and drink, for to-morrow we die.

Our calendar wants to be reformed, and the equinox rightly computed; and being once reformed and set right, it may be kept so, by omitting the additional day at the end of every hundred and thirty-four years.

A time there will be, when all these unequal distributions of good and evil shall be set right, and the wisdom of all his transactions made as clear as the noon-day.

2. Not mistaken; passing a true judgement; passing judgement according to the truth of things.
You are right, justice and you weigh this well;
Therefore still bear the balance and the sword.

3. Just; honest; equitable.
Their heart was not right with him, neither were they steadfast in his covenant.

RIG

4. Happy; convenient.

The lady has been disappointed on the right side, and found nothing more disagreeable in the husband, than she discovered in the lover.

5. Not left.
It is not with that certainty to be received, what is believed concerning the right and left hand, that men naturally make use of the right, and that the use of the other is a digression.

The left foot naked, when they march to fight,
But in a bull's raw hide they sheathe the right.

6. Strait; not crooked.
The idea of a right lined triangle necessarily carries with it an equality of its angles to two right ones.

7. Perpendicular.
RIGHT, interj. An expression of approbation.
Right, cries his lordship, for a rogue in need
To have a taste, is infolence indeed:
In me 'tis noble, suits my birth and state.

RIGHT, adv.
1. Properly; justly; exactly; according to truth.
Then shall the right aiming thunder-bolts go abroad, and from the clouds, as from a well-drawn bow, shall they fly to the mark.
With strict discipline instructed right,
Have learn'd to use your arms before you fight.

Take heed you steer your vessel right, my son,
This calm of heaven, this mermaid's melody,
Into an unseen whirlpool draws you fast,
And in a moment sucks you.

To understand political power right, and derive it from its original, we must consider what state all men are naturally in, and that is a state of perfect freedom to order their actions, and dispose of their possessions and persons.

2. In a direct line.
Let thine eyes look right on, and let thine eyelids look straight before thee.
Ye shall be driven out right forth, and none shall gather up him that wandereth.
The people passed over right against Jericho.
Insects have voluntary motion, and therefore imagination; for ants go right forwards to their hills, and bees know the way from a flowery heath to their hives.

This way, right down to Paradise descend.
3. In a great degree; very. Now obsolete.
I gat me to my Lord right humbly.

Right noble princes,
I'll acquaint our duteous citizens.
Pardon us the interruption
Of thy devotion and right christian zeal,
I cannot joy, until I be resolv'd
Where our right valiant is become.

God shall help her right early.
The senate will smart deep
For your upbraidings: I should be right sorry
To have the means so to be veng'd on you,
As I shall shortly on them.

Right many a widow his keen blade,
And many fatherless, had made.

4. It is still used in titles: as, right honourable; right reverend.
I mention the right honourable Thomas Howard lord high marshal.

RIGHT, n. f.
1. Justice; not wrong.
Persons of noble blood are less envied in their rising; for it seemeth but right done to their birth.

In the midst of your invectives, do the Turks this right, as to remember that they are no idolaters.

One rising, eminent
In wise deport, spake much of right and wrong,
Of justice, of religion, truth, and peace,
And judgement from above.

Long love to her has borne the faithful knight,
And well deserv'd, had fortune done him right.
He, that would do right to religion, cannot take a more effectual course, than by reconciling it with the happiness of mankind.

2. Freedom from error.
Seldom your opinions err;
Your eyes are always in the right.

3. Just claim.
The Roman citizens were, by the sword, taught to acknowledge the pope their lord, though they knew not by what right.

The proud tyrant would many times say, that whatsoever belonged unto the empire of Rome, was of right his, for as much as he was possessed of the imperial scepter, which his great grandfather Mahomet had by law of arms won from Constantine.

Subdue by force, all who refuse
Right reason for their law; and for their king
Messiah, who by right of merit reigns.

RIG

My right to it appears.
By long possession of eight hundred years.
The Might and right are inseparable in the opinion of the world.

Descriptions, figures, and fables must be in all heroic poems; every poet hath as much right to them, as every man hath to air.

Judah pronounced sentence of death against Thamar: our author thinks it is very good proof, that because he did it, therefore he had a right to do it.

Agrippa is generally ranged in sets of medals among the emperors; as some among the empresses have no other right.
4. That which justly belongs to one.
To thee doth the right of her appertain, seeing thou only art of her kindred.

The custom of employing these great persons in all great offices, passes for a right.
The pris'ner freed himself by nature's laws,
Born free, he sought his right.

5. Property; interest.
A subject in his prince may claim a right,
Nor suffer him with strength impair'd to fight.

6. Power; prerogative.
God hath a sovereign right over us, as we are his creatures, and by virtue of this right, he might, without injustice, have imposed difficult tasks: but in making laws, he hath not made use of this right.

7. Immunity; privilege.
The citizens,
Let them but have their rights, are ever forward
In celebration of this day with feasts.

Their only thoughts and hope was to defend their own rights and liberties, due to them by the law.
8. The side not left.

On his right
The radiant image of his glory sat,
His only son.

9. To RIGHTS. In a direct line; straight.
These strata failing, the whole tract sinks down to rights into the abyss, and is swallowed up by it.

10. To RIGHTS. Deliverance from error.
Several have gone about to inform them, and set them to rights; but for want of that knowledge of the present system of nature, have not given the satisfaction expected.

To RIGHT, v. a. To do justice; to establish in possessions justly claimed; to relieve from wrong.
How will this grieve you,
When you shall come to clearer knowledge, that
You thus have publish'd me? gentle my lord,
You scarce can right me thoroughly.

If the injured person be not righted, every one of them is wholly guilty of the injustice, and bound to restitution.
I could not expedient see,
On this side death, to right our family.

Make my father known,
To right my honour, and redeem your own.

RIGHTEOUS, adj. [substantive, Saxon; whence rightwise in old authors, and rightwisely in bishop Fisher: so much are words corrupted by pronunciation.]
1. Just; honest; virtuous; uncorrupt.
That far be from thee, to slay the righteous with the wicked; and that the righteous should be as the wicked: Gen.

2. Equitable.
Kill my rival too; for he no less
Deserves; and I thy righteous doom will bless.

RIGHTEOUSLY, adv. [from righteous.] Honestly; virtuously.
Athens did righteously decide,
When Phocion and when Socrates were try'd;
As righteously they did those dooms repent,
Still they were wise, whatever way they went.

RIGHTEOUSNESS, n. f. [from righteous.] Justice; honesty; virtue; goodness.
The scripture, ascribing to the persons of men righteousness, in regard of their manifold virtues, may not be construed, as though it did thereby clear them from all faults.

Here wretched Phlegias warns the world with cries,
Cou'd warning make the world more just or wise;
Learn righteousness, and dread th' avenging deities.

RIGHTFUL, adj. [from right and full.]
1. Having the right; having the just claim.
As in this haughty great attempt,
They laboured to supplant the rightful heir;
I lost my liberty, and they their lives.

Some will mourn in ashes, some coal black,
For the despoiling of a rightful king.

2. Honest; just.
Nor would, for gold or fee,
Be won, their rightful causes down to tread.

Gather all the smiling hours;
Such as with friendly care have guarded
Patriots and kings in rightful wars.

RIG

RIGHTFULLY, adv. [from rightful.] According to right; according to justice.

Henry, who claimed by succession, was sensible that his title was not found, but was rightfully in Mortimer, who had married the heir of York.

RIGHT-HAND, n. f. Not the left.
The rank of officers, by the murmuring stream,
Left on your right-hand brings you to the place.

RIGHTFULNESS, n. f. [from rightful.] Moral rectitude.
But still although we fail of perfect rightfulness,
Seek we to tame these superfluities,
Nor wholly wink though void of purest fightfulness.

RIGHTLY, adv. [from right.]
1. According to truth; properly; suitably; not erroneously.
Each of his reign allotted, rightly call'd
Pow'rs of fire, air, water, and earth beneath.

Descend from heav'n, Urania! by that name
If rightly thou art call'd.

For glory done
Of triumph, to be styl'd great conquerors,
Patrons of mankind, gods, and sons of gods;
Destroyers rightly call'd, and plagues of men.

A man can never have so certain a knowledge, that a proposition, which contradicts the clear principles of his own knowledge, was divinely revealed, or that he understands the words rightly, wherein it is delivered; as he has, that the contrary is true.

Is this a bridal or a friendly feast?
Or from their deeds I rightly may divine,
Unseemly flown with insolence or wine.

2. Honestly; uprightly.
Let not my jealousies be your dishonour;
You may be rightly just, whatever I shall think.

3. Exactly.
Should I grant, thou didst not rightly see;
Then thou wert first deceiv'd.

4. Straitly; directly.
We with one end; but differ in order and way, that leadeth rightly to that end.

RIGHTNESS, n. f. [from right.]
1. Conformity to truth; exemption from being wrong; rectitude.
It is not necessary for a man to be assured of the rightness of his conscience, by such an infallible certainty of persuasion, as amounts to the clearness of a demonstration; but it is sufficient if he knows it upon grounds of such a probability, as shall exclude all rational grounds of doubting.

Like brute beasts we travel with the herd, and are never so solicitous for the rightness of the way, as for the number or figure of our company.

2. Straitness.
Sounds move strongest in a right line, which nevertheless is not caused by the rightness of the line, but by the shortness of the distance.

RIGID, adj. [rigide, Fr. rigidus, Latin.]
1. Stiff; not to be bent; unpliant.
A body, that is hollow, may be demonstrated to be more rigid and inflexible, than a solid one of the same substance and weight.

2. Severe; inflexible.
His severe judgment giving law,
His modest fancy kept in awe;
As rigid husbands jealous are,
When they believe their wives too fair.

3. Sharp; cruel. It is used somewhat harshly by Phillips.
Queen of this universe! do not believe
Those rigid threats of death; ye shall not die.

Cressy plains
And Agincourt, deep ting'd with blood, confess
What the Silures vigour unwitthood
Could do in rigid fight.

RIGIDITY, n. f. [rigiditas, Fr. from rigid.]
1. Stiffness.
Rigidity is said of the solids of the body, when, being stiff or impliable, they cannot readily perform their respective offices; but a fibre is said to be rigid, when its parts so strongly cohere together, as not to yield to that action of the fluids, which ought to overcome their resistance in order to the preservation of health: it is to be remedied by fomentations.

Rigidity of the organs is such a state as makes them resist that expansion, which is necessary to carry on the vital functions: rigidity of the vessels and organs must necessarily follow from the rigidity of the fibres.

2. Stiffness of appearance; want of easy or airy elegance.
This severe observation of nature, by the one in her comeliness, and by the other in her absolute forms, must needs produce in both a kind of rigidity, and consequently more naturalness than gracefulness.

RIGIDLY, adv. [from rigid.]
1. Stiffly; unpliantly.
2. Severely; inflexibly.

RIGIDNESS, n. f. [from rigid.] Severity; inflexibility.

RIGID.

RIM

- RIGLET. n. f. [regulet, Fr.] A flat thin square piece of wood. Thus the pieces that are intended to make the frames for pictures, before they are molded, are called riglets. Mox.
- RIGOL. n. f. A circle. Used in Shakespeare for a diadem. This sleep is found; this is a sleep. That, from this golden rigol, hath divorc'd So many English kings. Shakefp. Henry IV.
- RIGOUR. n. f. [rigor, Latin.]
1. Cold; stiffness. The rest his look Bound with Gorgonian rigour, not to move. Milton.
  2. A convulsive shuddering with sense of cold. A right regimen, during the rigor or cold fit in the beginning of a fever, is of great importance; a long continued rigor is a sign of a strong disease: during the rigor, the circulation is less quick, and the blood actually stagnates in the extremities, and, pressing upon the heart, may produce concretions; therefore a rigor increaseth an inflammation. Arb.
  3. Severity; sternness; want of condescension to others. Nature has got the victory over passion, all his rigour is turned to grief and pity. Denham's Sophy. Rigour makes it difficult for sliding virtue to recover. Clarif.
  4. Severity of conduct. Does not looseness of life, and a want of necessary sobriety in some, drive others into rigors that are unnecessary? Sprat. This prince lived in this convent, with all the rigor and austerity of a capuchin. Addison's Remarks on Italy.
  5. Strictness; unabated exactness. It may not seem hard, if in cases of necessity certain profitable ordinances sometimes be relaxed, rather than all men always strictly bound to the general rigor thereof. Hooker. Heat and cold are not, according to philosophical rigour, the essentials; but are names expressing our passions. Glanvill. The base degenerate age requires Severity and justice in its rigour: This awes an impious bold offending world. Addison.
  6. Rage; cruelty; fury. He at his foe with furious rigour smites, That strongest oak might seem to overthrow; The stroke upon his shield so heavy lights, That to the ground it doubleth him full low. Fairy Queen. Driven by the necessities of the times and the temper of the people, more than led by his own disposition to any height and rigour of actions. King Charles.
  7. Hardness; not flexibility; solidity; not softness. The stones the rigor of their kind expel, And supple into softness as they fell. Dryden.
- RIGOROUS. adj. [from rigour.] Severe; allowing no abatement. He shall be thrown down the Tarpeian rock With rigorous hands; he hath resisted law, And therefore law shall scorn him further trial, Than the severity of publick power. Shakefp. Coriolanus. Are these terms hard and rigorous, beyond our capacities to perform? Rogers's Sermons.
- RIGOROUSLY. adv. [from rigorous.] Severely; without tenderness or mitigation. Left they faint At the sad sentence rigorously urg'd, For I behold them soften'd, and with tears Bewailing their excess, all terror hide. Milton. The people would examine his works more rigorously than himself, and would not forgive the least mistake. Dryden.
- RILL. n. f. [riulus, Lat.] A small brook; a little streamlet. May thy brimmed waves from this Their full tribute never miss, From a thousand petty rills, That tumble down the snowy hills. Milton.
- TO RILL. v. n. [from the noun.] To run in small streams. Io! Apollo, mighty king, let envy, Ill-judging and verbose, from Lethe's lake, Draw tuns unmeasurable; while thy favour Administers to my ambitious thirst The wholesome draught from Aganippe's spring Genuine, and with soft murmurs gently rilling Adown the mountains where thy daughters haunt. Prior.
- RILLET. n. f. [corrupted from riulet.] A small stream. A creek of Ose, between two hills, delivering a little fresh rillet into the sea. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.
- RIM. n. f. [rima, Saxon.]
1. A border; a margin. It keeps of the same thickness near its centre; while its figure is capable of variation towards the rim. Grew.
  2. That which encircles something else. We may not affirm, that ruptures are confinable unto one side, as the peritoneum or rim of the belly may be broke; or its perforations relaxed in either. Brown's Vulgar Errors. The drum-maker uses it for rims. Motimer's Husbandry.
- RIME. n. f. [hym, Saxon.]
1. Hoar frost. Breathing upon a glass giveth a dew; and in rime frosts you shall find drops of dew upon the inside of glass windows. Bacon's Natural History.

RIN

- In a hoar frost, a rime, is a multitude of quadrangular prisms piled without any order one over another. Grew.
2. [Rima, Lat.] A hole; a chink. Though birds have no epiglottis, yet can they contract the rime or chink of their larynx, so as to prevent the admission of wet or dry indigested. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
- TO RIME. v. n. [from the noun.] To freeze with hoar frost. TO RIMPLE. v. a. To pucker; to contract into corrugations. See CRUMPLE and RUMPLE. The skin was tense, also rimpled and blistered. Wifeman.
- RIMY. adj. [from rime.] Steamy; foggy; misty. The air is now cold, hot, dry, or moist; and then thin, thick, foggy, rimy, or poisonous. Harvey.
- RIND. n. f. [rinb, Saxon; rinde, Dutch.] Bark; husk. Therewith a piteous yelling voice was heard, Crying, O spare with guilty hands to tear My tender sides in this rough rind embard. Fairy Queen. Within the infant rind of this small flower Poison hath residence, and medicine power. Shakefp. These plants are neither red nor polished, when drawn out of the water, till their rind have been taken off. Boyl. Others whose fruit, burnish'd with golden rind, Hung amiable. Milton's Paradise Lost. Thou can't not touch the freedom of this mind With all thy charms, although this corporal rind Thou hast immanac'd. Milton. This monument, thy maiden beauty's due, High on a plane-tree shall be hung to view; On the smooth rind the passenger shall see Thy name engrav'd, and worship Helen's tree. Dryden.
- TO RIND. v. n. [from the noun.] To decorticate; to bark; to husk.
- RING. n. f. [hjung, Saxon.]
1. A circle; an orbicular line. In this habit Met I my father with his bleeding rings, Their precious gems new lost. Shakefp. Bubbles of water, before they began to exhibit their colours to the naked eye, have appeared through a prism girded about with many parallel and horizontal rings. Newton.
  2. A circle of gold or some other matter worn as an ornament. A quarrel. — About a hoop of gold, a paltry ring. Shakefp. I have seen old Roman rings to very thick about, and with such large stones in them, that 'tis no wonder a top should reckon them a little cumbersome in the summer. Addison.
  3. A circle of metal to be held by. The rings of iron, that on the doors were hung, Sent out a jarring sound, and harshly rung. Some eagle got the ring of my box in his beak, with an intent to let it fall, and devour it. Gulliver.
  4. A circular course. Chaste Diana, Goddess presiding o'er the rapid race, Place me, O place me in the dusty ring, Where youthful charioteers contend for glory. Smith.
  5. A circle made by persons standing round. Make a ring about the corps of Cæsar, And let me shew you him, that made the will. Shakefp. The Italians, perceiving themselves almost environed, cast themselves into a ring, and retired back into the city. Hayw. Round my arbour a new ring they made, And footed it about the secret shade. Dryden.
  6. A number of bells harmonically tuned. A squirrel spends his little rage, In jumping round a rowling cage; The cage as either side turn'd up, Striking a ring of bells a-top. Prior.
  7. The sound of bells or any other sonorous body. Stop the holes of a hawk's bell, it will make no ring, but a flat noise or rattle. Hawks bells, that have holes, give a greater ring, than if the pellet did strike upon brads in the open air. Bacon. Sullen Moloch fled, Hath left in shadows dread His burning idol all of blackest hue; In vain with cymbals rings, They call the grilly king. Milton.
  8. A found of any kind. The king, full of confidence, as he had been victorious in battle, and had prevailed with his parliament, and had the ring of acclamations fresh in his ears, thought the rest of his reign should be but play. Bacon's Henry VII.
- TO RING. v. a. pret. and part. pass. ring. [hjungan, Saxon.]
1. To strike bells or any other sonorous body, so as to make it sound. I 'gin to be awarey of the fun; Ring the alarm bell. Shakefp. Macbeth.
  2. [From ring.] To encircle. Talbot, Who, ring'd about with bold adversity, Cries out for noble York and Somerset. Shakefp. Hen. VI.

RIN

3. To fit with rings. Death, death; oh amiable lovely death! Thou odoriferous stench, found rottenness, Arise forth from thy couch of lasting night, Thou hate and terror to prosperity, And I will kiss thy detestable bones, And put my eye-balls in thy vaulty brows, And ring these fingers with thy household worms. Shakefp.
  4. To refrain a hog by a ring in his nose. TO RING. v. n.
  1. To found as a bell or sonorous metal. Ring out ye crystal spheres, And let your silver chime Move in melodious time; And let the base of heav'n's deep organ blow. Milton. No funeral rites nor man in mournful weeds, Nor mournful bell shall ring her burial. Shakefp. Easy it might be to ring other changes upon the same bells. Norris's Miscellanies. At Latagus a weighty stone he flung; His face was flatted, and his helmet rung. Dryden.
  2. To practise the art of making musick with bells. Signs for communication may be contrived at pleasure: four bells admit twenty-four changes in ringing; each change may, by agreement, have a certain signification. Holder.
  3. To found; to resound. Hercules, missing his page, called him by his name aloud, that all the ring rang of it. The particular ringing found in gold, distinct from the found of other bodies, has no particular name. Locke. With sweeter notes each rising temple rung, A Raphael painted! and a Vida sung! Pope.
  4. To utter as a bell. Ere to black Hecat's fummons The shard-born beetle, with his drowy hums, Hath rung night's yawning peal, there shall be done A deed of dreadful note. Shakefp. Macbeth.
  5. To tinkle. My ears still ring with noise; I'm vex'd to death: Tongue-kill'd, and have not yet recover'd breath. Dryden.
  6. To be filled with a bruit or report. That profane, atheistical, epicurean rabble, whom the whole nation for rings of, are not indeed, what they vote themselves, the wisest men in the world. South.
- RING-BONE. n. f. Ring-bone is a hard callous substance growing in the hollow circle of the little pattern of a horse, just above the coronet: it sometimes goes quite round like a ring, and thence it is called the ring-bone. Farrier's Dictionary.

It fits us therefore ripely;
Our chariots and our horsemen be in readiness. Shakefp.
To RIPE. v. n. [from ripe.] To grow ripe.
This is the state of man; to-day he puts forth
The tender leaves of hopes, to-morrow blossoms,
And bears his blushing honours thick upon him;
The third day comes a frost, a killing frost;
And when he thinks, good easy man, full surely
His greatness is a ripening, nips his root;
And then he falls as I do. Shakefp. Henry VIII.
Afore the four grape is ripening in the flower. Is. xviii. 5.
The pricking of a fruit, before it ripeneth, ripens the fruit more suddenly. Bacon's Natural History.
Trees, that ripen latest, blossom soonest; as peaches and cornelians; and it is a work of providence that they blossom so soon; for otherwise they could not have the sun long enough to ripen. Bacon's Natural History.
Melons on beds of ice are taught to bear,
And strangers to the sun yet ripen here. Granville.
To RIPE. v. a. To mature; to make ripe.
My father was no traitor;
And that I'll prove on better men than Somerset,
Were growing time once ripen'd to my will. Shakefp.
When to ripen'd manhood he shall grow,
The greedy sailor shall the seas forego. Dryden.
That I settled
Your father in his throne, was for your sake,
I left th' acknowledgment for time to ripen. Dryden.
The genial sun
Has daily, since his course begun,
Rejoiced the metal to refine,
And ripen'd the Peruvian mine. Addison.
Be this the cause of more than mortal hate,
The rest succeeding times shall ripen into fate. Pope.
Here elements have lost their uses;
Air ripens not, nor earth produces. Swift.

No more shall nation against nation rise,
Nor ardent warriors meet with hateful eyes. Pope.
15. To be roused; to be excited to action.
Who will rise up for me against evil-doers? or who will stand up for me against the workers of iniquity? Pf. xciv.
Gather together, come against, and rise up to the battle. Jer.
He shall rise up at the voice of the bird, and all the daughters of musick shall be brought low. Ecl. xii. 4.
16. To make hostile attack.
If any man hate his neighbour, lie in wait, and rise up against him, and smite him mortally, and sleeth into one of these cities, the elders of his city shall fetch him thence. Deut.
17. To grow more or greater in any respect.
A hideous gable rises loud
Among the builders. Milton.
The great duke rises on them in his demands, and will not be satisfied with less than a hundred thousand crowns, and a solemn embassy to beg pardon. Addison's Remarks on Italy.
18. To increase in price.
Bullion is risen to six shillings and five pence the ounce; i. e. that an ounce of uncoined silver will exchange for an ounce and a quarter of coined silver. Locke.
19. To be improved.
From such an untainted couple, we can hope to have our family rise to its ancient splendour of face, air, countenance, and shape. Tatler, N. 75.
20. To elevate the stile.
Your author always will the best advise,
Fall when he falls, and when he rises, rise. Roscommon.
21. To be revived from death.
After I am risen again, I will go before you. Mat. xxvi.
The stars of morn shall see him rise
Out of his grave. Milton.
22. To come by chance.
As they 'gan his library to view,
And antique registers for to avise,
There chanced to the prince's hand to rise
An ancient book. Fairy Queen, b. ii.
23. To be elevated in situation.
He bar'd an ancient oak of all her boughs;
Then on a rising ground the trunk he plac'd,
Which with the spoils of his dead foe he grac'd. Dryden.
A house we saw upon a rising.
Ah, on banks or rising grounds near rivers, will thrive exceedingly. Mortimer's Husbandry.
RISE. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. The act of rising.
2. The act of mounting from the ground.
In leaping with weights, the arms are first cast backwards and then forwards, with so much the greater force; for the hands go backward before they take their rise. Bacon.
3. Eruption; ascent.
Upon the candle's going out, there is a sudden rise of water; for the flame filling no more place, the air and water succeed.
The hill submits itself
In small descents, which do its height beguile;
And sometimes mounts, but so as billows play,
Whole rise not hinders, but makes short our way. Dryden.
4. Place that favours the act of mounting aloft.
Rais'd to high, from that convenient rise
She took her flight, and quickly reach'd the skies. Greech.
Since the arguments against them rise from common received opinions, it happens, in controversial discourses, as it does in the assailing of towns, where, if the ground be but firm, whereon the batteries are erected, there is no farther inquiry of whom it is borrowed, so it affords but a fit rise for the present purpose. Locke.
5. Elevated place.
Such a rise, as doth at once invite
A pleasure, and a reverence from the sight. Denham.
6. Appearance of the sun in the East.
Phœbus! stay;
The world to which you fly so fast,
From us to them can pay your haite
With no such object, and salute your rise
With no such wonder, as De Mornay's eyes. Waller.
7. Encrease in any respect.
8. Encrease of price.
Upon a breach with Spain, must be considered the present state of the king's treasure, the rise or fall that may happen in his constant revenue by a Spanish war.
The bishops have had share in the gradual rise of lands. Sw.
9. Beginning; original.
It has its rise from the lazy admonitions of those who give rules, and propose examples, without joining practice with their instructions. Locke on Education.

RIV

His reputation quickly peopled it, and gave rise to the republick, which calls itself after his name. Addison.
10. Elevation; encrease of sound.
In the ordinary rises and falls of the voice, there fall out to be two beams between the unison and the diapason. Bacon.
RISER. n. f. [from rise.] One that rises.
The isle Aza, where the palace stands
Of th' early riser, with the rosy hands,
Active Aurora; where she loves to dance. Chapman.
RISIBILITY. n. f. [from risible.] The quality of laughing.
How comes lowliness of stile to be so much the propriety of satyr, that without it a poet can be no more a satyrist, than without risibility he can be a man. Dryden.
Whatever the philosophers may talk of their risibility, nothing is a more noble expression than laughing. Arbutnot.
RISIBLE. adj. [risible, Fr. risibilis, Lat.]
1. Having the faculty or power of laughing.
We are in a merry world, laughing is our business; as if because it has been made the definition of man, that he is risible, his manhood consisted in nothing else. Gov. of Tongue.
2. Ridiculous; exciting laughter.
RISK. n. f. [risque, Fr. riesgo, Spanish.] Hazard; danger; chance of harm.
Some run the risk of an absolute ruin for the gaining of a present supply. L'Estrange's Fables.
When an insolent despoiler of discipline, nurtured into contempt of all order by a long risk of licence, shall appear before a church governor, severity and resolution are that governor's virtues. South's Sermons.
By allowing himself in what is innocent, he would run the risk of being betrayed into what is not so. Atterbury.
An innocent man ought not to run an equal risk with a guilty one. Clarissa.
To RISK. v. a. [risquer, Fr.] To hazard; to put to chance; to endanger.
Who would hope new fame to raise,
Or risk his well established praise,
That, his high genius to approve,
Had drawn a George or car'd a Jove. Addison.
RISKER. n. f. [from risk.] He who risks.
He thither came, to observe and smooke
What courtes other riskers took. Baile.
RISK. the obsolete preterite of rise.
Rise not the consular men and left their places,
So soon as thou sat'st down; and fled thy side. Benj. Jonson.
RITE. n. f. [rit, Fr. ritus, Lat.] Solemn act of religion; external observance.
The ceremonies, we have taken from such as were before us, are not things that belong to this or that sect, but they are the ancient rites and customs of the church. Hooker.
It is by God consecrated into a sacrament, a holy rite, a means of conveying to the worthy receiver the benefits of the body and blood of Christ. Hammond's Fundamentals.
When the prince her funeral rites had paid,
He plow'd the Tyrrhene seas. Dryden.
RITUAL. adj. [rituel, Fr.] Solemnly ceremonious; done according to some religious institution.
Instant I bade the priests prepare
The ritual sacrifice, and solemn pray'r. Prior.
If to tradition were added, certain constant ritual and emblematical observances, as the emblems were expressive, the memory of the thing recorded would remain. Forbes.
RITUAL. n. f. [from the adj.] A book in which the rites and observances of religion are set down.
An heathen ritual could not instruct a man better than these several pieces of antiquity in the particular ceremonies, that attended different sacrifices. Addison's Remarks on Italy.
RITUALIST. n. f. [from ritual.] One skilled in the ritual.
RIVAGE. n. f. [French.] A bank; a coast. Not in use.
I think
You stand upon the rivage, and behold
A city on th' incessant billows dancing;
For so appears this fleet. Shakefp. Henry V.
RIVAL. n. f. [rivalis, Lat.]
1. One who is in pursuit of the same thing which another man pursues; a competitor.
Oh love! thou sternly dost thy pow'r maintain,
And wilt not bear a rival in thy reign;
Tyrrants and thou all fellowship didstain. Dryden.
2. A competitor in love.
She saw her father was grown her adverse party, and yet her fortune such as she must favour her rival. Sidney.
France and Burgundy,
Great rivals in our younger daughter's love.
Your rival's image in your worth I view;
And what I lov'd in him, esteem in you. Granville.
RIVAL. adj. Standing in competition; making the same claim; emulous.
Had I but the means
To hold a rival place with one of them,
I should be fortunate. Shakefp. Merchant of Venice.
Equal

RIV

- Equal in years, and rival in renown
With Epaphus, the youthful Phaeton,

That his deep wounded heart in two did rive. Fa. Queen.
- Through riven clouds and molten firmament,
The fierce three-forked engine making way,
Both lofty towers and highest trees hath rent. Fa. Queen.
- O Cicero!
I have seen tempests, when the scolding winds
Have riv'd the knotty oaks; but ne'er till now
Did I go through a tempest dropping fire. Shakep.
- As one he stood escap'd from cruel fight,
Sore toil'd, his riven arms to havock hewn. Milton.
- The neighbouring forests, formerly shaken and riven with the thunder-bolts of war, did envy the sweet peace of Druid. Hawel's Vocal Forest.
- Had I not been blind, I might have seen Yon riven oak, the fairest of the green. Dryden.
- Let it come;
Let the fierce lightning blast, the thunder rive me. Rowe.
- To RIVE. v. n. To be split; to be divided by violence.
- Free-stone rives, splits, and breaks in any direction. Woodw.

To rive their dangerous artillery
Upon no christian soul but English Talbot. Shakep.
- To RIVEL. v. a. [rēpizlē, Saxon, corrugated, rumpel'd.] To contract into wrinkles and corrugations.
Then droop'd the fading flow'rs, their beauty fled,
And clos'd their sickly eyes and hung the head,
And rivel'd up with heat, lay dying in their bed. Dryd.
- And since that plenteous autumn now is past,
Whose grapes and peaches have indulg'd your taste,
Take in good part, from our poor poet's board,
Such rivel'd fruits as winter can afford. Dryden.
- Alum stipicks, with contracting pow'r,
Shrink his thin essence like a rivel'd flow'r. Pope.
- RIVEN. part. of rive.
- RIVER. n. f. [riviere, Fr. rius, Lat.] A land current of water bigger than a brook.
It is a most beautiful country, being stored throughout with many goodly rivers, replenish'd with all sorts of fish. Spens.
- The first of these rivers has been celebrated by the Latin poets for the gentleness of its course, as the other for its rapidity. Addison's Remarks on Italy.
- RIVER-DRAGON. n. f. A crocodile. A name given by Milton to the king of Egypt.
Thus with ten wounds
The river-dragon tam'd at length, submits
To let his sojourners depart. Milton's Par. Lost.
- RIVER-GOD. n. f. Tutelary deity of a river.

As plants ambiguous between sea and land,
The river-horse and scaly crocodile. Milton.
- RIVET. n. f. [river, Fr. to break the point of a thing; to drive.] A fastening pin clenched at both ends.
The armourers accomplishing the knights,
With busy hammers closing rivets up,
Give dreadful note of preparation. Shakep. Henry V.

ROA

- Thy armour
I'll crush, and unlock the rivets all,
But I'll be matter of it. Shakep. Troilus and Cressida.
- Though Valeria's fair, and though the loves me too,
'Gainst her my soul is arm'd on every part;
Yet there are secret rivets to my heart,
Where Berenice's charms have found the way,
Subtle as lightnings. Dryden's Tyrannick Love.
- The verse in fashion is, when numbers flow
So smooth and equal, that no fight can find
The rivet, where the polish'd piece was join'd. Dryden.
- The rivets of those wings inclos'd Fit not each other. Dryden's Don Sebastian.
- To RIVET. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To fasten with rivets.
This man
If all our fire were out, would fetch down new,
Out of the hand of Jove; and rivet him
To Caucasus, should he but frown. Benj. Johnson.
- In riveting, the pin you rivet in should stand upright to the plate you rivet it upon; for if it do not stand upright, you will be forced to set it upright, after it is riveted. Moxon.
2. To fasten strongly; to make immovable.
You were to blame to part with
A thing stuck on with oaths upon your finger,
And riveted with faith unto your flesh. Shakep.
- Why should I write this down, that's riveted, Screw'd to my memory? Shakep. Cymbeline.
- What one party thought to rivet to a settledness by the strength and influence of the Scots, that the other rejects. King Charles.
- Till fortune's fruitless spite had made it known,
Her blows not shook but riveted his throne. Dryden.
- Thus hath God not only riveted the notion of himself into our natures, but likewise made the belief of his being necessary to the peace of our minds and happiness of society. Till.
- If the eye sees those things riveted, which are loose, where will you begin to rectify the mistake. Locke.
- Where we use words of a loose and wandering signification, hence follows mistake and error, which those maxims, brought as proofs to establish propositions, wherein the terms stand for undetermined ideas, do by their authority confirm and rivet. Locke.
- Rivet* and nail me where I stand, ye pow'rs. Congree.
- They provoke him to the rage
Of fangs and claws, and, flooping from your horse,
Rivet the panting savage to the ground. Addison's Cato.

mentions. Addison's Remarks on Italy.
- RUXDOLLAR. n. f. A German coin, worth about four shillings and six-pence sterling. Ditt.
- ROACH. n. f. [from rutilus, Lat. redhaired.]
A roach is a fish of no great reputation for his dainty taste:
his spawn is accounted much better than any other part of him: he is accounted the water sheep, for his simplicity and foolishness; and it is noted, that renches recover strength, and grow in a fortnight after spawning. Walton's Angler.
- If a gudgeon meet a roach,
He dare not venture to approach;
Yet still he leaps at flies. Swift.
- ROAD. n. f. [rade, Fr.]
1. Large way; path.
Would you not think him a madman, who, whilst he might easily ride on the beaten road way, should trouble himself with breaking up of gaps?
To God's eternal house direct the way,
A broad and ample road. Milton.
- To be indifferent whether we embrace falsehood or truth, is the great road to error. Locke.
- Could stupid atoms, with impetuous speed,
By diff'rent roads and adverse ways proceed,
That here they might encounter, here unite. Blackmore.
- There is but one road by which to climb up. Addison.
2. [Rade, Fr.] Ground where ships may anchor.
I should be still
Peering in maps for ports and roads;
And every object that might make me fear Misfortune to my ventures. Shakep. March of Venice.
- About the island are many roads, but only one harbour. Saunders's Journey.

3. Inroad;

love from any. Shakespeare.
- Procure, that the nourishment may not be robbed and drawn away. Bacon's Natural Hiſtory.
- Nor will I take from any man his due;
But thus aſſuming all, he robs from you.
Oh double ſacrilege on things divine,
To rob the relic, and deſace the ſhrine! Dryden.
- ROBBER. n. f. [from rob.] A thief; one that robs by force, or ſteals by ſecret means; a plunderer.
Theſe hairs, which thou doſt raviſh from my chin,
Will quicken and accuſe thee; I'm your hoſt;
With robbers hands, my hoſpitable favour
You ſhould not ruſtle thus. Shakespeare. King Lear.
- Barabbas was a robber. St. John.
- Had'ſt thou not committed Notorious murder on thoſe thirty men
At Aſcalon; then, like a robber, ſtrip'd'ſt them
Of their robes. Milton's Agoniſtes.
- The robber muſt run, ride, and uſe all the deſperate ways of eſcape; and probably, after all, his ſin betrays him to the goal, and from thence advances him to the gibbet. South.
- Bold Prometheus did aſpire,
And ſtole from heav'n the ſeeds of fire;
A train of ills, a ghafly crew,
The robber's blazing track purſue. Dryden's Horace.
- ROBBERY. n. f. [roberie, old Fr. from rob.] Theft perpetrated by force or with privacy.
Thieves for their robbery have authority,
When judges ſteal themſelves. Shakespeare. Meaf. for Meaf.
- A ſtorm or robbery
Shook down my mellow hangings. Shakespeare. Cymbeline.
- I hate robbery for burnt-offering. Iſaiah lxi. 8.
- Some more effectual way might be found, for ſuppreſſing common thefts and robberies. Temple.
- ROBE. n. f. [robbe, Fr. roba, Italian; rauba, low Lat.] A gown of ſtate; a dreſs of dignity.
Through tatter'd cloaths ſmall vices do appear;
Robes and furr'd gowns hide all. Shakespeare. King Lear.

My Nan shall be the queen of all fairies,
Finely attir'd in a robe of white. Shakefp.
The last good king, whom willing Rome obey'd,
Was the poor offspring of a captive maid;
Yet he those robes of empire justly bore,
Which Romulus, our sacred founder, wore. Dryden.
How by the finest art the native robe
To weave. Thomson's Autumn.
To ROBE. v. a. [from the noun.] To dress pompously; to invest.
What christian soldier will not be touched with a religious emulation, to see an order of Jesus do such service for enlarging the christian borders; and an order of St. George only to robe, and feast, and perform rites and observances. Bacon.
There in long robes the royal magi stand;
The sage Chaldeans rob'd in white appear'd,
And Brachmans. Pope's Temple of Fame.
Robed in loose array she came to bathe. Thomson.
RO'BERY. n. f. An herb. Ainsl.
ROBERTSMAN. } n. f. In the old statutes, a sort of bold and ROBERTSMAN. } stout robbers or night thieves, said to be so called from Robinhood, a famous robber.
RO'BIN. } n. f. [rubecula, Lat.] A bird so named
ROBIN-RED-BREAST. } from his red breast.
Up a grove did spring, green as in May,
When April had been moist; upon whose bushes
The pretty robins, nightingales, and thrushes Warbled their notes. Suckling.
The robin-red-breast, till of late had rest,
And children faced held a martin's nest. Pope.
ROBUST. adj. [robur, Lat.] Made of oak. Dict.
ROBUSTIOUS. } adj. [robustus, Lat. robustus, Fr.]
1. Strong; finewy; vigorous; forceful.
Robustious to no purpose, clustring down,
Vain monument of strength. Milton's Agonistes.
2. Boisterous; violent; unwieldy.
The men sympathize with the mastiffs, in robustious and rough coming on. Shakefp. Henry V.
It offends me to hear a robustious periwig-pated fellow tear a passion to tatters, to very rags, to split the ears of the groundlings. Shakefp. Hamlet.
While I was managing this young robustious fellow, that old spark, who was nothing but skin and bone, split through my fingers. Dryden's Don Sebastian.
Is haud'd about in gallantry robust. Thomson's Autumn.
3. Requiring strength.
The tenderness of a sprain remains a good while after, and leaves a lasting caution in the man, not to put the part quickly again to any robust employment. Locke.
4. Robustious is now only used in low language, and in a sense of contempt.
ROBUSTNESS. n. f. [from robust.] Strength; vigour.
Beef may confer a robustness on my son's limbs, but will hebetate his intellects. Arbutnot and Pope.
ROCAMBOULE. n. f. See GARLICK.
Rocamboule is a sort of wild garlick, otherwise called Spanish garlick; the seed is about the bigness of ordinary pease. Mort.
Garlick, rocambole, and onions abound with a pungent volatile salt. Arbutnot on Aliments.
ROCHE-ALUM. n. f. [roché, Fr. a rock.] A purer kind of alum.
Roche-alum is also good. Mortimer's Husbandry.
RO'CHET. n. f. [rochet, Fr. rochetum, from roccus, low Lat. a coat.]
1. A surplice; the white upper garment of the priest officiating.
What zealous phrenzy did the senate seize,
That tare the rochet to such rags as these? Cleaveland.
2. [Rubella, Lat.] A fish. Ainsl.
ROCK. n. f. [roc, roche, Fr. rocca, Italian.]
1. A vast mass of stone.
The splitting rocks cow'd in the sinking sands,
And would not dash me with their ragged sides. Shakefp.
There be rock herbs; but those are where there is some mould. Bacon's Natural History.
Distilling some of the tinctor liquor, all that came over was as limpid and colourless as rock water, and the liquor remaining in the vessel deeply ceruleous. Boyle.
These lesser rocks, or great bulky stones, are they not manifest fragments? Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
Of amber a nodule, invested with a coat, called rock amber. Woodward on Fossils.
Pigeons or doves are of several sorts; as wood pigeons and rock pigeons. Mortimer's Husbandry.
Ye darksome pines, that o'er you rocks recline'd,
Wave high, and murmur to the hollow wind. Pope.
2. Protection; defence. A scriptural sense.
Though the reeds of Egypt break under the hand of him that leans on them, yet the rock of Israel will be an everlasting stay. King Charles.

3. [Rock, Danish; rucca, Italian; rucca, Spanish; spinach, Dutch.] A distaff held in the hand, from which the wool was spun by twisting a ball below.
A learned and a manly foul
I purpos'd her; that should with even powers,
The rock, the spindle, and the sheers, controul
Of destiny, and spin her own free hours. Benj. Johnson.
On the rock a scanty measure place
Of vital flax, and turn'd the wheel apace. Dryden.
To ROCK. v. a. [roccare, Fr.]
1. To shake; to move backwards and forwards.
If, by a quicker rocking of the engine, the smoke were more swiftly shaken, it would, like water, vibrate to and fro. Boyle.
The wind was laid; the whistling sound
Was dumb; a rising earthquake rock'd the ground. Dryden.
A living tortoise, being turned upon its back, could help itself only by its neck and head, by pushing against the ground to rock itself as in a cradle, to find out the side towards which the inequality of the ground might more easily permit to roll its shell. Ray on the Creation.
2. To move the cradle, in order to procure sleep.
Come, take hand with me,
And rock the ground whereon these sleepers be. Shakefp.
Leaning her head upon my breast,
My panting heart rock'd her asleep. Suckling.
My bloody resolutions,
Like sick and froward children,
Were rock'd asleep by reason. Danham.
While his secret foul on Flanders preys,
He rocks the cradle of the babe of Spain. Dryden.
High in his hall, rock'd in a chair of state,
The king with his tempestuous council fate. Dryden.
3. To lull; to quiet.
Sleep rock thy brain,
And never come mischance between us twain! Shakefp.
To ROCK. v. n. To be violently agitated; to reel to and fro.
The rocking town
Supplants their footsteps; to and fro they reel Astonish'd. Philips.
Like this rocking of the battlements. Young's Revenge.
ROCK-DOE. n. f. A species of deer.
The rock-doe breeds chiefly upon the Alps: a creature of admirable swiftness; and may probably be that mentioned in the book of Job: her horns grow sometimes so far backward, as to reach over her buttocks. Grew's Museum.
ROCK-RUBY. n. f. A name given improperly by lapidaries and jewellers to the garnet, when it is of a very strong, but not deep red, and has a fair cast of the blue. Hill on Fossils.
Rock-ruby is of a deep red, and the hardest of all the kinds.
Woodward on Fossils.
ROCK-SALT. n. f. Mineral salt.
Two pieces of transparent rock-salt; one white, the other
red. Woodward on Fossils.
RO'CKER. n. f. [from rock.] One who rocks the cradle.
His fellow, who the narrow bed had kept,
Was weary, and without a rocker slept. Dryden.
RO'CKET. n. f. [rochetto, Italian.] An artificial firework, being a cylindrical case of paper filled with nitre, charcoal, and sulphur, and which mounts in the air to a considerable height, and there bursts.
Every rocket ended in a constellation, throwing the air with a shower of silver pangles. Addison.
When bonfires blaze, your vagrant works shall rise
In rockets, till they reach the wond'ring skies. Garth.
RO'CKET. n. f. A plant.
The flower of the rocket consists of four leaves expanded in form of a cross; the point becomes a pod, divided into two cells by an intermediate partition, to which the valves adhere on both sides: these cells are full of roundish seeds; to which may be added, the whole plant hath a peculiar fetid smell. Miller.
Rocket is one of the fallet furniture. Mortimer's Husbandry.
RO'CKLESS. adj. [from rock.] Being without rocks.
A crystal brook
Is weedless all above, and rockless all below. Dryden.
RO'CKROSE. n. f. [rock and rose.] A plant.
RO'CKWORK. n. f. [rock and work.] Stones fixed in mortar, in imitation of the asperities of rocks.
The garden is fenced on the lower end, by a natural mound of rockwork. Addison.
RO'CKY. adj. [from rock.]
1. Full of rocks.
Val de Compare presenteth her rocky mountains. Sandys.
Make the bold prince
Through the cold North and rocky regions run. Waller.
The vallies he refrains
With rocky mountains. Dryden.
Nature lodges her treasures in rocky ground. Locke.
2. Resembling

ROG

2. Resembling a rock.
Such destruction to withstand, he oppos'd the rocky orb
Of tenfold adamant, his ample shield. Milton.
3. Hard; stony; obdurate.
I, like a poor bark, of sails and tackling left,
Ruff all to pieces on thy rocky bosom. Shakefp. Rich. III.
ROD. n. f. [roede, Dutch.]
1. A long twig.
Some chuse a hazel rod of the same year's shoot, and this they bind on to another straight stick of any wood, and walking softly over those places, where they suspect the bowels of the earth to be enriched with metals, the wand will, by bowing towards it, discover it. Boyle.
2. A kind of scepter.
Sh' had all the royal makings of a queen;
As holy oil, Edward confessor's crown,
The rod and bird of peace. Shakefp. Henry VIII.
3. Any thing long and slender.
The pastoral reed of Hermes, or his opiate rod. Milton.
Let the fisherman
Increase his tackle, and his rod retic. Gay.
Haste, ye Cyclops, with your forked rods,
This rebel love braves all the gods,
And every hour by love is made,
Some heaven-defying Enclade. Granville.
4. An instrument for measuring.
Decempeda was a measuring rod for taking the dimensions of buildings, and signified the same thing as perica, taken as a measure of length. Arbutnot on Coins.
5. An instrument of correction, made of twigs tied together.
If he be but once taken idly roguing, he may punish him with stocks; but if he be found again loitering, he may scourge him with whips or rods. Spenser on Ireland.
I am whipt and scour'd with rods,
Nettled, and stung with plimires, when I hear
Of Bolingbroke. Shakefp. Henry IV.
In this condition the rod of God hath a voice to be heard, and he, whose office it is, ought now to expound to the sick man the particular meaning of the voice. Hammond.
Grant me and my people the benefit of thy chastisements; that thy rod, as well as thy staff, may comfort us. K. Charles.
They trembling learn to throw the fatal dart,
And under rods of rough centurions smart. Dryden.
As soon as that sentence is executed, these rods, these instruments of divine displeasure, are thrown into the fire. Att.
A wit's a feather, and a chief a rod;
An honest man's the noblest work of God. Pope.
RODE. pret. of ride.
He in paternal glory rode. Milton.
RODOMONTADE. n. f. [from a boastful boisterous hero of Aniosto, called Rodomonte; rodomontade, Fr.] An empty noisy bluster or boast; a rant.
He only serves to be sport for his company; for in these gamefome days men will give him hints, which may put him upon his rodmontades. Government of the Tongue.
The libertines of painting have no other model but a rodo-montade genius, and very irregular, which violently hurries them away. Dryden's Dufresnay.
He talks extravagantly in his passion, but if I would quote a hundred passages in Ben Johnson's Cethegus, I could shew that the rodmontades of Almanzor are neither so irrational nor impossible, for Cethegus threatens to destroy nature. Dry.
To RODOMONTADE. v. n. [from the noun.] To brag thra-sonically; to boast like Rodomonte.
ROE. n. f. [ra, ra-beop, Saxon.]
1. A species of deer.
He would him make
The roe bucks in flight to overtake. Fairy Queen.
They were as swift as the roes upon the mountains. Chr.
Procure me a Troglodyte footman, who can catch a roe at his full speed? Arbutnot and Pope.
2. The female of the hart.
Thy greyhounds are fleetest than the roe. Shakefp.
Run like a roe or hart upon
The lofty hills of Bitheron. Sandys's Paraphrase.
ROF. n. f. [properly roon or rove; ram, Danish; rogen, German.] The eggs of fish.
Here comes Romeo
Without his roe, like a dried herring. Shakefp.
ROGA'TION. n. f. [rogation, Fr. from rogo, Lat.] Litany;
supplication.
He perfecteth the rogations or litanies before in use, and addeth unto them that which the present necessity required. Hook.
Supplications, with this solemnity for appealing of God's wrath, were of the Greek church termed litanies, and rogations of the Latin. Taylor.
ROGATION-WEEK. n. f. The week immediately preceeding Whitunday; thus called from three fasts observed therein, the Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday, called rogation days, because of the extraordinary prayers and processions then made for the fruits of the earth, or as a preparation for the devotion of holy Thursday. Dist.

ROGUE. n. f. [of uncertain etymology.]
1. A wandering beggar; a vagrant; a vagabond.
For fear left we, like rogues, should be reputed,
And for ear-marked beads abroad be bruited. Hubbard.
The sheriff and the marshal may do the more good, and more terrify the idle rogue. Spenser on Ireland.
The scum of people and wicked condemned men spoileth the plantation; for they will ever live like rogues, and not fall to work, but be lazy and do mischief. Bacon's Essays.
The troops are all scattered, and the commanders very poor rogues. Shakefp. All's well that ends well.
2. A knave; a dishonest fellow; a villain; a thief.
Thou kill'st me like a rogue and a villain. Shakefp.
A rogue upon the highway may have as strong an arm, and take off a man's head as cleverly as the executioner; but then there is a vast disparity, when one action is murder, and the other justice. South.
If he call rogue and rascal from the garret,
He means you no more mischief than a parrot. Dryden.
The rogue and fool by fits is fair and wife,
And ev'n the best, by fits, what they despise. Pope.
3. A name of slight tenderness and endearment.
Oh, what a rogue and pleasant slave am I! Shakefp.
I never knew a woman love man so.
—Alas, poor rogue, I think indeed she loves. Shakefp.
4. A wag.
To ROGUE. v. n. [from the noun.]
1. To wander; to play the vagabond.
If he be but once taken idly roguing, he may punish him with the stocks. Spenser on Ireland.
He rogued away at last, and was lost. Carew.
2. To play knavish tricks.
RO'GUERY. n. f. [from rogue.]
1. The life of a vagabond.
To live in one land is captivity,
To run all countries a wild roguery. Donne.
2. Knavish tricks.
They will afterwards hardly be drawn to their wonted low life in thievery and roguery. Spenser on Ireland.
You rogue, here's lime in this sack too; there is nothing but roguery to be found in villainous man. Shakefp.
Like the devil did tempt and sway 'em
To rogueries, and then betray 'em. Hudibras, p. i.
The kid smelt out the roguery. L'Estrange's Fables.
'Tis no scandal grown,
For debt and roguery to quit the town. Dryden.
The roguery of alchymy,
And we, the bubbled fools,
Spend all our present stock in hopes of golden rules. Swift.
3. Waggery; arch tricks.
RO'GUESHIP. n. f. [from rogue.] The qualities or personage of a rogue.
Say, in what nasty cellar under ground,
Or what church porch, your roguish may be found? Dry.
RO'GUSH. adj. [from rogue.]
1. Vagrant; vagabond.
I thought the persons, by whom it is used, be of better note than the former roguish sort; yet the fault is no less worthy of a marshal. Spenser.
2. Knavish; fraudulent.
He gets a thousand thumps and kicks,
Yet cannot leave his roguish tricks. Swift's Miscellanies.
3. Waggish; wanton; slightly mischievous.
The most bewitching leer with her eyes, the most roguish cast; her cheeks are dimpled when she smiles, and her smiles would tempt an hermit. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.
I am pleased to see my tenants pass away a whole evening in playing their innocent tricks; our friend Wimble is as merry as any of them, and shews a thousand roguish tricks on these occasions. Addison's Spectator, N° 269.
Timothy used to be playing roguish tricks; when his mistres's back was turned, he would loll out his tongue. Arb.
RO'GUSHLY. adv. [from roguish.] Like a rogue; knavishly;
wantonly.
RO'GUSHNESS. n. f. [from roguish.] The qualities of a rogue.
RO'GUY. adj. [from rogue.] Knavish; wanton. A bad word.
A shepherd's boy had gotten a roguish trick of crying a wolf, and fooling the country with false alarms. L'Estrange.
To ROIST. } v. n. [of this word the most probable ety-
To ROISTER. } mology is from risser, Islandick, a violent man.]
To behave turbulently; to act at discretion; to be at free quarter; to bluster.
I have a roisting challenge sent amongst
The dull and factious nobles of the Greeks,
Will strike amazement to their drowsy spirits. Shakefp.
Among a crew of roisting fellows,
He'd fit whole evenings at the alehouse. Swift.
RO'ISTER, or ROISTERER. n. f. [from the verb.] A turbulent, brutal, lawless, blustering fellow.

To ROLL,

ROL

To ROLL. v. a. [rouler, Fr. rollen, Dutch; from rotula, of roto, Lat.]

1. To move any thing by volutation, or successive application of the different parts of the surface, to the ground.
Who shall roll us away the stone from the door of the sepulchre? Mark xvii. 3.

2. To move any thing round upon its axis.
Heav'n shone and roll'd her motions. Milton.

3. To move in a circle.
To drefs, and troll the tongue, and roll the eye. Milton.

4. To produce a periodical revolution.
To wrap round upon itself.

5. To enwrap; to involve in bandage.
By this rolling, parts are kept from joining together. Wifem.

6. To form by rolling into round masses.
Grind red-lead, or any other colour with strong wort, and roll them up into long rolls like pencils. Peacbam.

7. To pour in a stream or waves.
The pin ought to be as thick as a rolling pin. Wifeman.

8. To move by the successive application of all parts of the surface to the ground.
Our nation is too great to be ruined by any but itself; and if the number and weight of it roll one way upon the greatest changes that can happen, yet England will be safe. Temple.

9. To move by the successive application of all parts of the surface to the ground.
Reports, like snow-balls, gather still the farther they roll. Government of the Tongue.

10. To move by the successive application of all parts of the surface to the ground.
Fire must rend the sky, devouring where it rolls. Milton.

11. To move by the successive application of all parts of the surface to the ground.
A tortoise, by pushing against the ground only with its neck and head, rolls itself as in a cradle, to find out the side towards which the inequality of the ground might more easily permit it to roll its shell. Ray on the Creation.

12. To move by the successive application of all parts of the surface to the ground.
He next essays to walk, but downward prefs'd,
On four feet imitates his brother beast;
By slow degrees he gathers from the ground
His legs, and to the rolling chair is bound. Dryden.

13. To move by the successive application of all parts of the surface to the ground.
Thus the year rolls within itself again. Dryden.

14. To move by the successive application of all parts of the surface to the ground.
When thirty rolling years have run their race. Dryden.

15. To move by the successive application of all parts of the surface to the ground.
To move with appearance of circular direction.
Thou, light,
Revivest not these eyes, which roll in vain,
To find the piercing ray, and find no dawn:
A boar is chaf'd, his nostrils flames expire,
And his red eye-balls roll with living fire. Dryden.

16. To move by the successive application of all parts of the surface to the ground.
Twice ten tempestuous nights I roll'd, resign'd
To roaring billows and the warring wind. Pope.

17. To move by the successive application of all parts of the surface to the ground.
To move as waves or volumes of water.
Wave rolling after wave in torrent rapture. Milton.

18. To move by the successive application of all parts of the surface to the ground.
Till the huge surge roll'd off, then backward sweep
The reflux tides, and plunge into the deep. Pope.

19. To move by the successive application of all parts of the surface to the ground.
Tempt icy seas, where scarce the waters roll. Pope.

20. To move by the successive application of all parts of the surface to the ground.
Storms beat, and rolls the main;
Oh beat those storms, and roll the seas in vain. Pope.

21. To move by the successive application of all parts of the surface to the ground.
To fluctuate; to move tumultuously.
Here tell me, if thou dar'st, my conscious soul,
What different sorrows did within thee roll. Prior.

22. To move by the successive application of all parts of the surface to the ground.
The thoughts, which roll within my ravish'd breast,
To me, no fear, th' inspiring gods suggest. Pope.

23. To move by the successive application of all parts of the surface to the ground.
In her sad breast the prince's fortunes roll,
And hope and doubt alternate seize her soul. Pope.

24. To move by the successive application of all parts of the surface to the ground.
To revolve on its axis.
He fashion'd those harmonious orbs, that roll
In reflex gyres about the Arctick pole. Sandys's Paraph.

25. To move by the successive application of all parts of the surface to the ground.
To be moved tumultuously.
Down they fell
By thousands, angel on archangel roll'd. Milton.

26. To move by the successive application of all parts of the surface to the ground.
ROLL. n. f. [from the verb.]

27. To move by the successive application of all parts of the surface to the ground.
1. The act of rolling; the state of being rolled.

28. To move by the successive application of all parts of the surface to the ground.
2. The thing rolling.
Lifting senates hang upon thy tongue,
Devolving through the maze of eloquence
A roll of periods, sweeter than her song. Thomson.

29. To move by the successive application of all parts of the surface to the ground.

 RORID.

ROS

- RORID. n. f. [roridus, Lat.] Dewy.
 A vehicle conveys it through less accessible cavities into the liver, from thence into the veins, and so in a rorid substance through the capillary cavities. Bacon's Vulgar Errors.
 RORIFEROUS. adj. [ros and fero, Lat.] Producing dew. Di.
 RORIFLUENT. adj. [ros and fluo, Lat.] Flowing with dew. Di.
 ROSARY. n. f. [rosarium, Lat.] A bunch of beads, on which the Romanists number their prayers.
 No rosary this votive needs,
 Her very syllables are beads. Cleveland.
 Every day propound to yourself a rosary or a chaplet of good works, to present to God at night. Taylor.
 ROSCID. adj. [rosidus, Lat.] Dewy; abounding with dew; consisting of dew.
 Wine is to be forborn in consumptions, for the spirits of wine prey upon the rosid juice of the body.
 The ends of rainbows fall more upon one kind of earth than upon another; for that earth is most rosid. Bacon.
 ROSE. n. f. [roſe, Fr. rosa, Lat.] A flower.
 The flower of the rose is composed of several leaves, which are placed circularly, and expand in a beautiful order, whose leafy flower-cup afterward becomes a roundish or oblong fleshy fruit inclosing several angular hairy seeds; to which may be added, it is a weak pithy shrub, for the most part beset with prickles, and hath pinnated leaves: the species are, 1. The wild briar, dog rose, or hep-tree. 2. Wild briar or dog rose, with large prickly leaves. 3. The greater English apple-bearing rose. 4. The dwarf wild burnet-leaved rose. 5. The dwarf wild burnet-leaved rose, with variegated leaves.
 6. The striped Scotch rose. 7. The sweet briar or eglantine.
 8. Sweet briar, with a double flower. All the other sorts of roses are originally of foreign growth, but are hardly enough to endure the cold of our climate in the open air, and produce beautiful and fragrant flowers. Miller.
 Make use of thy salt hours, season the slaves
 For tubs and baths, bring down the rose cheek'd youth
 To th' tub fast and the diet. Shakespeare, Timon of Athens.
 Patience thou young and rose lipp'd cherubin. Shakespeare.
 Let us crown ourselves with rose buds, before they be wi-ther'd. Wisd. ii. 8.
 This way of procuring autumnal roses will, in most good bushes, fail; but, in some good bearers, it will succeed. Boyle.
 Here without thorn the rose. Milton.
 For her th' unfading rose of Eden blooms. Pope.
 To speak under the Rose. To speak any thing with safety, so as not afterwards to be discovered.
 By defining a secrecy to words spoke under the rose, we mean, in society and computation, from the ancient custom in synopsack meetings, to wear chaplets of roses about their heads. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
 ROSE. pret. of rise.
 Eve rose and went forth 'mong her flow'rs. Milton.
 ROSEATE. adj. [rosat, Fr. from rose.]
 1. Rosy; full of roses.
 I come, ye ghosts! I prepare your roseate bow'rs,
 Celestial palms and ever blooming flow'rs. Pope.
 2. Blooming, fragrant, purple, as a rose.
 ROSEAD. adj. [from the noun.] crimsoned; flushed.
 Can you blame her, being a maid ret rosed over with the virgin crimson of modesty, if she deny the appearance of a naked blind boy. Shakespeare, Henry V.
 ROSE-MALLOW. n. f. Is in every respect larger than the common mallow; the leaves are rougher, and the plant grows almost shrubby. Miller.
 ROSEMARY. n. f. [rosmarinus, Lat.] Is a verticillate plant, with a labiated flower, consisting of one leaf, whose upper lip or crest is cut into two parts, and turns up backward with crooked stamina or chives; but the under lip or beard is divided into three parts, the middle segment being hollow like a spoon; out of the two or three-toothed flower-cup rises the pointal, attended, as it were, by four embryos, which afterward turn to so many seeds that are roundish, and are inclosed in the flower-cup. Miller.
 Bedlam beggars, with roaring voices,
 Strike in their numb'd and mortify'd bare arms
 Pins, wooden pricks, nails, sprigs of rosemary;
 And with this horrible object, from low farms,
 Inforce their charity. Shakespeare, King Lear.
 Around their cell
 Set rows of rosemary with flowering stem. Dryden.
Rosemary is small, but a very odoriferous shrub; the principal use of it is to perfume chambers, and in decoctions for washing. Mortimer's Husbandry.
 The neighbours
 Follow'd with wistful look the damsel bier,
 Sprung'd rosemary the lads and lasses bore. Gay.
 ROSE-NOBLE. n. f. An English gold coin, in value anciently sixteen shillings. Di.
 The succeeding kings coined rose-nobles and double rose- nobles, the great sovereigns with the same inscription, Jesus autem transiens per medium eorum ibat. Camden's Remains.

ROT

- ROSEWATER. n. f. [rose and water.] Water distilled from roses.
 Attend him with a silver basin
 Full of rosewater. Shakespeare.
 His drink should be cooling; as fountain water with rose- water and sugar of roses. Wise's Surgery.
 ROSET. n. f. [from rose.] A red colour for painters.
 Grind ceruls with a weak water of gum-lake, roset, and vermillion, which maketh it a fair carnation. Peacocks.
 ROSEIER. n. f. [roſier, Fr.] A rosebush.
 Her yellow golden hair
 Was trimly woven, and in tresses wrought,
 Ne other tire she on her head did wear,
 But crown'd with a garland of sweet roſier. Fairy Queen.
 ROSIN. n. f. [properly resin; resine, Fr. resina, Lat.]
 1. Insipidated turpentine; a juice of the pine.
 The billows from the kindling prow retire,
 Pitch, rosin, tearwood on red wings aspire. Garth.
 2. Any insipidated matter of vegetables that dissolves in spirit.
 Tea contains little of a volatile spirit; its rosin or fixed oil, which is bitter and astringent, cannot be extracted but by rectified spirit. Arbutnot on Aliments.
 To RO'SIN. v. a. [from the noun.] To rub with rosin.
 Bouzebeus who could sweetly sing,
 Or with the rosin'd bow torment the string. Gay.
 RO'SINY. adj. [from rosin.] Resembling rosin. The example should perhaps be rosely. See ROSSEL.
 The best foil is that upon a sandy gravel or rosiny sand. Temple.
 RO'SSEL. n. f.
 A true rosel or light land, whether white or black, is what they are usually planted in. Mortimer's Husbandry.
 RO'SSELLY. adj. [from rosel.]
 In Essex, moory land is thought to be the most proper:
 that which I have observed to be the best foil is a roselly top,
 and a brick earthy bottom. Mortimer's Husbandry.
 RO'STRATED. adj. [rostratus, Lat.] Adorned with beaks of ships.
 He brought to Italy an hundred and ten rostrated gallees of the fleet of Mithridates. Arbutnot.
 RO'STRUM. n. f. [Latin.]
 1. The beak of a bird.
 2. The beak of a ship.
 3. The scaffold whence orators harangued.
 Vespasian erected a column in Rome, upon whose top was the prow of a ship, in Latin rostrum, which gave name to the common pleading place in Rome, where orations were made, being built of the prows of those ships of Antium, which the Romans overthrew. Peacocks on Drawing.
 Myself shall mount the rostrum in his favour,
 And strive to gain his pardon from the people. Addison.
 4. The pipe which conveys the distilling liquor into its receiver in the common alembicks; also a crooked scissars, which the surgeons use in some cases for the dilatation of wounds. Quin.
 RO'SY. adj. [rosus, Lat.] Resembling a rose in bloom, beauty, colour, or fragrance.
 When the rosy finger'd morning fair,
 Weary of aged Tithon's sallow bed,
 Had sped her purple robe through dewy air. Fa. Queen.
 A smile that glow'd
 Celestial rosy red, love's proper hue. Milton.
 Fairest blossom! do not slight
 That age, which you may know so soon;
 The rosy morn resigns her light,
 And milder glory to the noon. Waller.
 The rosy finger'd morn appears,
 And from her mantle shakes her tears,
 In promise of a glorious day.
 As Theſſalian steeds the race adorn,
 So rosy colour'd Helen is the pride
 Of Lacedemon, and of Greece beside. Dryden.
 While blooming youth and gay delight
 Sit on thy rosy cheeks confest,
 Thou hast, my dear, undoubted right
 To triumph o'er this destin'd breast. Prior.
 To ROT. v. n. [rotan, Saxon; rotten, Dutch.] To putrify; to lose the cohesion of its parts.
 A man may rot even here.
 From hour to hour we ripe and ripe,
 And then from hour to hour we rot and rot. Shakespeare.
 Being more nearly exposed to the air and weather, the bodies of the animals would suddenly corrupt and rot; the bones would likewise all rot in time, except those which were secured by the extraordinary strength of their parts. Woodward.
 To ROT. v. a. To make putrid; to bring to corruption.
 No wood shone that was cut down alive, but such as was rotted in stock and root while it grew. Bacon.
 Frowning Auster seeks the southern sphere,
 And rots, with endless rain, th' unwholesome year. Dryden.
 ROT. n. f. [from the verb.]
 1. A distemper among sheep, in which their lungs are wasted.
 In an unlucky grange, the sheep died of the rot, the swine of the mange, and not a goose or duckling throve. B. Johns.
 The

ROT

The cattle must of rot and murrain die. Milton.
The wool of Ireland suffers under no defect, the country being generally full stocked with sheep, and the soil little subject to other rots than of hunger. Temple.

2. Putrefaction; putrid decay.
Brandy scarce prevents the sudden rot
Of freezing nose, and quick decaying feet. Philips.

ROTARY. adj. [rota, Latin.] Whirling as a wheel. Diſt.
ROTATED. adj. [rotatus, Lat.] Whirled round.
ROTATION. n. f. [rotation, Fr. rotatio, Lat.] The act of whirling round like a wheel; the state of being so whirled round; whirl.
Of this kind is some disposition of bodies to rotation from East to West; as the main float and reſcoat of the sea, by consent of the universe as part of the diurnal motion. Bacon.
By a kind of circulation or rotation, arts have their successive invention, perfection, and tradition from one people to another. Hale's Origin of Mankind.
The axle-trees of chariots take fire by the rapid rotation of the wheels. Newton's Opticks.

In the passions wild rotation toſt,
Our spring of action to ourselves is loſt. Pope.
In fond rotation spread the spotted wings,
And shiver every feather with desire. Thomson.

ROTATOR. n. f. [Latin.] That which gives a circular motion.
This articulation is strengthened by strong muscles; on the inside by the triceps and the four little rotators. Wiſeman.

ROTE. n. f. [rote, Saxon, merry.]
1. [Rote, old Fr.] A harp; a lyre. Obsolete.
Wele couthe he ſing, and playen on a rote. Chaucer.
Worthy of great Phœbus' rote,
The triumphs of Phlegrean Jove he wrote,
That all the gods admir'd his lofty note. Spenser.

2. [Routine, Fr.] Words uttered by mere memory without meaning; memory of words without comprehension of the sense.
First rehearse this song by rote,
To each word a warbling note. Shakeſp.
Thy loved did read by rote, and could not spell. Shakeſp.
He rather faith it by rote to himself, than that he can thoroughly believe it. Bacon's Essays.
All which he understood by rote,
And as occasion serv'd would quote. Hudibras, p. i.
Learn Aristotle's rules by rote,
And at all hazard's boldly quote. Swift's Miscel.

TO ROTE. v. a. [from the noun.] To fix in the memory, without informing the understanding.
Speak to the people
Words rote'd in your tongue; bastards and syllables
Of no allowance to your bosom's truth. Shakeſp.

ROTCUT. n. f. [rot and gut.] Bad beer.
They overwhelm their panch daily with a kind of flat rotcut; this is a bitter dreggish small liquor. Harvey.

ROTHER-NAIIS. n. f. [a corruption of rudder.] Among shipwrights, nails with very full heads used for fastening the rudder irons of ships. Bailey.

ROTTER. adj. [from rot.]
1. Putrid; carious; putrefcent.
Trust not to rotten planks. Shakeſp. Ant. and Cleopatra.
Prosperity begins to mellow,
And drop into the rotten mouth of death. Shakeſp.
O bliss-breeding fun, draw from the earth
Rotten humidity; below thy sister's orb Infect the air. Shakeſp. Timon of Athens.
There is by invitation or excitation; as when a rotten apple lieth close to another apple that is sound; or when dung, which is already putrefied, is added to other bodies. Bacon.
Who brals as rotten wood; and steel no more Regards than reeds. Sandy's Paraphrase.
It groweth by a dead stub of a tree, and about the roots of rotten trees, and takes his juice from wood putrefied. Bacon.
They serewood from the rotten hedges took,
And seeds of latent fire from flints provoke. Dryden.

2. Not firm; not trusty.
Hence, rotten thing, or I shall shake thy bones
Out of thy garments. Shakeſp. Coriolanus.

3. Not found; not hard.
You common cry of curs whose breath I hate,
As reek o' th' rotten fens. Shakeſp. Coriolanus.
They were left moided with dirt and mire, by reason of the deepness of the rotten way. Kneller's History of the Turks.

ROTTENNESS. n. f. [from rotten.] State of being rotten; cariousness; putrefaction.
Diseas'd ventures,
That play with all infirmities for gold,
Which rottenness lends nature! Shakeſp. Cymbeline.
If the matter stink and be oily, it is a certain sign of a rottenness. Wiſeman's Surgery.

ROTUND. adj. [rotunde, Fr. rotundus, Lat.] Round; circular; spherical.
The cross figure of the christian temples is more proper for spacious buildings than the rotund of the heathen; the eye is much better filled at first entering the rotund, but such as are built in the form of a cross gives us a greater variety. Add.

ROU

ROTUNDIFORM. adj. [rotundus and felium, Lat.] Having round leaves.
ROTUNDITY. n. f. [rotunditas, Lat. rotundité, Fr. from rotund.] Roundness; sphericity; circularity.
Thou all-shaking thunder,
Strike flat the thick rotundity o' th' world. Shakeſp.
With the rotundity common to the atoms of all fluids, there is some difference in bulk, else all fluids would be alike in weight.
Rotundity is an emblem of eternity, that has neither beginning nor end. Addison on Ancient Metaph.
Who would part with these solid blessings, for the little fantastical pleasantness of a smooth convexity and rotundity of a globe. Bentley's Sermons.

ROTONDO. n. f. [rotondo, Italian.] A building formed round both in the inside and outside; such as the pantheon at Rome. Trev.

TO ROVE. v. n. [raffover, Danish, to range for plunder.] To ramble; to range; to wander.
Thou't years upon thee, and thou art too full
Of the wars surfeits, to go rove with one That's yet unbruised. Shakeſp. Coriolanus.
Fauldless thou dropt from his unerring skill,
With the bare power to sin, since free of will;
Yet charge not with thy guilt his bounteous love,
For who has power to walk, has power to rove. Arbuth.
If we indulge the frequent rife and roving of passions, we thereby procure an unattentive habit. Watts.
I view'd th' effects of that disastrous flame,
Which kindled by th' imperious queen of love,
Constrain'd me from my native realm to rove. Pope.

TO ROVE. v. a. To wander over.
Roving the field, I chanc'd
A goodly tree far distant to behold, Loaden with fruit of fairest colours. Milton's Par. Lost.
Cloacina as the town she rove'd,
A mortal scavenger she saw, she lov'd. Gay.

ROVER. n. f. [from rove.]
1. A wanderer; a ranger.
2. A fickle inconstant man.
3. A robber; a pirate.
This is the case of rovers by land, as some cantons in Arabia. Bacon's Holy War.

4. AT ROVERS. Without any particular aim.
Nature shoots not at rovers: even inanimates, though they know not their perfection, yet are they not carried on by a blind unguided impetus; but that, which directs them, knows it. Glanvill's Scep.
Providence never shoots at rovers: there is an arrow that flies by night as well as by day, and God is the person that shoots it. South's Sermon.
Men of great reading show their talents on the meanest subjects; it is a kind of shooting at rovers. Addison.

ROUGE. n. f. [rouge, Fr.] Red paint.
ROUGH. adj. [hruh, hjuhge, Saxon; rouw, Dutch.]
1. Not smooth; rugged; having inequalities on the surface.
The fiend
O'er bog or steep, through strait, rough, dense, or rare, Pursues his way. Milton.
Were the mountains taken all away, the remaining parts would be more unequal than the roughest sea; whereas the face of the earth should resemble that of the calmest sea, if still in the form of its first mass. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

2. Austere to the taste; as, rough wine.
3. Harsh to the ear.
Most by the numbers judge a poet's song,
And smooth or rough with them is right or wrong. Pope.

4. Rugged of temper; inelegant of manners; not soft; coarse; not civil; severe; not mild; rude.
A fiend, a fury, pitiless and rough,
A wolf; nay worse, a fellow all in buff. Shakeſp.
Strait with a band of soldiers tall and rough
On him he seizes. Cowley's Davideis.

5. Not gentle; not proceeding by easy operation.
He gave not the king time to prosecute that gracious method, but forced him to a quicker and rougher remedy. Clar.
Hippocrates seldom mentions the doses of his medicines, which is somewhat surprising, because his purgatives are generally very rough and strong. Arbutnot on Cains.

6. Harsh to the mind; severe.
Kind words prevent a good deal of that perverseness, which rough and imperious usage often produces in generous minds. Locke.

7. Hard featured; not delicate.
A rosy chain of rheums, a visage rough,
Deform'd, unfeatur'd, and a skin of buff. Dryden.

8. Not polished; not finished by art: as, a rough diamond.
9. Terrible; dreadful.
Before the cloudy van,
On the rough edge of battle ere it join'd, Satan advanc'd. Milton.

10. Rugged;

ROU

10. Rugged; disordered in appearance; coarse.
Rough from the tossing surge Ulysses moves,
Urg'd on by want, and recent from the storms,
The brackish ooze his manly grace deforms. Pope.

11. Tempestuous; stormy; boisterous.
Come what come may,
Time and the hour run through the roughest day. Shakeſp.

TO ROUGHCAST. v. a. [rough and cast.]
1. To mould without nicety or elegance; to form with asperities and inequalities.
Nor bodily, nor ghostly negro could Roughcast thy figure in a fadder mould. Cleaveland.
2. To form any thing in its first rudiments.
In merriment they were first practised, and this roughcast unheven poetry was instead of stage plays for one hundred and twenty years. Dryden's Dedication to Juvenal.

ROUGHCAST. n. f. [rough and cast.]
1. A rude model; a form in its rudiments.
The whole piece seems rather a loose model and roughcast of what I design to do, than a compleat work. Digby.
2. A kind of plaster mixed with pebbles, or by some other cause very uneven on the surface.
Some man must present a wall; and let him have some plaster, lome, or roughcast about him to signify wall. Shakeſp.

ROUGHDRUGHT. n. f. [rough and draught.] A draught in its rudiments.
My elder brothers came
Roughdrughts of nature, ill design'd and lame,
Blown off, like blossoms, never made to bear;
Till I came finish'd, her last labour'd care. Dryden.

TO ROUGHDRAW. v. a. [rough and draw.] To trace coarsely.
His victories we scarce could keep in view,
Or polish 'em to fast, as he roughdraw. Dryden.

TO ROUGHEN. v. a. [from rough.] To make rough.
Such difference there is in tongues, that the same figure, which roughens one, gives majesty to another; and that was it which Virgil studied in his verses. Dryden's Ded. to Æneis.
Ah! where must needy poet seek for aid,
When dust and rain at once his coat invade!
His only coat; when dust confus'd with rain,
Roughens the nap, and leaves a mingled stain. Swift.

TO ROUGHEN. v. n. To grow rough.
The broken landkip
Ascending roughens into rigid hills. Thomson's Spring.

TO ROUGHEN. v. a. [rough and hew.] To give to any thing the first appearance of form.
There's a divinity that shapes our ends,
Roughhew them how we will. Shakeſp. Hamlet.
The whole world, without art and dress,
Would be but one great wilderness,
And mankind but a savage herd,
For all that nature has conferr'd:
This does but roughhew and design,
Leaves art to polish and refine. Hudibras, p. iii.

ROUGHHEWN. partic. adj.
1. Rugged; unpolished; uncivil; unrefined.
A roughhewn seaman, being brought before a justice for some misdemeanour, was by him ordered away to prison; and would not stir; saying, it was better to stand where he was, than go to a worse place. Bacon's Apophthegms.

2. Not yet nicely finished.
I hope to obtain a candid construction of this roughhewn ill-timber'd discourse. Howel's Vocal Forest.

ROUGHLY. adv. [from rough.]
1. With uneven surface; with asperities on the surface.
2. Harshly; uncivilly; rudely.
No Mammon would there let him long remain,
For terror of the torments manifold,
In which the damned souls he did behold,
But roughly him bespake. Fairy Queen, b. ii.
Rebuk'd, and roughly sent to prison,
Th' immediate heir of England! was this easy? Shakeſp.

3. Severely; without tenderness.
Some friends of vice pretend,
That I the tricks of youth too roughly blame. Dryden.

4. Austere to the taste.
5. Boisterously; tempestuously.
6. Harshly to the ear.

ROUGHNESS. n. f. [from rough.]
1. Superficial asperity; unevenness of surface.
The little roughnesses or other inequalities of the leather against the cavity of the cylinder, now and then put a stop to the descent or ascent of the sucker. Boyle.
While the steep horrid roughness of the wood
Strives with the gentle calaness of the flood.
When the diamond is not only found, but the roughness smoothed, cut into a form, and set in gold, then we cannot but acknowledge, that it is the perfect work of art and nature. Denham.
Such a perfusion as this well fixed, will smooth all the roughness of the way that leads to happiness, and render all the conflicts with our lusts pleasing. Atterbury.

ROU

2. Austere to the taste.
Divers plants contain a grateful sharpness, as lemons; or an austere and incoarcted roughness, as flocs. Brown.

3. Taste of asstringency.
A tobacco-pipe broke in my mouth, and the spitting out the pieces left such a delicious roughness on my tongue, that I champed up the remaining part. Speltator.

4. Harshness to the ear.
In the roughness of the numbers and cadences of this play, which was so designed, you will see somewhat more masterly than in any of my former tragedies. Dryden.
The Swedes, Danes, Germans, and Dutch attain to the pronunciation of our words with ease, because our syllables resemble theirs in roughness; and frequency of consonants. Sw.

5. Ruggedness of temper; coarseness of manners; tendency to rudeness; coarseness of behaviour and address.
Roughness is a needless cause of discontent; severity breedeth fear; but roughness breedeth hate: even reproofs from authority ought to be grave and not taunting. Bacon.
When our minds eyes are disengag'd,
They quicken sloth, perplexities untie,
Make roughness smooth, and hardness mollify. Denham.
Roughness of temper is apt to discountenance the timorous or modest.

6. Absence of delicacy.
Should feasting and balls once get among the cantons, their military roughness would be quickly lost, their tempers would grow too soft for their climate. Addison.

7. Severity; violence of discipline.
8. Violence of operation in medicines.
9. Unpolished or unfinished state.
10. Inelegance of dress or appearance.
11. Tempestuousness; storminess.
12. Coarseness of features.

ROUGH. old pret. of reach. [commonly written by Spenser rough.] Reached.
The moon was a month old, when Adam was no more,
And rough not to five weeks, when he came to fivecore. Shakeſp. Love's Labour Lost.

TO ROUGHWORK. v. a. [rough and work.] To work coarsely over without the least nicety.
Thus you must continue, till you have roughwork all your work from end to end. Moxon's Mech. Exercises.

ROUNCEVAL. n. f. [from Rouneval, a town at the foot of the Pirenees.] See PEA, of which it is a species.
Dig garden,
And set as a dainty thy runcival peaſe. Tuſſer.

ROUND. adj. [rond, French; rondo, Italian; rund, Dutch; rotundus, Latin.]
1. Cylindrical.
Hollow engines long and round thick ram'd. Milton.

2. Circular.
His pond'rous shield large and round behind him. Milton.

3. Spherical; orbicular.
The outside bare of this round world. Milton.

4. [Rotundo ore, Lat.] Smooth; without defect in sound.
In his satyrs Horace is quick, round, and pleasant, and as nothing so bitter, so not so good as Juvenal. Peachment.

5. Not broken.
Pliny put a round number near the truth, rather than a fraction. Arbutnot on Coins.

6. Large; not inconsiderable.
Three thousand ducats! 'tis a good round sum. Shakeſp.
They set a round price upon your head. Addison.
It is not easy to foresee what a round sum of money may do among a people, who have tamely suffered the Franche comté to be seized on. Addison's Remarks on Italy.
She called for a round sum out of the privy purse. Hooke.

7. Plain; clear; fair; candid; open.
Round dealing is the honour of man's nature; and a mixture of falsehood is like alloy in gold and silver, which may make the metal work the better, but it embaleth it. Bacon.

8. Quick; brisk.
Painting is a long pilgrimage; if we do not actually begin the journey, and travel at a round rate, we shall never arrive at the end of it. Dryden's Dufresnoy.
Sir Roger heard them upon a round trot; and after pausing, told them, that much might be said on both sides. Addison.

9. Plain; free without delicacy or reserve; almost rough.
Let his queen mother all alone intreat him,
To shew his griefs; let her be round with him. Shakeſp.
The kings interpolated in a round and princely manner; not only by way of request and persuasion, but also by way of protestation and menace. Bacon.

ROUND. n. f.
1. A circle; a sphere; an orb.
Hie thee hither,
That I may pour my spirits in thine ear,
And chastise with the valour of my tongue
All that impedes thee from the golden round,
Which fate and metaphysical aid doth seem
To have crown'd thee withal. Shakeſp. Macbeth.

ROU

I'll charm the air to give a sound,
While you perform your antick round. Shakefp. Macbeth.
Three or four we'll dress like urchins,
With rounds of waxen tapers on their heads,
And rattles in their hands. Shakefp. Mer. Wives of Windsor.
What is this,
That rises like the issue of a king,
And wears upon his baby brow the round
And top of sovereignty? Shakefp. Macbeth.
Hirsute roots are a middle fort, between the bulbous and fibrous; that, besides the putting forth sap upwards and downwards, putteth forth in round. Bacon.
What if the fun
Be centre to the world; and other stars,
By his attractive virtue and their own
Incited, dance about him various rounds. Milton.
Knit your hands, and beat the ground
In a light fantastick round. Milton.
He did foretell and prophecy of him,
Who to his realms that azure round hath join'd. Denham.
They meet, they wheel, they throw their darts afar;
Then in a round the mingled bodies run,
Flying they follow, and pursuing shun. Dryden.
How shall I then begin, or where conclude,
To draw a fame so truly circular?
For, in a round, what order can be shew'd,
Where all the parts so equal perfect are? Dryden.
The mouth of Vesuvio has four hundred yards in diameter; for it seems a perfect round. Addison.
This image on the medal plac'd,
With its bright round of titles grac'd,
And stamp on British coins shall live. Addison.
2. Rundle; step of a ladder.
When he once attains the utmost round,
He then unto the ladder turns his back,
Looks in the clouds, scorning the base degrees
By which he did ascend. Shakefp. Julius Caesar.
Many are kick'd down ere they have climbed the two or three first rounds of the ladder. Government of the Tongue.
All the rounds like Jacob's ladder rise;
The lowest hid in earth, the topmost in the skies. Dryden.
This is the last stage of human perfection, the utmost round of the ladder whereby we ascend to heaven. Norris.
3. The time in which any thing has passed through all hands, and comes back to the first: hence applied to a carousal.
A gentle round fill'd to the brink,
To this and t' other friend I drink. Suckling.
Women to cards may be compar'd; we play
A round or two, when us'd, we throw away. Granville.
The feast was serv'd; the bowl was crown'd;
To the king's pleasure went the mirthful round. Prior.
4. A revolution; a course ending at the point where it began.
We, that are of purer fire,
Imitate the starry changes,
Who, in their mighty watchful spheres,
Lead in swift rounds the months and years. Milton.
If nothing will please people, unless they be greater than nature intended, what can they expect, but the a's round of vexatious changes. L'Estrange.
How then to drag a wretched life beneath
An endless round of still returning woes,
And all the gnawing pangs of vain remorse?
What torment's this? Smith.
Till by one countless sum of woes oppress'd,
Hoary with cares, and ignorant of rest,
We find the vital springs relax'd and worn;
Compell'd our common impotence to mourn,
Thus through the round of age, to childhood we return. Prior.
5. [Ronde, Fr.] A walk performed by a guard or officer, to survey a certain district.
ROUND. adv.
1. Every way; on all sides.
The terror of God was upon the cities round about. Gen.
All sounds whatsoever move round; that is, on all sides, upwards, downwards, forwards, and backwards. Bacon.
In darkness and with dangers compass'd round. Milton.
2. [En rond, à la ronde, Fr.] In a revolution.
At the best 'tis but cunning; and if he can in his own fancy raise that to the opinion of true wisdom, he comes round to practise his deceits upon himself. Gov. of the Tong.
Some preachers, prepared only upon two or three points, run the same round from one end of the year to another. Add.
3. Circularly.
One foot he center'd, and the other turn'd
Round through the vast profundity obscure. Milton.
4. Not in a direct line.
If merely to come in, Sir, they go out;
The way they take is strangely round about. Pope.
ROUND. prep.
1. On every side of.
To officiate light round this opacous earth. Milton.

ROU

2. About; circularly about.
He led the hero round
The confines of the blest Elyian ground. Dryden.
3. All over.
Round the world we roam,
Fore'd from our pleasing fields and native home. Dryden.
TO ROUND. v. a. [rotundo, Lat. from the noun.]
1. To surround; to encircle.
Would that th' inclusive verge
Of golden metal, that must round my brow,
Were red-hot steel to fear me to the brain. Shakefp.
We are such stuff
As dreams are made on, and our little life
Is rounded with a sleep. Shakefp. Tempest.
This distemper'd messenger of wet,
The many coloured Iris, rounds thine eyes. Shakefp.
The vilest cockle gaping on the coast,
That rounds the ample sea. Prior.
2. To make spherical or circular.
Worms with many feet, which round themselves into balls, are bred chiefly under logs of timber. Bacon.
When silver has been lessened in any piece carrying the publick stamp, by clipping, washing, or rounding, the laws have declared it not to be lawful money. Locke.
With the cleaving-knife and mawl split the stuff into a square piece near the size, and with the draw-knife round off the edges to make it fit for the lathe. Mason.
Can any one tell, how the fun, planets, and satellites were rounded into their particular spheroidal orbs. Chyene.
3. To raise to a relief.
The figures on our modern medals are raised and rounded to a very great perfection. Addison on Ancient Medals.
4. To move about any thing.
To those beyond the polar circle, day
Had unbrighten'd shone, while the low sun,
To recompense his distance, in your fight
Had rounded still th' horizon, and not known Or East or West. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. x.
5. To mould into smoothness.
These accomplishments, applied in the pulpit, appear by a quaint, terse, florid file rounded into periods and cadences, without propriety or meaning. Swift's Miscellanies.
TO ROUND. v. n.
1. To grow round in form.
The queen, your mother, rounds apace; we shall Present our services to a fine new prince. Shakefp.
2. [Runden, German; whence Chaucer writes it better run.]
To whirler.
Being come to the supping place, one of Kalanders' servants rounded in his ear; at which he retired. Sidney.
France,
Whom zeal and charity brought to the field
As God's own soldier, rounded in the ear,
With that same purpose changes. Shakefp.
They're here with me already; whispering, rounding,
Sicilia is a fo forth; 'tis far gone. Shakefp.
Cicero was at dinner, where an ancient lady said she was but forty: one that sat by rounded him in the ear, she is far more out of the question: Cicero answered, I must believe her, for I heard her say so any time these ten years. Bacon.
The fox rounds the new elect in the ear, with a piece of secret service that he could do him. L'Estrange.
3. To go rounds.
They keep watch, or nightly rounding walk. Milton.
ROUNDABOUT. adj. [This word is used as an adjective, though it is only an adverb united to a substantive by a colloquial license of language, which ought not to have been admitted into books.]
1. Ample; extensive.
Those sincerely follow reason, but for want of having large sound, roundabout sense, have not a full view of all that relates to the question. Locke on Understanding.
2. Indirect; loose.
Paraphrase is a roundabout way of translating, invented to help the barrenness, which translators, overlooking in themselves, have apprehended in our tongue. Fellon.
ROUNDEL. n. f.
ROUNDELAY. n. f.
1. [Rondelet, French.] A kind of ancient poetry, which commonly consists of thirteen verses, of which eight are of one kind of rhyme and five of another: it is divided into three couplets; and at the end of the second and third, the beginning of the roundel is repeated in an equivocal sense, if possible. Trevisa.
Siker, like a roundel never heard I none,
Little lacketh Perigot of the best,
And Willie is not greatly over-gone,
So wren his under-songs well addrest. Spenser's Poet.
To hear thy rimes and roundelay,
Which thou wert wont in wassail hills to sing,
I more delight than lark in summer days,
Whole echo made the neighb'ring groves to ring. Spenser.
Come

ROU

Come now a roundel and a fairy song. Shakefp.
They list'ning heard him, while he search'd the grove,
And loudly sung his roundelay of love,
But on the sudden stop'd. Dryden's Knight's Tale.
2. [Rondelle, Fr.] A round form or figure.
The Spaniards, casting themselves into roundels, and their strongest ships walling in the rest, made a flying march to Calais. Bacon.
The muses and graces made festivals; the fawns, satyrs, and nymphs did dance their roundelays. Howel.
ROUNDER. n. f. [from round.] Circumference; inclosure.
If you fondly pass our proffer'd offer,
'Tis not the rounder of your old fac'd walls
Can hide you from our messengers of war. Shakefp.
ROUNDEAD. n. f. [round and head.] A puritan, so named from the practice once prevalent among them of cropping their hair round. Shakefp.
Your petitioner always kept hospitality, and drank confusion to the roundheads. Spectator, N° 629.
ROUNDOUSE. n. f. [round and house.] The constable's prison, in which disorderly persons, found in the street, are confined.
They march'd to some fam'd roundhouse. Pope.
ROUNDS. adj. [from round.] Somewhat round; approaching to roundness.
It is not every small crack that can make such a receiver, as is of a roundish figure, useless to our experiment. Boyle.
ROUNDLY. adv. [from round.]
1. In a round form; in a round manner.
2. Openly; plainly; without reserve.
Injoin gainfayers, giving them roundly to understand, that where our duty is submission, weak oppositions betoken pride. Harker, b. v. f. 8.
You'll prove a jolly furly groom,
That take it on you at the first so roundly. Shakefp.
Mr. de Mortier roundly said, that to cut off all contentions of words, he would propole two means for peace. Hayward.
From a world of phenomena, there is a principle that acts out of wisdom and counsel, as was abundantly evidenced, and as roundly acknowledged. More's Divine Dialogues.
He affirms every thing roundly, without any art, rehorick, or circumlocution. Addison's Count Tariff.
3. Briskly; with speed.
When the mind has brought itself to attention, it will be able to cope with difficulties, and master them, and then it may go roundly. Locke.
4. Completely; to the purpose; vigorously; in earnest.
I was called any thing, and I would have done any thing, indeed too, and roundly too. Shakefp. Henry IV.
This lord justice caused the earl of Kildare to be arrested, and cancelled such charters as were lately resumed, and proceeded every way so roundly and severely, as the nobility did much dislike him. Davies on Ireland.
ROUNDS. n. f. [from round.]
1. Circularity; sphericity; cylindrical form.
The same reason is of the roundness of the bubble; for the air within avoideh discontinuance, and therefore casteth itself into a round figure. Bacon's Natural History.
Bracelets of pearl gave roundness to her arm,
And ev'ry gem augmented ev'ry charm. Prior.
Roundness is the primary essential mode or difference of a body. Watts's Logic.
2. Smoothness.
The whole period and compass of this speech was delightsome for the roundness, and grave for the strangeness. Spenser.
3. Honesty; openness; vigorous measures.
TO ROUSE. v. a. [of the same class of words with raise and rise.]
1. To wake from rest.
At once the crowd arose, confus'd and high;
For Mars was early up, and rous'd the sky. Dryden.
Rev'rent I touch thee! but with honest zeal,
To rouse the watchmen of the publick weal,
To virtue's work provoke the tardy hall,
And goad the prelate slumbering in his stall. Pope.
2. To excite to thought or action.
The Dane and Swede, rous'd up by fierce alarms,
Bless the wife conduct of her pious arms;
Soon as her fleets appear, their terrors cease,
And all the northern world lies hush'd in peace. Addison.
I'll thunder in their ears their country's cause,
And try to rouse up all that's Roman in them. Addison, Cato.
The heat, with which Luther treated his adversaries, though strained too far, was extremely well fitted by the providence of God to rouse up a people, the most phlegmatick of any in Christendom. Atterbury.
They would be very much rous'd and awakened by such a fight; but they would not however be convinced. Atterbury.
3. To put into action.
As an eagle, seeing prey appear,
His airy plumes doth rouse full rudely dight;
So shak'd he, that horror was to hear. Fairy Queen.

ROW

Bluff'ring winds had rous'd the sea. Milton.
4. To drive a beast from his lair.
The blood more flurs,
To rouse a lion, or to start a hare. Shakefp. Henry IV.
He stooped down, he couched as a lion, and as an old lion; who shall rouse him up? Genesis xlix. 9.
Th' unexpected found
Of dogs and men his wakeful ear does wound;
Rous'd with the noise, he scarce believes his ear,
Willing to think th' illusions of his fear
Had giv'n this false alarm. Denham.
Now Cancer glows with Phœbus' fiery car,
The youth ruff eager to the sylvan war;
Swarm o'er the lawns, the forest-walks furround,
Rouse the fleet harp, and cheer the op'ning hound. Pope.
TO ROUSE. v. n.
1. To awake from slumber.
Men, sleeping found by whom they dread,
Rouse and bestir themselves ere well awake. Milton.
Richard, who now was half asleep,
Rous'd; nor would longer silence keep. Prior.
Melancholy lifts her head;
Morpheus rouses from his bed. Pope's St. Cecilia.
2. To be excited to thought or action.
Good things of day begin to droop and drowse,
While night's black agents to their prey do rouse. Shakefp.
ROUSE. n. f. [ruse, German, half drunk.] A dose of liquor rather too large.
They have given me a rouse already.
—Not past a pint as I am a soldier. Shakefp. Othello.
No jocular health that Denmark drinks to-day,
But the great cannon to the clouds shall tell;
And the king's rouse shall bruit it back again;
Respeaking earthly thunder. Shakefp.
ROUSER. n. f. [from rouse.] One who rouses.
ROUT. n. f. [rot, Dutch.]
1. A clamorous multitude; a rabble; a tumultuous croud.
Besides the endless routs of wretched thralls,
Which thither were assembled day by day
From all the world. Fairy Queen, b. i.
A rout of people there assembled were,
Of every fort and nation under sky,
Which with great uproar preat to draw near
To th' upper part. Spenser.
If that rebellion
Came like itself in base and abject routs,
Led on by bloody youth, goaded with rage,
And countenanced by boys and beggary,
You, reverend father, then had not been there. Shakefp.
Farmers were to forfeit their holds in case of unlawful retainer, or partaking in routs and unlawful assemblies. Bacon.
Such a tacit league is against such routs and shovels, as have utterly degenerated from the laws of nature. Bacon.
Nor do I name of men the common rout,
That wandering loose about,
Grow up and perish, as the summer fly. Milton's Agonistes.
The mad ungovernable rout,
Full of confusion and the fumes of wine,
Lov'd such variety and antick tricks. Roscommon.
Harley spies
The doctor fasten'd by the eyes
At Charing-cross among the rout,
Where painted monsters are hung out. Swift.
2. [Route, Fr.] Confusion of an army defeated or dispersed.
Thy army,
As if they could not stand when thou wert down,
Dispers'd in rout, betook them all to fly. Daniel.
Their mightiest quell'd, the battle swerv'd,
With many an inroad gor'd; deformed rout
Enter'd, and foul disorder. Milton's Par. Lost, b. vi.
TO ROUT. v. a. To dissipate and put into confusion by defeat.
The next way to end the wars with him, and to rout him quite, should be to keep him from invading of those countries adjoining. Spenser on Ireland.
That party of the king's horse, that charged the Scots, so totally routed and defeated their whole army, that they fled. Glarendon, b. viii.
TO ROUT. v. n. To assemble in clamorous and tumultuous crouds.
The meaneer fort routed together, and suddenly assailing the earl in his house, slew him. Bacon's Henry VII.
ROUTE. n. f. [route, Fr.] Road; way.
Wide through the fuzzy field their route they take,
Their bleeding bosoms force the thorny brake. Gay.
ROW. n. f. [reib, German.] A rank or file; a number of things ranged in a line.
Lips never part, but that they show
Of precious pearl the double row. Sidney, b. ii.
After them all dancing on a row,
The comely virgins came with garlands dight,
As fresh as flowres. Fairy Queen, b. i.

Where

ROY

Where any row
Of fruit trees, overwoody, reach'd too far
Their pamp'rd boughs, and needed hands to check Fruitless embraces Milton's Paradise Lost, b. v.
A triple mounted row of pillars, laid
On wheels. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. vi.
Where the bright seraphim in burning row,
Their loud uplifted angel trumpets blow. Milton.
The victor honour'd with a nobler vest,
Where gold and purple strive in equal rows. Dryden.
Why round our coaches crowd the white-glov'd beaux,
Why bows the sidebox from its inmost rows. Pope.
To ROW. v. n. [rojan, Saxon.] To impel a vessel in the water by oars.
He saw them toiling in rowing; for the wind was contrary. Mark vi. 48.
Some of these troughs or canoes were so great, that above twenty men have been found rowing in one. Abbot.
The bold Britons then securely row'd;
Charles and his virtue was their sacred load. Waller.
The watermen turned their barge, and rowed softly, that they might take the cool of the evening. Dryden.
The rowing crew,
To tempt a fare, clothe all their tilts in blue. Gay.
To Row. v. a. To drive or help forward by oars.
The swan rows her state with oary feet. Milton.
Ro'WEL. n. f. [rouelle, Fr.]
1. The points of a spur turning on an axis.
He gave his able horse the head,
And, bending forward, struck his agile heels
Against the panting sides of his poor jade
Up to the rowel head. Shakefp. Henry IV. p. ii.
A rider like myself, who ne'er wore rowel
Nor iron on his heel. Shakefp. Cymbeline.
A mullet is the rowel of a spur, and hath never but five points; a star hath six. Peckham on Blazoning.
He spur'd his fiery steed
With goading rowels, to provoke his speed. Dryden.
2. A feton; a roll of hair or silk put into a wound to hinder it from healing, and provoke a discharge.
To Ro'WEL. v. a. To pierce through the skin, and keep the wound open by a rowel.
Rowel the horse in the chest. Mortimer's Husbandry.
Ro'WEN. n. f.
Rowen is a field kept up till after Michaelmas, that the corn left on the ground may sprout into green. Notes on Tupper.
Then spare it for rowen, till Michel be past,
To lengthen thy dairies, no better thou hast. Tupper.
Turn your cows, that give milk, into your rowens, till snow comes. Mortimer's Husbandry.
Ro'WER. n. f. [from rowa.] One that manages an oar.
Four galleys first, which equal rowers bear,
Advancing in the watry lists, appear. Dryden.
The bishop of Salisbury ran down with the stream thirty miles in an hour, by the help of but one rower. Addison.
Ro'YAL. adj. [royal, Fr.]
1. Kingly; belonging to a king; becoming a king; regal.
The royal stock of David. Milton.
Thrice happy they, who thus in woods and groves,
From courts retired, possess their peaceful loves:
Of royal maids how wretched is the fate! Granville.
2. Noble; illustrious.
What news from Venice?
How doth that royal merchant, good Antonio? Shakefp.
Ro'YALIST. n. f. [from royal.] Adherent to a king.
Where Candish fought, the royalists prevail'd,
Neither his courage nor his judgment fail'd. Waller.
The old church of England royalists, another name for a man who prefers his conscience before his interests, are the most meritorious subjects in the world, as having passed all those terrible tests, which domineering malice could put them to, and carried their credit and their conscience clear. South.
To Ro'YALIZE. v. a. [from royal.] To make royal.
Ere you were queen, ay, or your husband king,
To royalize his blood, I spilt mine own. Shakefp.
Ro'YALLY. adv. [from royal.] In a kingly manner; regally; as becomes a king.
It shall be my care,
To have you royally appointed. Shakefp. Wint. Tale.
His body shall be royally inter'd,
And the last funeral poms adorn his herse. Dryden.
ROYALTY. n. f. [royalté, Fr.]
1. Kingship; character or office of a king.
Suppose, that you have seen
The well appointed king at Hampton peer, Embark his royalty. Shakefp. Henry V.
Draw, you rascal; you come with letters against the king, and take vanity the puppet's part against the royalty of her father. Shakefp. King Lear.
He will lose his head, ere give content,
His master's son, as worshipfully he terms it,
Shall lose the royalty of England's throne. Shakefp.
If they had held their royalties by this title, either there must have been but one fovereign, or else every father of a family had as good a claim to royalty as these. Locke.

RUB

2. State of a king.
I will, alas! be wretched to be great,
And high in royalty, and grieve in state. Prior.
3. Emblems of royalty.
Wherefore do I assume
These royalties, and not refuse to reign. Milton.
To ROYNE. v. a. [rogner, Fr.] To gnaw; to bite. Spenser.
Ro'YNISH. adj. [rogneux, Fr. mangy, paltry.] Paltry; sorry; mean; rude.
The roynish clown, at whom so oft
Your grace was wont to laugh, is also missing. Shakefp.
To RUB. v. a. [rubio, Welsh; reiben, German, to wipe.]
1. To clean or smooth any thing by passing something over it; to scour; to wipe; to perfrigate.
2. To touch so as to have something of that which touches behind.
Their straw-built citadel new rub'd with balm. Milton.
In narrow clefts, in the monument that stands over him, catholicks rub their beads, and smell his bones, which they say have in them a natural perfume, though very like applestick balm; and what would make one suspect, that they rub the marble with it, it is observed, that the scent is stronger in the morning than at night. Addison's Remarks on Italy.
3. To move one body upon another.
Look, how the rubs her hands.
—It is an accustomed action with her, to seem thus washing her hands. Shakefp. Macbeth.
The bare rubbing of two bodies violently produces heat, and often fire.
Two bones, rubbed hard against one another, produce a fetid smell. Arbutnot on Aliments.
4. To obstruct by collision.
'Tis the duke's pleasure,
Whose disposition all the world well know,
Will not be rubb'd nor stop'd. Shakefp. King Lear.
5. To polish; to retouch.
The whole business of our redemption is, to rub over the defaced copy of the creation, to reprint God's image upon the soul. South.
6. To remove by friction.
A forcible object will rub out the freshest colours at a stroke, and paint others. Collier of the Assent.
If their minds are well principled with inward civility, a great part of the roughness, which sticks to the outside for want of better teaching, time, and observation, will rub off; but if ill, all the rules in the world will not polish them. Lact.
7. To touch hard.
He, who before he was espied, was afraid, after being perceived, was ashamed, now being hardly rubbed upon, left both fear and shame, and was moved to anger. Subey.
8. To rub down. To clean or curry a horse.
When his fellow beasts are weary grown,
He'll play the groom, give oats, and rub 'em down. Dryd.
9. To RUB up. To excite; to awaken.
You will find me not to have rubbed up the memory of what some heretofore in the city did. South.
10. To RUB up. To polish; to retouch.
To RUB. v. n.
1. To fret; to make a friction.
This last allusion gaul'd the panther more,
Because indeed it rubb'd upon the fore;
Yet seem'd the not to winch, though shrewdly pain'd. Dryd.
2. To get through difficulties.
Many a lawyer, when once hampered, rub off as well as they can.
'Tis as much as one can do, to rub through the world, though perpetually a doing. L'Estrange.
RUB. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. Collision; hindrance; obstruction.
The breath of what I mean to speak
Shall blow each dust, each straw, each little rub
Out of the path, which shall directly lead Thy foot to England's throne. Shakefp. King John.
Now every rub is smoothed in our way. Shakefp.
Those you make friends,
And give your hearts to, when they once perceive
The least rub in your fortunes, fall away. Shakefp.
Upon this rub, the English ambassadors thought fit to demur, and sent to receive directions. Hayward.
He expounds the giddy wonder
Of my weary steps, and under Spreads a path clear as the day,
Where no churlish rub says nay. Craford.
He that once sins, like him that slides on ice,
Goes swiftly down the slippery ways of vice;
Though conscience checks him, yet those rubs gone o'er,
He slides on smoothly, and looks back no more. Dryden.
An hereditary right is to be preferred before election; because the government is so disposed, that it almost executes itself: and upon the death of a prince, the administration goes on without any rub or interruption. Swift.
2. Friction;

RUB

2. Friction; act of rubbing.
3. Inequality of ground, that hinders the motion of a bowl.
We'll play at bowls.
—'Twill make me think the world is full of rubs. Shakefp.
And that my fortune runs against the bias.
4. Difficulty; cause of uneasiness.
To sleep; perchance to dream; ay, there's the rub. Shak.
RUB-STONE. n. f. [rub and stone.] A stone to scour or sharpen.
A cradle for barlies, with rub-stone and sand. Tupper.
RU'BBER. n. f. [from rub.]
1. One that rubs.
2. The instrument with which one rubs.
Servants blow the fire with puffing cheeks, and lay
The rubbers, and the bathing sheets display. Dryden.
Rub the dirty tables with the napkins, for it will save your wearing out the common rubbers. Swift.
3. A coarse file.
The rough or coarse file, if large, is called a rubber, and takes off the unevenness which the hammer made in the forging. Moxon's Mechanical Exercises.
4. A game; a contest; two games out of three.
The ass was to stand by, to see two boobies try their title to him by a rubber of cuffs. L'Estrange.
If butchers had but the manners to go to sharps, gentlemen would be contented with a rubber at cuffs. Collier on Duelling.
5. A whetstone.
RUBICAN. adj. [rubican, Fr.] Rubican colour of a horse is one that is bay, sorrel, or black, with a light, grey, or white upon the flanks, but so that this grey or white is not predominant there. Far. Dict.
RU'BIDGE. n. f. [from rub; as perhaps meaning, at first,
RU'BISH. } dust made by rubbing. Rubbage is not used.]
1. Ruins of building; fragments of matter used in building.
What trash is Rome?
What rubbish, and what offal? when it serves
For the base matter to illuminate So vile a thing as Caesar. Shakefp. Julius Caesar.
Such conceits seem too fine among this rubbage. Watton.
A fabric, though high and beautiful, if founded on rubbish, is easily made the triumph of the winds. Glanv. Scetf.
When the foundation of a state is once loosened, the least commotion lays the whole in rubbish. L'Estrange.
The Almighty cast a pitying eye,
He saw the town's one half in rubbish lie. Dryden.
The enemy hath avoided a battle, and taken a surer way to confound us, by letting our courage evaporate against stones and rubbish. Swift.
2. Confusion; mingled mass.
That noble art of political lying ought not to lie any longer in rubbish and confusion. Arbutnot's History of John Bull.
3. Any thing vile and worthless.
RUBBLE-STONE. n. f.
Rubble-stones owe their name to their being rubbed and worn by the water, at the latter end of the deluge, departing in hurry and with great precipitation. Woodward.
RU'BUND. adj. [rubicundus, Fr. rubicundus, Lat.] Inclining to redness. Dict.
RU'BIED. adj. [from ruby.] Red as a ruby.

Thrice upon thy rubbed lip. Milton.
Angels food, and rubied nectar flows
In pearl, in diamond, and in massy gold. Milton.
RU'BIFICK. adj. [rubro and facio, Lat.] Making red.
While the several species of rays, as the rubifick, are by refraction separated one from another, they retain those motions proper to each. Grew's Cosmol.
To RU'BIFY. v. a. To make red.
This topically applied, becomes a phænigmus or rubifying medicine, and of such fiery parts as to conceive fire of themselves, and burn a house. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
RU'BIOUS. adj. [rubescens, Lat.] Ruddy; red. Not used.
Diana's lip
Is not more smooth and rubious. Shakefp. Twelfth Night.
RU'BRICATED. adj. [from rubrica, Lat.] Smeared with red.
RU'BRIK. n. f. [rubrique, Fr. rubrica, Lat.] Directions printed in books of law and in prayer books; so termed, because they were originally distinguished by being in red ink.
No date prefix'd,
Directs me in the starry rubrick set. Milton's Par. Reg.
They had their particular prayers according to the several days and months; and their tables or rubricks to instruct them. Stillington.
RU'BRIK. adj. Red.
The light and rays, which appear red, or rather make objects appear so, I call rubrick or red-making. Newton.
What though my name stood rubrick on the walls. Pope.
To RU'BRIK. v. a. [from the noun.] To adorn with red.
RU'BIFORM. adj. [rubro, Lat. and form.] Having the form of red.
Of those rays, which pass close by the snow, the rubiform will be the least refracted; and so come to the eye in the directest lines. Newton's Opticks.

RUD

RU'BY. n. f. [from ruber, Lat.]
1. A precious stone of a red colour, next in hardness and value to a diamond.
Up, up, fair bride! and call
Thy stars from out their several boxes, take Thy rubies, pearls, and diamonds forth; and make Thyself a constellation of them all. Denne.
Melpomene would be represented like a manly lady, upon her head a dressing of pearl, diamonds, and rubies. Peacham.
Crowns were on their royal scutcheons plac'd,
With sapphires, diamonds, and with rubies grac'd. Dryden.
2. Redness.
You can behold such sights,
And keep the natural ruby of your cheeks;
When mine is blanch'd with fear. Shakefp. Macbeth.
3. Any thing red.
Desire of wine
Thou could'st not repress; nor did the dancing ruby
Sparkling, out-pour'd, the flavour; or the smell,
Or taste, that cheers the hearts of gods and men,
Allure thee from the cool crystalline stream. Milton.
4. A blain; a blotch; a carbuncle. Anf.
RU'BY. adj. [from the noun.] Of a red colour.
Wounds, like dumb mouths, do ope their ruby lips. Shak.

Is not more smooth and ruby than thy small pipe
Is at the maiden's organ shrill and found. Shakefp.
RU'CTA'TION. n. f. [ructo, Lat.] A belching arising from wind and indigestion.
To RU'D. v. a. [rubu, Saxon, redness.] To make red;
Her cheeks, like apples, which the sun had ruddied. Spens.
RU'DDER. n. f. [roeder, Dutch.]
1. The instrument at the stern of a vessel, by which its course is governed.
My heart was to thy rudder ty'd by th' strings,
And thou should'st tow me after. Shakefp.
They loosed the rudder bands, and hoisted up the main-sail,
and made toward shore. Acts xxvii. 40.
Those, that attribute unto the faculty any first or sole power, have therein no other understanding, than such a one hath, who, looking into the stern of a ship, and finding it guided by the helm and rudder, doth ascribe some absolute virtue to the piece of wood, without all consideration of the hand that guides it. Raleigh's History of the World.
Fishes first to shipping did impart;
Their tail the rudder, and their head the prow. Dryden.
Thou held'st the rudder with a steady hand,
Till safely on the shore the bark did land. Dryden.
2. Any thing that guides or governs the course.
RU'DDINESS. [from ruddy.] The quality of approaching to redness.
The ruddiness upon her lip is wet;
You'll mar it, if you kiss it. Shakefp. Winter's Tale.
If the flesh lose its ruddiness; and look pale and withered, you may suspect it corrupting. Wise's Surgery.
RU'DDLE. n. f. [rudal, Islandick.] Red earth.
Ruddle owes its colour to an admixture of iron; and as that is in greater or less proportion, it is of a greater or less specific gravity, consistence, or hardness. Woodward.
RU'DDOCK. n. f. [rubecula, Lat.] A kind of bird.
Of singing birds, they have linnets, and ruddocks. Carew's.
RU'DDY. adj. [rubu, Saxon.]
1. Approaching to redness; pale red.
We may see the old man in a morning,
Lusty as health, come ruddy to the field,
And there pursue the chase, as if he meant
To o'ertake time, and bring back youth again. Orway.
New leaves on ev'ry bough were seen;
Some ruddy colour'd, some of lighter green. Dryden.
Ten wildings have I gather'd for my dear;
How ruddy like your lips their streaks appear! Dryden.
Ceres, in her prime,
Seems fertile, and with ruddiest freight bedeck'd. Philips.
2. Yellow. Used, if to be used at all, only in poetry.
A crown of ruddy gold inclos'd her brow,
Plain without pomp. Dryden.
RUDE. adj. [rude, Saxon; rudis, Lat.]
1. Rough; savage; coarse of manners; uncivil; brutal.
Ruffian, let go that rude uncivil touch;
Thou friend of an ill fashion. Shakefp.
Vane's bold answers, termed rude and ruffian-like, furthered his condemnation. Hayward.
You can with fingle look inflame
The coldest breast, the rudest tame. Waller.
It has been so usual to write prefaces, that a man is thought rude to his reader, who does not give him some account beforehand. Waller.
2. Violent; tumultuous; boisterous; turbulent.
Clouds push'd with winds rude in their shock. Milton.
The water appears white near the shore, and a ship; because the rude agitation breaks it into foam. Boyle.

RUD

3. Harsh; inclement.
Spring does to flow'ry meadows bring.
What the rude winter from them tore. Waller.
4. Ignorant; raw; untaught.
Though I be rude in speech, yet not in knowledge. 2 Cor.
He was yet but rude in the profession of arms, though greedy of honour. Wotton's Buckingham.
Such tools as art yet rude had form'd. Milton.
5. [Rude, Fr.] Rugged; uneven; shapless.
It was the custom to worship rude and unpolished stones.
Stillfleet.
6. Artless; inelegant.
I would know what ancient ground of authority he hath for such a senseless fable; and if he have any of the rude Irish books. Spenser.
One example may serve, till you review the Æneis in the original, unblemished by my rude translation. Dryden.
7. Such as may be done with strength without art.
To his country farm the fool confin'd;
Rude well suited with a rustic mind. Dryden.
- RU'DELY. adv. [from rude.]
1. In a rude manner.
Whether to knock against the gates of Rome,
Or rudely visit them in parts remote;
To fright them ere destroy. Shakespeare, Coriolanus.
2. Without exactness; without nicety; coarsely.
I that am not thap'd for sportive tricks,
I that am rudely stamp'd, and want love's majesty
To strut before a wanton ambling nymph. Shakespeare.
3. Unskilfully.
My muse, though rudely, has resign'd
Some faint resemblance of his godlike mind. Dryden.
4. Violently; boisterously.
With his truncheon he so rudely stroke
Cymocles twice, that twice him forced his foot revoke. Spenser.
- RU'DENESS. n. f. [rudess, Fr. from rude.]
1. Coarseness of manners; incivility.
This rudeness is a fauce to his good wit,
Which gives men stomach to digest his words
With better appetite. Shakespeare, Julius Cæsar.
The publick will in triumphs rudely share,
And kings the rudeness of their joy must bear. Dryden.
The rudeness, tyranny, the oppression, and ingratitude of the late favourites towards their mistresses, were no longer to be born. Swift's Miscellanies.
2. Ignorance; unskilfulness.
What he did amiss, was rather through rudeness and want of judgment, than any malicious meaning. Hayward.
3. Artlessness; inelegance; coarseness.
Let be thy bitter scorn,
And leave the rudeness of that antique age
To them, that liv'd therein in state forlorn. Fairy Queen.
4. Violence; boisterousness.
The ram, that batters down the wall,
For the great twing and rudeness of his poize,
They place before his hand that made the engine. Shakespeare.
5. Storminess; rigour.
You can hardly be too sparing of water to your housed plants; the not observing of this, destroys more plants than all the rudenesses of the season.  Evelyn's Calendar.
- RU'DENTURE. n. f. [French.] In architecture, the figure of a rope or staff, sometimes plain and sometimes carved, wherewith the fustings of columns are frequently filled up. Bailey.
- RU'DERARY. adj. [rudera, Lat.] Belonging to rubbish. Dict.
- RU'DERATION. n. f. In architecture, the laying of a pavement with pebbles or little stones. Bailey.
- RU'DESBY. n. f. [from rude.] An uncivil turbulent fellow. A low word, now little used.
I must be forced
To give my hand, oppos'd against my heart,
Unto a mad-brain rudely, full of spleen. Shakespeare.
Out of my fight, rudely be gone. Shakespeare.
- RU'DIMENT. n. f. [rudiment, Fr. rudimentum, Lat.]
1. The first principles; the first elements of a science.
Such as were trained up in the rudiments, and were so made fit to be by baptism received into the church, the fathers usually term hearers. Hooker.
To learn the order of my fingerings,
I must begin with rudiments of art. Shakespeare.
Thou soon shalt quit
Those rudiments, and see before thine eyes
The monarchies of th' earth, their pomp, and state, Sufficient introduction to inform Thee, of thyself to apt, in regal arts. Milton's Par. Reg.
Could it be believed, that a child should be forced to learn the rudiments of a language, which he is never to use, and neglect the writing a good hand, and casting accounts. Locke.
2. The first part of education.
He was nurtured where he was born in his first rudiments, till the years of ten, and then taught the principles of music. Wotton's Life of Villiers.
The skill and rudiments austere of war. Philips.

RUF

3. The first, inaccurate, unhapen beginning or original of any thing.
Moss is but the rudiment of a plant, and the mould of earth or bark. Bacon's Natural History.
The rudiments of nature are very unlike the grosser appearances. Glanville's Secf.
So looks our monarch on this early fight,
Th' essay and rudiments of great success,
Which all-maturing time must bring to light. Dryden.
Shall that man pretend to religious attainments, who is defective and short in moral? which are but the rudiments, the beginnings, and first draught of religion; as religion is the perfection, refinement, and sublimation of morality. South.
God beholds the first imperfect rudiments of virtue in the soul, and keeps a watchful eye over it, till it has received every grace it is capable of. Addison's Spectator.
The happy boughs
Attire themselves with blooms, sweet rudiments
Of future harvest. Philips.
- RU'DIMENTAL. adj. [from rudiment.] Initial; relating to first principles.
Your first rudimental essays in spectatorship were made in my shop, where you often practised for hours. Speicher.
- TO RUE. v. a. [rue, Fr. from rue.] To grieve for; to regret;
to lament.
Thou temptest me in vain;
To tempt the thing which daily yet I rue,
And the old cause of my continued pain,
With like attempts to like end to renew. Fairy Queen.
You'll rue the time,
That clogs me with this answer. Shakespeare.
France, thou shalt rue this treason with thy tears,
If Talbot but survive. Shakespeare, Henry VI.
There are two councils held;
And that may be determin'd at the one,
Which may make you and him to rue at th' other. Shakespeare.
Oh! treacherous was that breast, to whom you Did trust our counsels, and we both may rue, Having his falsehood found too late, 'twas he
That made me cast you guilty, and you me. Dennis.
That error now, which is become my crime.
Against this, they will Chose freely what it now to justly rue. Milton.
- RUE. n. f. [rue, Fr. ruta, Lat.] An herb called, herb of grace, because holy water was sprinkled with it.
The flower of rue for the most part consists of four hollow leaves, which are placed orbicularly, and expand in form of a rose; out of whose flower-cup rises the pointal, which afterward becomes a roundish fruit, which is generally four cotnured, and composed of four cells fixed to an hard shell of small angular seeds. Miller.
What favor is better,
For places infected, than wormwood and rue. Tupper.
Here did the drop a tear; here, in this place,
I'll set a bank of rue, four herb of grace;
Rue, even for Ruth, here shortly shall be seen,
In the remembrance of a weeping queen. Shakespeare, Rich. II.
The weasel, to encounter the serpent, arms herself with eating of rue. More's Antidote against Atheism.
- RUEFUL. adj. [rue and full.] Mournful; woful; sorrowful.
When we have our armour buckled on,
The venom'd vengeance ride upon our swords,
Spur them to rueful work, rein them from ruth. Shakespeare.
Cocytus, nam'd of lamentation loud,
Heard on the rueful stream. Milton's Paradise Lost.
He sigh'd, and cast a rueful eye;
Our pity kindles, and our passions die. Dryden.
- RUEFULLY. adv. [from rueful.] Mournfully; sorrowfully.
Why should an ape run away from a snail, and very rue- fully and frightfully look back, as being afraid? More.
- RUEFULNESS. n. f. [from rueful.] Sorrowfulness; mournfulness.
- RUE'LL. n. f. [French.] A circle; an assembly at a private house.
The poet, who flourished in the scene, is condemned in the ruelle. Dryden's Preface to Æneis.
- RUFF. n. f. A puckered linen ornament, formerly worn about the neck. See RUFFLE.
You a captain; for what? for tearing a whore's ruff in a bawdy house? Shakespeare, Henry IV. p. II.
We'll revel it,
With ruffs, and cuffs, and fardings. Shakespeare.
Like an uproar in the town,
Before them every thing went down,
Some tore a ruff, and some a gown. Dryden.
Sooner may a gulling weather tip,
By drawing forth heav'n's scheme tell certainly,
What fashion'd hats, or ruffs, or suits next years,
Our giddy-headed antick youth will wear. Dennis.
The ladies freed the neck from those yokes, those linen ruffs in which the simplicity of their grandmothers had en-clothed it. Addison's Guardian, 1st year.

RUF

- I rear'd this flow'r,
Soft on the paper ruff its leaves I spread. Pope.
2. [From ruff scales.] A small river fish.
A ruff or pope is much like the pear for shape, and taken to be better, but will not grow bigger than a gudgeon:
he is an excellent fish and of a pleasant taste. Walton.
  3. A state of roughness. Obsolete.
As fields set all their bristles up; in such a ruff wert thou. Chapman's Iliads.
  4. New state. This seems to be the meaning of this cant
word.
How many princes that, in the ruff of all their glory, have been taken down from the head of a conquering army to the wheel of the victor's chariot. L'Estrange.
  - RU'FFIAN. n. f. [ruffiano, Italian; ruffian, Fr. a bawd; ruffier, Danish, to pillage; perhaps it may be best derived from rough.] A brutal, boisterous, mischievous fellow; a cut-throat; a robber; a murderer.
Ruffian, let go that rude uncivil touch,
Thou friend of an ill fashion! Shakespeare, Two Gent. of Ver.
Have you a ruffian that will swear? drink? dance?
Revel the night? rob? murder? Shakespeare, Henry IV.
Sir Ralph Vane's bold answers termed rude and ruffian like, falling into years apt to take offence, furthered his condemnation. Hayward.
The boasted ancestors of these great men,
Whose virtues you admire, were all such ruffians,
This dread of nations, this almighty Rome,
That comprehends in her wide empire's bounds
All under heaven, was founded on a rape. Addison's Cato.
  - RU'FFIAN. adj. Brutal; savagely boisterous.
Experience'd age
May timely intercept the ruffian rage,
Convene the tribes. Pope's Odyssey.
  - TO RU'FFIAN. v. n. [from the noun.] To rage; to raise tumults; to play the ruffian. Not in use.
A fuller blast ne'er shook our battlements;
If it hath ruffian'd to foam the sea,
What ribs of oak, when mountains melt on them,
Can hold the mortise. Shakespeare, Othello.
  - TO RU'FFLE. v. a. [ruffelen, Dutch, to wrinkle.]
1. To disorder; to put out of form; to make less smooth.
Naughty lady,
These hairs, which thou dost ravish from my chin,
Will quicken and accuse thee; I'm your host;
With robbers hands, my hospitable favour
You should not ruffle thus. Shakespeare, King Lear.
In changeable taffeties, differing colours emerge and variety upon the ruffling of the same piece of silk. Boyle.
As you come here to ruffle vizard punk;
When sober rail, and roar when you are drunk. Dryden.
As the first began to rise,
She smooth'd the ruffled seas, and clear'd the skies. Dryden.
Bear me, some god! oh quickly bear me hence
To wholesome solitude, the nurse of sense;
Where contemplation prunes her ruffled wings,
And the free soul looks down to pity kings. Pope.
  2. To discompose; to disturb; to put out of temper.
Were I Brutus,
And Brutus, Antony, there were an Antony
Would ruffle up your spirits, and put a tongue
In every wound of Cæsar, that should move
The fumes of Rome to rise and mutiny. Shakespeare.
We are transported by passions, and our minds ruffled by the disorders of the body; nor yet can we tell, how the soul should be affected by such kind of agitations. Glanville.
  3. To put out of order; to surpise.
The knight found out
Th' advantage of the ground, where best
He might the ruff'd foe infect. Hudibras, p. i.
  4. To throw disorderly together.
Within a thicket I repos'd, when round
I ruff'd up fall'n leaves in heap, and found,
Let fall from heaven, a sleep interminate. Chapman.
  5. To contract into plaits.
A small skirt of fine ruffled linnen, running along the upper part of the stays before, is called the modesty-piece. Addison.
  - TO RU'FFLE. v. n.
1. To grow rough or turbulent.
The night comes on; and the high winds
Do forely ruffle, for many miles about There's scarce a bush. Shakespeare, King Lear.
The rising winds a ruffling gale afford. Dryden.
  2. To be in loose motion; to flutter.
The fiery courser, when he hears from far
The sprightly trumpets and the shouts of war,
On his right shoulder his thick mane reclin'd,
Ruffles at speed, and dances in the wind. Dryden.
  3. To be rough; to jar; to be in contention.
A valiant son-in-law thou shalt enjoy;
One fit to bandy with thy lawless sons,
To ruffle in the commonwealth of Rome. Shakespeare.

A nation loving gold must rule this place,
Our temples ruin, and our rites deface. Dryden.
2. To destroy; to deprive of felicity or fortune.
By thee rais'd I ruin all my foes. Milton.
Dispose all honours of the sword and gown,
Grace with a nod, and ruin with a frown. Dryden.
A confident dependence ill-grounded creates such a negligence, as will certainly ruin us in the end. Wake.
3. To impoverish.
She would ruin me in silks, were not the quantity that goes to a large pincushion sufficient to make her a gown and petticoat. Addison.
To Ru'in. v. n.
1. To fall in ruins.
Hell heard th' unutterable noise, hell saw Heav'n ruining from heav'n, and would have fled Afrighted, but strict fate had fix'd too deep
Her dark foundations, and too fast had bound. Milton.
2. To run to ruin.
Though he his house of polish'd marble build,
Yet shall it ruin like the moth's frail cell,
Or sheds of reeds, which summer's heat repel. Sandys.
3. To be brought to poverty or misery.
If we are idle, and disturb the industrious in their business, we shall ruin the faster. Locke.
To Ru'inate. v. a. [from ruin. This word is now obsolete.]
1. To subvert; to demolish.

Who gave his blood to lime the stones together,
And set up Lancaster. Shaksp. Henry VI. p. iii.
We'll order well the state,
That like events may ne'er ruinate. Shaksp.
2. To bring to meanness or misery irrecoverable.
The Romans came to pull down kingdoms; Philip and Nabis were already ruinated, and now was his turn to be affailed. Bacon's War with Spain.
So shall the great revenger ruinate
Him and his issue by a dreadful fate. Sandys.
RUINATION. n. f. [from ruinate.] Subversion; demolition; overthrow. Obsolete.
Roman coins were overcovered in the ground, in the sudden ruination of towns by the Saxons. Camden's Remains.
RUINOUS. adj. [ruinusus, Lat. ruinosus, Fr.]
1. Fallen to ruin; dilapidated; demolished.
It is less dangerous, when divers parts of a tower are de-cayed, and the foundation firm, than when the foundation is ruinous. Hayward.
2. Mischievous; pernicious; baneful; destructive.
The birds,
After a night of storm so ruinous,
Clear'd up their choicest notes in bush and spray,
To gratulate the sweet return of mom. Milton's Par. Reg.
Those successes are more glorious, which bring benefit to the world, than such ruinous ones, as are dyed in human blood. Glarvill's Preface to Scap.
A stop might be put to that ruinous practice of gaming. Sw.
RUINOUSLY. adv. [from ruinous.]
1. In a ruinous manner.
2. Mischievously; destructively.
If real uneasiness may be admitted to be as deterring as imaginary ones, his own decree will retort the most ruinously on himself. Deacy of Piety.
RULE. n. f. [regula, Lat.]
1. Government; empire; sway; supreme command.
I am asham'd, that women
Should seek for rule, supremacy, or sway,
When they are bound to serve, love, and obey. Shaksp.
May he live
Ever belov'd, and loving may his rule be!
A wife servant shall have rule over a son that cauleth shame. Proverbs xvii. 2.
There being no law of nature nor positive law of God, that determines which is the positive heir, the right of succession; and consequently of bearing rule, could not have been determined. Locke.
This makes them apprehensive of every tendency, to endanger that form of rule established by the law of their country. Addison's Freeholder, N° 52.
Instruct me whence this uproar;
And wherefore Vanoe, the sworn friend to Rome,
Should spurn against our rule, and stir
The tributary provinces to war. A. Phillips's Briton.

- Caucus roll'd a crimson flood,
And Thebes ran red with her own natives blood. Dryden.
- The greatest vessel, when full, if you pour in still, it must run out some way, and the more it runs out at one side, the less it runs out at the other. Temple.
- Innumerable islands were covered with flowers, and interwoven with shining seas that ran among them. Addison.
- Her fields he cloath'd, and cheer'd her blasted face
With running fountains and with springing grafs. Addison.
10. To be liquid; to be fluid.
In lead melted, when it beginneth to congeal, make a little hole, in which put quicksilver wrapped in a piece of linnen, and it will fix and run no more, and endure the hammer. Bacon's Natural History.
- Stiff with eternal ice, and hid in snow,
The mountain stands; nor can the rising sun
Unfix her frosts, and teach 'em how to run. Addison.
- As wax dissolves, as ice begins to run,
And trickle into drops before the sun,
So melts the youth. Addison's Ovid's Metam.
11. To be fusible; to melt.
Her form glides through me, and my heart gives way;
This iron heart, which no impression took
From wars, melts down, and runs, if she but look. Dryden.
- Suffix iron ores run freely in the fire. Woodward.
- Your iron must not burn in the fire; that is, run or melt;
for then it will be brittle. Moxon's Mach. Exerc.
12. To pass; to proceed.
You, having run through so much publick business, have found out the secret so little known, that there is a time to give it over. Temple's Miscellany.
- If there remains an eternity to us after the short revolution of time, we so swiftly run over here, 'tis clear, that all the happiness, that can be imagined in this fleeting state, is not valuable in respect of the future. Locke.
13. To go away; to vanish.
As fast as our time runs, we should be very glad in most parts of our lives that it ran much faster. Addison.
14. To have a legal course; to be practised.
Customs run only upon our goods imported or exported, and that but once for all; whereas interest runs as well upon our ships as goods, and must be yearly paid. Child.
15. To have a course in any direction.
A hound runs counter, and yet draws dry foot well. Sha.
- Little is the wisdom, where the flight
So runs against all reason. Shakefp. Macbeth.
- That punishment follows not in this life the breach of this rule, and consequently has not the force of a law, in countries where the generally allowed practice runs counter to it, is evident. Locke.
- Had the present war run against us, and all our attacks upon the enemy been vain, it might look like a degree of frenzy to be determined on so impracticable an undertaking. Addison.
16. To pass in thought or speech.
Cou'd you hear the annals of our fate;
Through such a train of woes if I should run,
The day wou'd sooner than the tale be done. Dryden.
- By reading, a man antedates his life; and this way of running up beyond one's nativity, is better than Plato's pre-existence. Collier.
- Virgil, in his first Georgick, has run into a set of precepts foreign to his subject. Addison's Essay on the Georgicks.
- Raw and injudicious writers propose one thing for their subject, and run off to another. Felton.
17. To be mentioned cursorily or in few words.
The whole runs on short, like articles in an account, whereas, if the subject were fully explained, each of them might take up half a page. Arbutnot on Coins.
18. To have a continual tenour of any kind.
Discourses ran thus among the clearest observers: it was Tarquin, running into all the methods of tyranny, after a cruel reign was expelled. Swift.

44. To Run after. To search for; to endeavour at, though out of the way.
The mind, upon the suggestion of any new notion, runs after similes, to make it the clearer to itself; which, though it may be useful in explaining our thoughts to others, is no right method to settle true notions in ourselves. Locke.
45. To Run away with. To hurry without consent.
Thoughts will not be directed what objects to pursue, but run away with a man in pursuit of those ideas they have in view. Locke.
46. To Run in with. To close; to comply.
I though Ramus run in with the first reformers of learning, in his opposition to Aristotle; yet he has given us a plausible system. Baker.
47. To Run on. To be continued.
If, through our too much security, the same should run on, soon might we feel our estate brought to those lamentable terms, whereof this hard and heavy sentence was by one of the ancients uttered. Hooker.
48. To Run over. To be so full as to overflow.
He fills his famish'd maw, his mouth runs o'er
With unchew'd morsels, while he churns the gore. Dryden.
49. To be so much as to overflow.
Milk while it boils, or wine while it works, run over the vessels they are in, and possess more place than when they were cool. Digby on Bodies.
50. To Run out. To be at an end.
When a lease had run out, he stipulated with the tenant to reign up twenty acres, without lessening his rent, and no great abatement of the fine. Swift.

Their fortune ruin'd, and their fame betray'd. Dryden.
- From growing riches with good cheer,
To running out by starving here. Swift.
- So little gets for what he gives,
We really wonder how the lives!
And had her stock been less, no doubt,
She must have long ago run out. Swift.
1. To pierce; to stab.
Poor Romeo is already dead, run through the ear with a love song. Shakefp. Romeo and Juliet.

RUN

- Hipparchus, going to marry, consulted Philander upon the occasion; Philander represented his mistress in such strong colours, that the next morning he received a challenge, and before twelve he was run through the body. Spektator.
2. To force; to drive.
In nature, it is not convenient to consider every difference that is in things, and divide them into distinct classes: this will run us into particulars, and we shall be able to establish no general truth. Locke.
- Though putting the mind unprepared upon an unusual stress may discourage it, yet this must not run it, by an over-great shyness of difficulties, into a lazy sauntering about ordinary things. Locke.
3. To force into any way or form.
Some, used to mathematical figures, give a preference to the methods of that science in divinity or politick enquiries; others, accustomed to retired speculations, run natural philosophy into metaphysical notions. Locke.
- What is raised in the day, settles in the night; and its cold runs the thin juices into thick fizy substances. Cheyne.
- The daily complaisance of gentlemen runs them into variety of expressions; whereas your scholars are more close, and frugal of their words. Felton on the Criticks.
4. To drive with violence.
They ran the ship aground. Acts xxvii. 41.
- This proud Turk offered scornfully to pass by without vailing, which the Venetian captains not enduring, set upon him with such fury, that the Turks were enforced to run both their gallees on shore. Knolles's History of the Turks.

and run his fortune with them. Clarendon.
- Take here her reliques and her gods, to run
With them thy fate, with them new walls expect. Deilh.
- A wretched exil'd crew
Resolv'd, and willing under my command,
To run all hazards both of sea and land. Dryden.
8. To import or export without duty.
Heavy impositions lessen the import, and are a strong temptation of running goods. Swift.
9. To prosecute in thought.
To run the world back to its first original, and view nature in its cradle, to trace the outgoings of the ancient of days in the first instance of his creative power, is a research too great for mortal enquiry. South.
- The world hath not stood so long, but we can still run it up to those artless ages, when mortals lived by plain nature.
Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
- I would gladly understand the formation of a soul, and run it up to its punctum saliens. Collier.
- I have chosen to present you with some peculiar thoughts, rather than run a needless treatise upon the subject at length.
Felton.
10. To push.
Some English speakers run their hands into their pockets, others look with great attention on a piece of blank paper. Add.

- 2. Rural appearance.

RUT

- Ru'stick. adj. [rusticus, Lat.]
 1. Rural; country.
 By Lelius willing missing was the odds of the Iberian side, and continued so in the next by the excellent running of a knight, though fostered to by the mufes, as many times the very rustick people left both their delights and profits to harken to his songs. Sidney, b. ii.
 2. Rude; untaught; inelegant.
 An ignorant clown cannot learn fine language or a courtly behaviour, when his rustick airs have grown up with him till the age of forty. Watts's Logick.
 3. Brutal; savage.
 My foul foreboded I should find the bow'r
 Of some fell monster, fierce with barb'rous pow'r;
 Some rustick wretch, who liv'd in heav'n's despight, Contemning laws, and trampling on the right. Pope.
 4. Artless; honest; simple.
 5. Plain; unadorned.
 An altar stood, rustick, of grassy ford. Milton.
 With unguents smooth the polish'd marble shone,
 Where ancient Neleus sat, a rustick throne. Pope.
Ru'stick. n.f. A clown; a swain; an inhabitant of the country.
 As nothing is so rude and insolent as a wealthy rustick, all this his kindness is overlooked, and his person most unworthily rail'd at. South.
Ru'stiness. n.f. [from rusty.] The state of being rusty.
To Ru'stle. v.n. [hijzelan, Saxon.] To make a low continued rattle; to make a quick succession of small noises.

 tray thy poor heart to woman. Shakefp. King Lear.
 He is coming; I hear the straw rustle. Shakefp.
 This life
 Is nobler than attending for a check;
 Richer, than doing nothing for a bauble;
 Prouder, than rustling in unpaid-for silk. Shakefp.
 Thick swarm'd, both on the ground, and in the air
 Brush'd with the hiss of rustling wings. Milton.
 As when we see the winged winds engage,
Rustling from ev'ry quarter of the sky,
 North, East, and West, in airy swiftness vy. Granville.
 All begin the attack;
 Fans clap, silks rustle, and tough whalebones crack. Pope.
 Not less their number than the milk-white swans,
 That o'er the winding of Cyaster's springs,
 Stretch their long necks, and clap their rustling wings. Po.
Ru'sty. adj. [from rust.]
 1. Covered with rust; infected with rust.
 After a long calm of peace, he was left engaged in a war with a rusty sword and empty purse. Hovel.
 Part four the rusty shields with seam, and part
 New grind the blunted ax. Dryden's Æneis.

 Is rusty grown. Shakefp. Troilus and Cressida.
To Rut. v.n. [ruir, Fr.] To desire to come together. Used of deer.
Rut. n.f. [rut, Fr.]
 1. Copulation of deer.
 The time of going to rut of deer is in September; for that they need the whole summer's feed to make them fit for generation: and if rain come about the middle of September, they go to rut somewhat the sooner. Bacon.

RYE

- The ground hereof was the observation of this part in deep after immoderate venery, and about the end of their rut. Bra.
 2. [Route, Fr.] The track of a cart wheel.
RUTH. n.f. [from rua.] Mercy; pity; tenderness; sorrow for the misery of another.
 The Britons, by Maximilian laid way
 With wretched miseries and woful ruth,
 Were to those Pagans made an open prey. Fa. Quen.
 All ruth, compassion, mercy he forgot. Fairfax.
 She fair, he full of bashfulness and truth
 Lov'd much, hop'd little, and desired nought;
 He durst not speak, by suit to purchase ruth. Fairfax.
 The better part with Mary and with Ruth Chosen thou hast; and they that overween,
 And at thy growing virtues fret their spleen,
 No anger find in thee, but pity and ruth. Milton.
Ru'thful. adj. [ruth and full.] Ruthful; woful; sorrowful.
 The inhabitants seldom take a ruthful and reaving experience of those harms, which infectious diseases carry with them. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.
Ru'thfully. adv. [from ruthful.]
 1. Wofully; sadly.
 The flower of horse and foot, lost by the valour of the enemy, ruthfully perished. Knolles's History of the Turks.
 2. Sorrowfully; mournfully.
 Help me, ye baneful birds, whose shrieking found
 Is sign of dreary death, my deadly cries
 Most ruthfully to tune. Spenser's Pastoral.
 3. Wofully. In irony.
 By this Minerva's friend bereft
 Oileades of that rich bowl, and left his lips, nose, eyes Ruthfully smear'd. Chapman's Æneis.
Ru'thless. adj. [from ruth.] Cruel; pitiless; uncom-pionate; barbarous.
 What is Edward but a ruthless sea?
 What Clarence but a quicksand of deceit?
 The ruthless flint doth cut my tender feet;
 And when I start, the cruel people laugh.
 His archers circle me; my reins they wound,
 And ruthless shed my gall upon the ground. Shakefp.
 Their rage the hostile powers restrain,
 All but the ruthless monarch of the main. Sandys.
 To ruthless deeds, blind rage, and fell revenge,
 Their fervid spirits fires. Pope.
Ru'thlessness. n.f. [from ruthless.] Want of pity.
Ru'thlessly. adv. [from ruthless.] Without pity; cruelly;
 barbarously.

SAB

- Has in English the same hissing found as in other languages, and unhappily prevails in so many of our words that it produces in the ear of a foreigner a continued libilation.
 In the beginning of words it has invariably its natural and genuine found: in the middle it is sometimes uttered with a stronger appulse of the tongue to the palate, like z; as rose, rejecte, rejs, offer, nasal, resident, busy, business. It sometimes keeps its natural found; as loose, designation; for which I know not whether any rules can be given.
 In the end of monosyllables it is sometimes s, as in this;
 and sometimes z, as in as, has; and generally where s stands in verbs for ch, as gives. It seems to be established as a rule, that no noun singular should end with s single: therefore in words written with diphthongs, and naturally long, an s is nevertheless added at the end, as goose, house; and where the syllable is short the s is doubled, and was once ss, as ass, anciently asses, wildernesses, anciently wildernesses, distresses, anciently distresses.
SABA'OTH. [n.f. [An Hebrew word signifying rest; sabbat, SA'BATH. } French; sabatum, Latin.]
 1. A day appointed by God among the Jews, and from them established among Christians for public worship; the seventh day set apart from works of labour to be employed in piety.
 Holy Lord God of sabaoth. Common Prayer.
 I purpose,
 And by our holy sabbath have I sworn,
 To have the due and forfeit of my bond. Shakepeare.
 Glad we return'd up to the coasts of light,
 Ere sabbath ev'ning. Milton.
 Here ev'ry day was sabbath: only free
 From hours of pray'r, for hours of charity,
 Such as the Jews from servile toil releas'd,
 Where works of mercy were a part of rest:
 Such as blest angels exercise above,
 Vary'd with sacred hymns and acts of love;
 Such sabbaths as that one the now enjoys,
 Ev'n that perpetual one, which the employs:
 For such vicissitudes in heav'n there are,
 In praise alternate, and alternate pray'r. Dryden.
 2. Intermission of pain or sorrow; time of rest.
 Never any sabbath of release
 Could free his travels and afflictions deep. Daniel's C. War.
 Nor can his blessed soul look down from heav'n,
 Or break th' eternal sabbath of his rest,
 To see her miseries on earth. Dryden.
 Peaceful sleep out the sabbath of the tomb,
 And wake to raptures in a life to come. Pope.
SA'BATHBREAKER. n.f. [sabbath and break.] Violator of the sabbath by labour or wickedness.
 The usurer is the greatest sabbathbreaker, because his plough goeth every Sunday. Bacon's Essays.
SABBA'TICAL. adj. [sabbaticus, Lat. sabbaticus, Fr. from sab- bath.] Remembling the sabbath; enjoying or bringing intermission of labour.
 The appointment and observance of the sabbatical year, and after the seventh sabbatical year, a year of jubilee, is a circumstance of great moment. Forbes.
SA'BBATISM. n.f. [from sabatum, Latin.] Observance of the sabbath superstitiously rigid.
SABINE. n.f. [sabine, Fr. sabina, Latin.] A plant.
 Sabine or favin will make fine hedges, and may be brought into any form by clipping, much beyond any of the sorts of trees commonly made use of for that purpose. Martimer.
SA'BLE. n.f. [zibella, Latin.] Fur.
 Sable is worn of great personages, and brought out of Russia, being the fur of a little beast of that name, esteemed for the perfectness of the colour of the hairs, which are very black.
 Hence sable, in heraldry, signifies the black colour in gentlemen's arms. Peacham on Blazoning.
 Furiously running in upon him, with tumultuous speech, he violently rought from his head his rich cap of sable. Knolles.
 The peacocks plumes thy tackle must not fail,
 Nor the dear purchase of the sable's tail. Gay.
SA'BLE. adj. [Fr.] Black. A word used by heralds and poets.

 With him inthron'd
 Sat sable vested night, eldest of things,
 The consort of his reign. Milton's Paradise Lost.
 They soon begin that tragick play,
 And with their smoaky cannons banish day:
 Night, horror, slaughter, with confusion meet,
 And in their sable arms embrace the fleet. Waller.
 Adoring first the genius of the place,
 And night, and all the stars that gild her sable throne. Dryd.
SA'BLE. n.f. [French.]
 1. A sandpit. Bailey.
 2. [In carpentry.] A piece of timber as long, but not so thick, as a beam. Bailey.
SA'BRE. n.f. [sabre, French; I suppose, of Turkish original.]
 A cymetar; a short sword with a convex edge; a faulchion.
 To me the cries of fighting fields are charms;
 Keen be my sabre, and of proof my arms;
 I ask no other blessing of my stars,
 No prize but fame, no mistress but the wars. Dryden.
 Seam'd o'er with wounds, which his own sabre gave,
 In the vile habit of a village slave,
 The foe deceiv'd. Pope's Odyssey.
SABULO'SITY. n.f. [from sabulosus.] Grittiness; sandiness.
SA'BULOUS. adj. [sabulum, Latin.] Gritty; sandy.
SACCADE. n.f. [French.] A violent check the rider gives his horse, by drawing both the reins very suddenly: a correction used when the horse bears heavy on the hand. Bailey.
SA'CCHARINE. adj. [saccharum, Latin.] Having the taste or any other of the chief qualities of sugar.
 Manna is an essential saccharine salt, sweating from the leaves of most plants. Arbuthnot on Aliments.
SACERDO'TAL. adj. [sacerdotalis, Latin.] Priestly; belonging to the priesthood.
 They have several offices and prayers, especially for the dead, in which functions they use sacerdotal garments. Stillingfl.
 He fell violently upon me, without respect to my sacerdotal orders. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.
 If ample powers, granted by the rulers of this world, add dignity to the persons intrusted with these powers, behold the importance and extent of the sacerdotal commission. Atterbury.
SACHEL. n.f. [sacculus, Lat.] A small sack or bag.
SACK. n.f. [Hebrew; sacculus, Latin; saccus, Latin; sack, Sax.
 It is observable of this word, that it is found in all languages, and it is therefore conceived to be antediluvian.]
 1. A bag; a pouch; commonly a large bag.
 Our sacks shall be a mean to sack the city.
 And we be lords and rulers over Roan. Shak. Henry VI.
 Vastus caused the authors of that mutiny to be thrust into sacks, and in the sight of the fleet cast into the sea. Knolles.
 2. The measure of three bushels.
 3. A woman's loose robe.
To Sack. v.a. [from the noun.]
 1. To put in bags.
 Now the great work is done, the corn is ground,
 The gift is sack'd, and every sack well bound. Betterton.
 2. [From sacar, Spanish.] To take by storm; to pillage; to plunder.
 Edward Bruce spoiled and burnt all the old English pale inhabitants, and sacked and rased all cities and corporate towns.
Spenser on Ireland.
 I'll make thee stoop and bend thy knee,
 Or sack this country with a mutiny. Shakefp. Henry VI.
 What armies conquer'd, perish'd with thy sword?
 What cities sack'd? Fairfax.
 Who sees these dismal heaps, but would demand
 What barbarous invader sack'd the land?
 The pope himself was ever after unfortunate, Rome being twice taken and sacked in his reign. South's Sermons.
 The great magazine for all kinds of treasure is the bed of the Tiber: when the Romans lay under the apprehensions of seeing their city sacked by a barbarous enemy, they would take

SACK. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Storm of a town; pillage; plunder.
If Saturn's son bestows

The sack of Troy, which he by promise owes,
Then shall the conqu'ring Greeks thy loss restore. Dryden.

2. A kind of sweet wine, now brought chiefly from the Canaries. [See, French, of uncertain etymology; but derived by Skinner, after Mandeflo, from Xegue, a city of Morocco.]

Please you drink a cup of sack. Shakespeare.
The butler hath great advantage to allure the maids with a glass of sack. Swift.

SACKBUT. n. f. [Saccabute, Spanish; sambuca, Latin; sambuca, French.] A kind of pipe.

The trumpets, sackbuts, psalteries and fife,
Make the fun dance. Shakespeare. Coriolanus.

SACKCLOATH. n. f. [Jack and cloath.] Cloath of which sacks are made; coarse cloth sometimes worn in mortification.

A sort of coarse stuff made of goats hair, of a black or dark colour, worn by soldiers and mariners; and used as a habit among the Hebrews in times of mourning and distress. It was called sackcloth, either because sacks were made of this sort of stuff, or because haircloths were straight and close like a sack. Calmet.

To augment her painful penance more,
Thrice every week in ashes she did sit,
And next her wrinkled skin rough sackcloth wore. F. Queen.

Thus with sackcloth I invest my woe,
And dust upon my clouded forehead throw. Sandys.

Being clad in sackcloth, he was to lie on the ground, and constantly day and night to implore God's mercy for the sin he had committed. Ayliffe's Paragon.

SACKER. n. f. [from sack.] One that takes a town.

SACKFUL. n. f. [Jack and full.] Top full.

Snuff the candles at supper on the table, because the burning snuff may fall into a dish of soup or sackposset. Swift.

SACRAMENT. n. f. [Sacrament, Fr. sacramentum, Latin.]

1. An oath; any ceremony producing an obligation.

2. An outward and visible sign of an inward and spiritual grace.

As often as we mention a sacrament, it is improperly understood; for in the writings of the ancient fathers all articles which are peculiar to Christian faith, all duties of religion containing that which sense or natural reason cannot of itself discern, are most commonly named sacraments; our restraint of the word to some few principal divine ceremonies, importeth in every such ceremony two things, the substance of the ceremony itself, which is visible; and besides that, somewhat else more secret, in reference whereunto we conceive that ceremony to be a sacrament. Hooker.

3. The eucharist; the holy communion.

Ten thousand French have ta'en the sacrament
To rive their dangerous artillery
Upon no Christian foul but English Talbot. Shakespeare. H. VI.

As we have ta'en the sacrament,
We will unite the white rose with the red. Shakespeare. R. III.

Before the famous battle of Cressly, he spent the greatest part of the night in prayer; and in the morning received the sacrament, with his son, and the chief of his officers. Addison.

SACRAMENTAL. adj. [Sacramental, Fr. from sacrament.] Constituting a sacrament; pertaining to a sacrament.

To make complete the outward substance of a sacrament, there is required an outward form, which form sacramental elements receive from sacramental words. Hooker.

The words of St. Paul are plain; and whatever interpretation can be put upon them, it can only vary the way of the sacramental efficacy, but it cannot evacuate the blessing. Taylor.

SACRAMENTALLY. adv. [from sacramental.] After the manner of a sacrament.

My body is sacramentally contained in this sacrament of bread. Hall.

The law of circumcision was meant by God sacramentally to impress the duty of strict purity. Hammond.

SACRED. adj. [Sacre, French; sacer, Latin.]

1. Devoted to religious uses; holy.

Gods love to haunt her sacred shades. Milton.

2. Dedicated; consecrated; consecrated.

This temple and his holy ark,
With all his sacred things.
O'er its eastern gate was rais'd above
A temple, sacred to the queen of love. Dryden.

3. Inviolable.

The honour's sacred, which he talks on now,
Supposing that I lack it. Shakespeare. Ant. and Cleopatra.

The strict forbiddance? how to violate
The sacred fruit? Milton.

Secrets of marriage still are sacred held;
There sweet and bitter by the wife conceal'd. Dryden.

SAC

SACREDLY. adv. [from sacred.] Inviolably; religiously.

When God had manifested himself in the flesh, how sacredly did he preserve this privilege? South's Sermons.

SACREDNESS. n. f. [from sacred.] The state of being sacred; state of being consecrated to religious uses; holiness; sanctity.

In the sanctuary the cloud, and the oracular answers, were prerogatives peculiar to the sacredness of the place. South.

This insinuates the sacredness of power, let the administration of it be what it will. L'Estrange.

SACRIFIC. adj. [Sacrificus, Latin.] Employed in sacrifice.

SACRIFICABLE. adj. [from sacrificer, Lat.] Capable of being offered in sacrifice.

Although Jephtha's vow run generally for the words, whatsoever shall come forth; yet might it be restrained in the sense, for whatsoever was sacrificable, and justly subject to lawful immolation, and so would not have sacrificed either horse or dog. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

SACRIFICATOR. n. f. [Sacrificator, Fr. from sacrificer, Latin.] Sacrificer; offerer of sacrifice.

Not only the subject of sacrifice is unquestionable, but also the sacrificer, which the picture makes to be Jephtha. Brown.

SACRIFICATORY. adj. [from sacrificer, Latin.] Offering sacrifice.

To SACRIFICE. v. a. [Sacrificer, French; sacrificio, Latin.]

1. To offer to heaven; to immolate.

Alarbus' limbs are lopt,
And intrails feed the sacrificing fire. Shakespeare. Titus Andronicus.

This blood, like sacrificing Abel's, cries
To me for justice. Shakespeare. Richard II.

I sacrifice to the Lord all that openeth the matrix, being males.
Men from the herd or flock
Of sacrificing bullock, lamb, or kid. Milton.

2. To destroy or give up for the sake of something else.

'Tis a sad contemplation, that we should sacrifice the peace of the church to a little vain curiosity. Decay of Piety.

Condemn'd to sacrifice his childish years
To babbling ignorance, and to empty fears. Prior.

To SACRIFICE. v. n. To make offerings; to offer sacrifice.

He that sacrificeth of things wrongfully gotten, his offering is ridiculous. Ecclus. xxxiv. 18.

Let us go to sacrifice to the Lord.
Some mischief is befallen. Milton.

To that meek man who well had sacrific'd. Milton.

SACRIFICER. n. f. [Sacrificer, French; sacrificium, Latin.]

1. The act of offering to heaven.

God will ordain religious rites
Of sacrifice. Milton.

2. The thing offered to heaven, or immolated.

Upon such sacrifice
The gods themselves throw incense. Shakespeare. King Lear.

Go with me like good angels to my end,
And as the long divorce of steel falls on me,
Make of your prayers one sweet sacrifice,
And lift my soul to heav'n. Shakespeare.

Moloch besmear'd with blood
Of human sacrifice. Milton.

My life if thou preserv'st, my life
Thy sacrifice shall be;
And death, if death must be my doom,
Shall join my soul to thee. Addison's Spectator.

3. Any thing destroyed, or quitted for the sake of something else.

4. Any thing destroyed.

SACRIFICER. n. f. [from sacrificer.] One who offers sacrifice; one that immolates.

Let us be sacrificers, but not butchers. Shakespeare.

Before an altar led, an offer'd ox,
His eyeballs rooted out are thrown to ground. Dryden.

A priest pours wine between the horns of a bull: the priest is veiled after the manner of the old Roman sacrificer. Addison.

SACRIFICIAL. adj. [from sacrificer.] Performing sacrifice; included in sacrifice.

Rain sacrificial whisp'rs in his ear;
Make sacred even his stirrup. Shakespeare. Timon.

Terullian's observation upon these sacrificial rites, is pertinent to this rule. Taylor's Worth Communion.

SACRILEGE. n. f. [Sacrilege, Fr. sacrilegium, Lat.] The crime of appropriating to himself what is devoted to religion; the crime of robbing heaven; the crime of violating or profaning things sacred.

By what eclipse shall that sun be defac'd,
What mine hath erst thrown down to fair a tower!
What sacrilege hath such a faint disgrac'd? Sidney.

A fonce that hung on high,
With tapers fill'd, to light the sacrifice. Dryden.

A third apartment should be a kind of sacristy for altars, idols, and sacrificing instruments.

SAD. adj. [Of this word, so frequent in the language, the etymology is not known. It is probably a contraction of sagg'd, heavy, burthened, overwhelmed, from To sag, to load.]

1. Sorrowful; full of grief.

Do you think I shall not love a sad Pamela so well as a joyful? Sidney.

I now must change
Those notes to tragick, sad task! Milton.

Six brave companions from each ship we lost:
With sails outspread we fly th' unequal strife,
Sad for their loss, but joyful of our life. Pope's Odyssey.

2. Habitually melancholy; heavy; gloomy; not gay; not cheerful.

It misdirecteth unto men, and other creatures, all celestial influences: it dissipeth those sad thoughts and sorrows, which the darkness both begetteth and maintaineth. Raleigh.

See in her cell sad Eloisa spread,
Prop'd on some tomb, a neighbour of the dead. Pope.

3. Serious; not light; not volatile; grave.

He with utterance grave, and countenance sad,
From point to point discours'd his voyage. Spenser.

The lady Katharine, a sad and religious woman, when Henry VIII's resolution of a divorce from her was first made known, said that she had not offended; but it was a judgment of God, for that her former marriage was made in blood. Bacon.

If it were an embassy of weight, choice was made of some sad person of known judgment and experience, and not of a young man, not weighed in state matters.

A sad wife valour is the brave complexion
That leads the van, and swallows up the cities:
The gigler is a milk-maid, whom infection,
Or a fir'd beacon, frighteth from his ditties. Herbert.

4. Afflictive; calamitous.

5. Bad; inconvenient; vexatious. A word of burlesque complaint.

These qualifications make him a sad husband. Addison.

Crystal, in its reduction into powder, hath a vale and shadow of blue; and in its coarse pieces is of a sadder hue than the powder of Venice glass. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

I met him accidentally in London in sad coloured clothes, far from being costly. Walton's Life of Bp. Sanderfon.

Scarce any tinging ingredient is of so general use as woad, or glastum; for though of itself it dye but a blue, yet it is used when the dyers make them last without fading.

Woad or wade is used by the dyers to lay the foundation of all sad colours. Boyle.

7. Heavy; weighty; ponderous.

With that his hand, more sad than lump of lead,
Uplifting high, he weened with Mordure,
His own good sword, Mordure, to cleave his head. F. 2.

SA'FEGUARD. n. f. [safus and guard.]

1. Defence; protection; security.

We serve the living God as near as our wits can reach to the knowledge thereof, even according to his own will; and do therefore trust, that his mercy shall be our safeguard. Hooker.

If you do fight in safeguard of your wives,
Your wives shall welcome home the conquerors. Shakefp.

The smallest worm will turn, if trod upon;
And doves will peck in safeguard of their brood. Shakefp.

Cesar, where dangers threatened on the one side, and the opinion that there should be in him little safeguard for his friends on the other, chose rather to venture upon extremities, than to be thought a weak protector. Raleigh.

Great numbers, descended from them, have, by the blessing of God upon their industry, raised themselves so high in the world as to become, in times of difficulty, a protection and a safeguard to that altar, at which their ancestors ministered. Atterbury's Sermons.

Thy sword, the safeguard of thy brother's throne,
Is now become the bulwark of thy own. Granville.

Imprison him;
Deliver him to safety, and return. Shak. King John.

SA'FFLOW. n. f. A plant.
An herb they call safflow, or bastard saffron, dyers use for scarlet. Mortimer's Husbandry.

SA'FFRON. n. f. [saffran, French, from saphar, Arabick. It was yellow, according to Davies in his Welsh dictionary.
Craus, Latin.]

S A G

It hath a flower consisting of one leaf, which is shaped like a lily, fitfulous underneath, the tube widening into six segments, and resting on the footstalk: the point rises out of the bottom of the flower, and is divided into three-headed or crested capillaments; but the empalement afterwards turns to an oblong triangular fruit, divided into three cells, full of roundish seeds. It hath a tuberose root, and long nervous grassy leaves, with a longitudinal furrow through the middle of each. There are Spring-flowering crocuses, and those which flower in Autumn. Their seeds are ripe about the latter end of April: the time of planting is in July. About the beginning of September they begin to spire, and sometime after appear the saffron flowers, which are gathered as well before as after they are full-blown; and the most proper time for this is early in the morning: the chives being all picked out of the flowers, the next labour about them is to dry them on the kiln: at first they give it a pretty strong heat. The charges and profits attending the culture of saffron, have been computed in the following manner: the rent of an acre of ground, and the expence of manuring it, is reckoned at twenty-three pounds: the value of twenty-six pounds of saffron, the computed produce of an acre in three years, is, at a mean, supposed to be thirty-nine pounds; and consequently the neat profits of an acre of ground, producing saffron, will in three years amount to sixteen pounds. Miller.

Grind your bole and chalk, and five or six shives of saffron. Peacham.

SA'FFRON Bastard. n. f. [carthamus, Latin.] A plant.
This plant agrees with the thistle in most of its characters; but the seeds of it are always destitute of down. It is very much cultivated in Germany for the dyers use, and is brought from thence into England. As it grows it spreads into many branches, each producing a flower at the top of the shoot, which, when fully blown, is cut or pulled off, and dried, and it is the part the dyers use. Miller.

SA'FFRON. adj. Yellow; having the colour of saffron.
Are these your customers?
Did this companion, with the saffron face,
Revel and feast it at my house to-day,
Whilst upon me the guilty doors were shut? Shakefp. Henry V.

Soon as the white and red mixt finger'd dame
Had guilt the mountains with her saffron flame,
I sent my men to Circe's house. Chapman's Odyssey.

Now when the rosy morn began to rise,
And wav'd her saffron streamer through the skies. Dryden.

To SAG. v. n. To hang heavy.
The mind I lay by, and the heart I bear,
Shall never sag with doubt, nor shake with fear. Shakefp.

To SAG. v. a. To load; to burthen.

SAGA'CIOUS. adj. [sagax, Latin.]

1. Quick of scent.

So scented the grim feature, and up-turn'd
His nostrils wide into the murky air;
Sagacious of his quarry from so far. Milton's Paradise Lost.

With might and main they chas'd the murderous fox,
Nor wanted horns to inspire sagacious hounds. Dryden.

2. Quick of thought; acute in making discoveries.
Only sagacious heads light on these observations, and reduce them into general propositions. Locke.

SAGA'CIOUSLY. adv. [from sagacious.]

1. With quick scent.

2. With acuteness of penetration.

SAGA'CIOUSNESS. n. f. [from sagacious.] The quality of being sagacious.

SAGA'CITY. n. f. [sagaciti, French; sagacitas, Latin.]

1. Quickness of scent.

2. Acuteness of discovery.

It requires too great a sagacity for vulgar minds to draw the line nicely between virtue and vice. South.

Sagacity finds out the intermediate ideas, to discover what connection there is in each link of the chain, whereby the extremes are held together. Locke.

Many were eminent in former ages for their discovery of it; but though the knowledge they have left be worth our study, yet they left a great deal for the industry and sagacity of after-ages. Locke.

SA'GAMORE. n. f.
1. [Among the American Indians.] A king or supreme ruler. Bailly.

2. The juice of some unknown plant used in medicine.

SAGE. n. f. [sage, French; salvia, Latin.] A plant of which the school of Salernum thought so highly, that they left this verse:

Cum moriatur homo cui salvia crevit in horto.
It hath a labiated flower, consisting of one leaf, whose upper lip is sometimes arched, and sometimes hooked; but the under lip or beard is divided into three parts, bunching out, and not hollowed at the clare: out of the flower-cup rises the pointal, attended, as it were, by four embryos, which afterward become so many seeds, which are roundish, shut up in an husk, which before was the flower-cup: to which may be added, that the stamina do somewhat resemble the os hyoides.
Miller.

the vessel on the water.

He came too late; the ship was under sail. Shakefp. Henry V.

They loosed the rudder-bands, and hoisted up the main sail to the wind. Acts xxvii. 40.

The galley born from view by rising gales,
She follow'd with her light and flying sails. Dryden.

2. [In poetry.] Wings.

He cutting way
With his broad sails, about him soared round;
At last, low stooping with unwieldy sway,
Snatch'd up both horse and man. Fairy Queen.

3. A ship; a vessel.

A sail arriv'd
From Pompey's son, who through the realms of Spain Calls out for vengeance on his father's death. Addis. Cato.

4. Sail is a collective word, noting the number of ships.
So by a roaring tempest on the flood,
A whole armada of collected sail
Is scatter'd. Shakefp. Henry V.

It is written of Edgar, that he increased the fleet he found two thousand six hundred sail. Raleigh's Essays.

A feigned tear destroys us, against whom Tydides nor Achilles could prevail,
Nor ten years conflict, nor a thousand sail. Denham.

He had promised to his army, who were discouraged at the fight of Seleucus's fleet, consisting of an hundred sail, that at the end of the Summer they should see a fleet of his of five hundred sail. Arbutnot on Coins.

5. To strike sail. To lower the sail.
Fearing lest they should fall into the quicksands, they strike sail, and so were driven. Acts xxvii. 17.

6. A proverbial phrase for abating of pomp or superiority.
Margaret
Must strike her sail, and learn a while to serve Where kings command. Shakefp. Henry VI.

To SAIL. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To be moved by the wind with sails.
I shall not mention any thing of the sailing waggons. Mort.

2. To pass by sea.
When sailing was now dangerous, Paul admonished them. Acts.

3. To swim.
To which the stores of Cæsus, in the scale,
Would look like little dolphins, when they sail
In the vast shadow of the British whale. Dryden.

4. To pass smoothly along.
Speak again, bright angel! for thou art
As glorious to this sight, being o'er my head,

S A I

As is a winged messenger from heav'n,
When he bestrides the lazy pacing clouds,
And sails upon the bosom of the air. Shak. Rom. and Jul.

To SAIL. v. a.

1. To pass by means of sails.
A thousand ships were mann'd to sail the sea. Dryden.

View Alcinous' groves, from whence Sailing the spaces of the boundless deep;
To Ariconium precious fruits arriv'd. Phillips.

2. To fly through.

Sublime the sails
Th' aerial space, and mounts the winged gales. Pope.

SAILER. n. f. [sailer is more usual, sailer more analogical; SAILOR. } from sail.] A seaman; one who practises or understands navigation.

They had many times men of other countries that were no sailors. Bacon.

Batter'd by his lee they lay;
The passing winds through their torn carivas play,
And flagging sails on heartless sailors fall. Dryden.

Young Pompey built a fleet of large ships, and had good sailors, commanded by experienced captains. Arbutnot.

Full in the openings of the spacious main
It rides, and, lo, descends the sailor train. Pope's Odyssey.

SAILYARD. n. f. [sail and yard.] The pole on which the sail is extended.

With glance so swift the subtle lightning pass,
As split the sailyards. Dryden's Juvenal.

SAIM. n. f. [saim, Italian.] Lard. It still denotes this in Scotland: as swine's saim.

SAIN. Some obscure precedence, that hath tofore been sain. Shak.

SA'INFOIN. n. f. [sainfoin, Fr.] A kind of herb.

SA'INT. n. f. [saint, French; sanctus, Latin.] A person eminent for piety and virtue.

To thee be worship and thy saints for aye. Shakefp.

She will not stay the siege of loving terms,
Nor ope her lap to saint seducing gold. Shakefp. Henry V.

Then thus I cloath my naked villainy
With old odd ends, stol'n forth of holy writ,
And seem a saint, when most I play the devil. Shakefp. Henry V.

Miracles are required of all who aspire to this dignity, because they say an hypocrite may imitate a saint in all other particulars. Addis on Italy.

By thy example kings are taught to sway,
Heroes to fight, and saints may learn to pray. Granville.

So unaffected, so compos'd a mind;
So firm, yet soft, so strong, yet so refin'd,
Heav'n, as its purest gold, by tortures try'd;
The saint sustain'd it, but the woman dy'd. Pope.

To SAINT. v. a. [from the noun.] To number among saints;
to reckon among saints by a publick decree; to canonize.

Are not the principles of those wretches still owned, and their persons sainted, by a race of men of the same stamp? South.

Over against the church stands a large hospital, erected by a shoemaker, who has been beatified, though never sainted. Add.

Thy place is here, sad sister; come away:
Once, like thyself, I trembled, wept, and pray'd;
Love's victim then, though now a sainted maid. Pope.

To SAINT. v. n. To act with a shew of piety.
Whether the charmer sinner it or saint it,
If folly grows romantick, I must paint it. Pope.

SA'INTED. adj. [from saint.]

1. Holy; pious; virtuous.

Thy royal father
Was a most sainted king: the queen that bore thee,
Often upon her knees than on her feet,
Died every day she liv'd. Shakefp. Macbeth.

2. Holy; sacred.
I hold you as a thing enskied and sainted,
By your renouncement an immortal spirit,
And to be talk'd with in sincerity
As with a saint. Shakefp. Henry V.

The crown virtue gives,
After this mortal change, to her true servants,
Amongst the enthron'd gods on sainted hills. Milton.

SAINT John's Wort. n. f. A plant.

This plant hath a fibrose root: the leaves grow opposite by pairs at the joints of the stalks: the flower-cup consists of one leaf, which is divided into five parts, and expanded: the flower consists of five leaves expanded like a rose, having many filamina in the centre surrounding a conical ovary, which becomes a three-cornered pointed fruit, and is divided into three cells, containing many small seeds. There are thirty species of this plant, of which the four first sorts grow wild, and the rest are exotics. The first sort, called common Saint John's wort, is used in medicine. Miller.

SAINTLIKE. adj. [saint and like.]

1. Suited a saint; becoming a saint.
If still thou do'st retain
The same ill habits, the same follies too,
Glo'st'd over only with a saintlike show,
Still thou art bound to vice. Dryden's Pers.

2. Resembling.

SAL

2. Resembling a faint.

The king, in whose time it passed, whom catholicks count a faintlike and immaculate prince, was taken away in the flower of his age. Bacon.
SAINTLY. adj. [from saint.] Like a faint; becoming a faint.

I mention still

Him whom thy wrongs, with faintly patience borne,
Made famous in a land and times obscure. Mit. Par. Loff.
SAINTSHIP. n. f. [from saint.] The character or qualities of a faint.

He that thinks his faintship licenses him to censure, is to be looked on not only as a rebel, but an usurper. Decay of Piety.
This favours something ranker than the tenets of the fifth monarchy, and of sovereignty founded upon faintship. South.
The devil was piqu'd such faintship to behold, Pope.
And long'd to tempt him.

SAKE. n. f. [rac, Saxon; saekte, Dutch.]

1. Final cause; end; purpose.

Thou neither do't persuade me to seek wealth
For empire's sake, nor empire to affect For glory's sake. Milton's Paradise Lost.
The prophane person serves the devil for nought, and fins only for sin's sake. Tilleyson.

Wyndham like a tyrant throws the dart,
And takes a cruel pleasure in the smart;
Proud of the rage that her beauties make,
Delights in wounds, and kills for killing's sake. Graville.

2. Account; regard to any person or thing.

Would I were young for your sake, mistress Anne! Shakefp.
The general so likes your mulick, that he desires you, for love's sake, to make no more noise with it. Shakefp. Othello.
SAKER. n. f. [Saker originally signifies an hawk, the pieces of artillery being often denominated from birds of prey.]
The cannon, blunderbuss, and faker, Hudibras.
He was th' inventor of, and maker.

According to observations made with one of her majesty's fakers, and a very accurate pendulum-chronometer, a bullet, at its first discharge, flies five hundred and ten yards in five half seconds, which is a mile in a little above seventeen half seconds. Derham's Physico-Theology.
SAKERET. n. f. [from saker.] The male of a faker-hawk.

This kind of hawk is esteemed next after the falcon and gyrfalcon, but differently to be managed. Bailey.

SAL. n. f. [Latin.] Salt. A word often used in pharmacy.
Salfo acids will help its passing off; as sal prunel. Floyer.
Sal gem is so called from its breaking frequently into gem-like squares. It differs not in property from the common salt of the salt springs, or that of the sea, when all are equally pure. Woodward's Met. Ess.

Sal Ammoniac is found still in Ammonia, as mentioned by the ancients, and from whence it had its name. Woodward.
SALACIOUS. adj. [salacis, Lat. salace, Fr.] Lulful; lecherous.

One more salacious, rich, and old,
Out-bids, and buys her. Dryden's Juven. Sat.

Feed him with herbs
Of generous warmth, and of salacious kind. Dryd. Virg.

Animals spleened, grow extremely salacious. Arbutnot.
SALACIOUSLY. adv. [from salacious.] Lecherously; lustfully.

SALACITY. n. f. [salacitas, Lat. from salacious.] Lust; lechery.
Immoderate salacity and excess of venery is supposed to shorten the lives of cocks. Brown's Vulg. Errors.

A corrosive acrimony in the seminal lymph produces salacity. Floyer on the Humours.

SALAD. n. f. [salade, Fr. salact, Germ.] Food of raw herbs.
I climbed into this garden to pick a salad, which is not amiss to cool a man's stomach. Shakefp. Henry VI.

My salad days,
When I was green in judgment, cold in blood. Shakespeare.
You have, to rectify your palate,
An olive, capers, or some better salad, Ben. Johnson.
Ush'ring the mutton.

Some coarse cold salad is before thee set;
Fall on. Dryden's Pers. Sat.

The happy old Coricyan's fruits and salads, on which he lived contented, were all of his own growth. Dryden.

Leaves, eaten raw, are termed salad: if boiled, they become potherbs; and some of those plants which are potherbs in one family, are salad in another. Watts.

SALAMANDER. n. f. [salamandra, Fr. salamandra, Lat.] An animal supposed to live in the fire, and imagined to be very poisonous. Amble Parey has a picture of the salamander, with a receipt for her bite; but there is no such creature, the name being now given to a poor harmless insect.

The salamander liveth in the fire, and hath force also to extinguish it. Bacon's Natural History.

According to this hypothesis the whole lunar world is a torrid zone, and may be supposed uninhabitable, except they are salamanders which dwell therein. Glenn. Scap.
Whereas it is commonly said that a salamander extinguisheth fire, we have found by experience, that on hot coals it dieth immediately. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

SAL

The artist was so encompassed with fire and smoke, that one would have thought nothing but a salamander could have been safe in such a situation. Addison's Guardian.

SALAMANDER'S HAIR. n. f. A kind of asbestos, or mineral wool, being a kind of mineral, which whiteneth in the burning, and consumeth not. Bacon.

Of English tale, the coarser sort is called plaister or parget; the finer, spade, earth flax; or salamander's hair. Woodward.

SALAMANDRINE. adj. [from salamander.] Resembling a salamander.

Laying it into a pan of burning coals, we observed a certain salamandrine quality, that made it capable of living in the midst of fire, without being consumed or singed. Speilator.

SALARY. n. f. [salare, Fr. salarium, Latin.]
1. Salarium, or salary, is derived from sal. Arbutnot.
2. Stated hire; annual or periodical payment.

This is hire and salary, not revenge. Shak. Hamlet.
Several persons, out of a salary of five hundred pounds, have always lived at the rate of two thousand. Swift.

SALE. n. f. [faal, Dutch.]
1. The act of selling.
2. Vent; power of selling; market.

Nothing does more enrich any country than many towns; for the countrymen will be more industrious in tillage, and rearing of all husbandry commodities, knowing that they shall have ready sale for them at those towns. Spenser.

3. A public and proclaimed exposition of goods to the market; auction.
Those that won the plate, and those thus sold, ought to be marked so as they may never return to the race, or to the sale. Temple.

4. State of being venal; price.
The other is not a thing for sale, and only the gift of the gods. Shakefp. Cymbeline.

Others more moderate seeming, but their aim
Private reward; for which both God and state They'd set to sale. Milton's Agonist.

The more money a man spends, the more must he endeavour to increase his stock; which at last sets the liberty of a commonwealth to sale. Addison.

It seems in Spenser to signify a wicker basket; perhaps from salow, in which fish are caught.

To make baskets of bulrushes was my wont;
Who to entrap the fish in winding sale
Was better fenn? Spenser.

SALEABLE. adj. [from sale.] Vendible; fit for sale; marketable.
I can impute this general enlargement of saleable things to no cause sooner than the Cornishman's want of vent and money. Carew.

This vent is made quicker or slower, as greater or less quantities of any saleable commodity are removed out of the course of trade. Lect.

SALEABLENESS. n. f. [from saleable.] The state of being saleable.

SALEABLY. adv. [from saleable.] In a saleable manner.

SALEBOUS. adj. [salebrosus, Latin.] Rough; uneven; rugged.

SALESMAN. n. f. [sale and man.] One who sells cloaths ready made.

Poets make characters, as salesmen cloaths;
We take no measure of your fops and beaus. Swift.

SALEWORK. n. f. [sale and work.] Work for sale; work carefully done.

I see no more in you than in the ordinary
Of nature's salework. Shakefp. As you like it.

SALIENT. adj. [French.] Denotes a lion in a leaping posture, and standing so that his right foot is in the dexter point, and his hinder left foot in the sinister base point of the escutcheon, by which it is distinguished from rampant. Harv.

SALIENT, in heraldry, is when the lion is sporting himself. Peacham.

SALIENT. adj. [salient, Latin.]
1. Leaping; bounding; moving by leaps.
The legs of both sides moving together, as frogs, and salient animals, is properly called leaping. Brown's Vulg. Err.

2. Beating; panting.
A salient point so first is call'd the heart,
By turns dilated, and by turns compress'd,
Expels and entertains the purple guest. Blackmore.

3. Springing or shooting with a quick motion.
Who best can fend on high
The salient spout, far streaming to the sky. Pope.

SALINE. adj. [salinus, Latin.] Consisting of salt; containing salt.
We do not easily ascribe their induration to cold; but rather unto salinous spirits and concretionary juices. Brown.

This saline sap of the vessels, by being refused reception of the parts, declares itself in a more hostile manner, by drying the radical moisture. Harvey on Consumption.

SAL

If a very small quantity of any salt or vitriol be dissolved in a great quantity of water, the particles of the salt or vitriol will not sink to the bottom, though they be heavier in specie than the water; but will evenly diffuse themselves into all the water, so as to make it as saline at the top as at the bottom. Newton's Opt.

As the substance of coagulations is not merely saline, nothing dissolves them but what penetrates and relaxes at the same time. Arbutnot on Aliments.

SALIGOTS. n. f. A kind of thistle. Arbutnot.

SALIVA. n. f. [Latin.] Every thing that is spit up; but it more strictly signifies that juice which is separated by the glands called salival.

Not meeting with disturbance from the saliva, I the sooner extirpated them. Wise's Surgery.

SALIVARY. adj. [from saliva, Latin.] Relating to spittle.

The woodpecker, and other birds that prey upon flies, which they catch with their tongue, in the room of the said glands have a couple of bags filled with a viscous humour, which, by small canals, like the salival, being brought into their mouths, they dip their tongues herein, and so with the help of this natural birdlime attack the prey. Grew.

The necessity of spittle to dissolve the aliment appears from the contrivance of nature in making the salivary ducts of animals which ruminate, extremely open: such animals as swallow their aliment without chewing, want salivary glands. Arbutnot on Aliments.

To SALIVATE. v. a. [from saliva, Latin.] To purge by the salival glands.

She was prepossessed with the scandal of salivating, and went out of town. Wise's Surgery.

SALIVATION. n. f. [from salivate.] A method of cure much practised of late in venerical, scrophulous, and other obdurate caufs, by promoting a secretion of spittle. Quincy.

Holding of ill-tasted things in the mouth will make a small salivation. Grew's Cosmol.

SALIVOUS. adj. [from saliva.] Consisting of spittle; having the nature of spittle.

There happeneth an elongation of the uvula, through the abundance of salivous humour flowing upon it. Wise's Surgery.

SALLET. n. f. [corrupted by pronunciation from salad.] I tried upon sallet oil.

Sow some early salleting. Boyle.
SALLIANCE. n. f. [from sally.] The act of issuing forth; sally. A word not elegant, but out of use.

Now mote I weat,
Sir Guyon, why with so fierce salliance
And fell intent, ye did at earst me meet. Fairy Queen.

SALLOW. n. f. [sallus, Latin.] A tree of the genus of willow. See WILLOW.

Sallow and reeds on banks of rivers born,
Remain to cut to stay thy vines. Dryden.

SALLOW. adj. [sall, German; black; sale, French, foul.] Sickly; yellow.

What a deal of brine
Hath wait thy sallow cheeks for Rosaline? Shakespeare.

The scene of beauty and delight is chang'd:
No roses bloom upon my fading cheek,
Nor laughing graces wanton in my eyes;
But haggard grief, lean-looking sallow care,
And pining discontent, a rueful train,
Dwell on my brow, all hideous and forlorn. Rowe.

SALLOWNESS. n. f. [from sallow.] Yellowness; sickly paleness.

A fish-diet would give such a sallowness to the celebrated beauties of this island, as would scarce make them distinguishable from those of France.

SALLY. n. f. [sallie, French.]
1. Eruption; issue from a place besieged; quick egress.

The deputy fat down before the town for the space of three Winter months; during which time sallies were made by the Spaniards, but they were beaten in with loss. Bacon.

2. Range; excursion.
Every one shall know a country better, that makes often sallies into it, and traverses it up and down, than he that, like a mill-horse, goes still round in the same track. Locke.

3. Flight; volatile or sprightly exertion.
These passages were intended for sallies of wit; but whence comes all this rage of wit?

4. Escape; levity; extravagant flight; frolic; wild gaiety; exorbitance.
At his return all was clear, and this excursion was esteemed but a sally of youth.

'Tis but a sally of youth. Watson.
We have written some things which we may with never to have thought on: some sallies of levity ought to be imputed to youth.

The epifodical part, made up of the extravagant sallies of the prince of Wales and Falstaff's humour, is of his own invention. Shakespeare's Illustrated.

SAL

To SALLY. v. n. [from the noun.] To make an eruption; to issue out.

The Turks sallying forth, received thereby great hurt. Knaill.
The noise of some tumultuous fight:
They break the truce, and sally out by night. Dryden.

The summons take of the same trumpet's call,
To sally from one port, or man one publick wall. Tate.

SALLYPORT. n. f. [sally and port.] Gate at which sallies are made.

My slippery foul had quit the fort,
But that the stopp'd the sallyport. Cleveland.

Love to our citadel resorts
Through those deceitful sallyports;
Our sentinels betray our forts. Denham.

SALMACUNDI. n. f. [It is said to be corrupted from selon mon gout, or sale à mon goût.] A mixture of chopped meat and pickled herrings with oil, vinegar, pepper, and onions.

SALMON. n. f. [salmo, Latin; salmon, French.]

The salmon is accounted the king of fresh-water fish, and is bred in rivers relating to the sea, yet so far from it as admits no tincture of brackishness. He is said to breed or cast his spawn in most rivers in the month of August: some say that then they dig a hole in a safe place in the gravel, and there place their eggs or spawn, after the melter has done his natural office, and then cover it over with gravel and stones, and so leave it to their Creator's protection; who, by a gentle heat which he infuses into that cold element, makes it brood and beget life in the spawn, and to become famlets early in the Spring: having spent their appointed time, and done this natural duty in the fresh waters, they haile to the sea before Winter, both the melter and spawner. Sir Francis Bacon observes the age of a salmon exceeds not ten years: his growth is very sudden, so that after he is got into the sea he becomes from a famlet, not so big as a gudgeon, to be a salmon, in as short a time as a gosling becomes a goose. Walton's Angler.

They poke them with an instrument somewhat like the salmon spear. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

They take salmon and trouts by groping and tickling them under the bellies in the pools, where they hover, and so throw them on land. Carew.

Of fishes, you find in arms the whale, dolphin, salmon and trout. Peacham.

SALMONTROUT. n. f. A trout that has some resemblance to a salmon; a famlet.

There is in many rivers that relate to the sea salmontrouts as much different from others, in shape and spots, as sheep differ in their shape and bigness. Walton's Angler.

SALPICON. n. f. [In cookery.] A kind of farce put into holes cut in legs of beef, veal, or mutton. Bailey.

SALSAMENTARIOUS. adj. [salsamentarius, Latin.] Belonging to salt things. Ditt.

SALSIFY. n. f. [Latin.] A plant.

Salfy, or the common sort of goatbeard, is of a very long oval figure, as if it were cuds all over streaked, and engraven in the spaces between the streaks, which are sharp pointed towards the end. Mortimer's Husbandry.

The salsacids help its passing off; as sal prunel. Floyer.

SALSUGINOUS. adj. [salsugo, Latin.] Salty; somewhat salt.

The distinction of salts, whereby they are discriminated into acid, volatile, or salsuginous, if I may so call the fugitive salts of animal substances, and fixed or alcalizate, may appear of much use in natural philosophy. Boyle.

SALT. n. f. [salt, Gothick; reate, Saxon; sal, Latin; jel, French.]

1. Salt is a body whose two essential properties seem to be solubility in water, and a pungent vapor: it is an active incombustible substance: it gives all bodies consistence, and preserves them from corruption, and occasions all the variety of tastes. There are three kinds of salts, fixed, volatile, and essential: fixed salt is drawn by calcining the matter, then boiling the ashes in a good deal of water: after this the solution is filtrated, and all the moisture evaporated, when the salt remains in a dry form at the bottom: this is called a lixivious salt. Essential salt is that drawn chiefly from the parts of animals, and some purified parts of vegetables: it rises easily, and is the most volatile of any. The essential salt is drawn from the juice of plants by crystallization. Harris.

Is not discourse, manhood, learning, gentleness, virtue and liberality, the spice and salt that seasons a man? Shakefp.

He perfidiously has given up,
For certain drops of salt, your city Rome,
To his wife and mother. Shak. Coriolanus.

Since salts differ much, some being fixt, some volatile, some acid, and some urinous, the two qualities wherein they agree are, that it is easily dissoluble in water, and affects the palate with a savour, good or evil. Boyle.

A particle

Safer shall he be on the sandy plains, Than where castles mounted stand. Shakespeare. H. VI.

A region so desert, dry, and sandy, that travellers are fain to carry water on their camels. Brown's Vulg. Errors.

Rough unwieldy earth, nor to the plough Nor to the cattle kind, with sandy stones And gravel o'er-abounding. Phillips.

2. Consisting of sand; unsoft.

Favour, so bottomed upon the sandy foundation of personal respects only, cannot be long lived. Bacon's Letters.

SAKE. adj. [from sanus, Latin.] Sound; healthy. Baynard wrote a poem on preserving the body in a sane and found state.

SANG. The preterite of sing.

Then sang Moses and Israel this song unto the Lord. Ex. xv.

These next they sang, of all creation first. Milton.

SANGUIFEROUS. adj. [from sanguis, Latin.] Conveying blood.

The fifth conjugation of the nerves is branched to the muscles of the face, particularly the cheeks, whose sanguiferous vessels it twists about. Derham's Physico-Theology.

SANGUIFICATION. n. f. [from sanguis, Fr. sanguis and facio, Lat.] The production of blood; the conversion of the chyle into blood.

Since the lungs are the chief instrument of sanguification, the animal that has that organ faulty can never have the vital juices, derived from the blood, in a good state. Arbutnot.

Athmatick persons have voracious appetites, and consequently, for want of a right sanguification, are leucophlegmatick. Arbutnot on Aliments.

SA'NGUIFIER. n. f. [from sanguis and facio, Latin.] Producer of blood.

Bitters, like cholera, are the best sanguifiers, and also the best febrifuges. Floyer on the Humours.

To SA'NGUIFY. v. n. [from sanguis and facio, Latin.] To produce blood.

At the same time I think, I command: in inferior faculties, I walk, see, hear, digest, sanguify, and carnify, by the power of an individual soul. Hale.

SA'NGUINARY. adj. [from sanguinarius, Lat. sanguinaire, French; from sanguis, Latin.] Cruel; bloody; murderous.

We may not propagate religion by wars, or by sanguinary persecutions to force consciences. Bacon.

The scene is now more sanguinary, and fuller of actors: never was such a confused mysterious civil war as this. Howell.

Passion transforms us into a kind of savages, and makes us brutal and sanguinary. Ereom's Notes on the Odyssey.

SA'NGUINARY. n. f. [from sanguis, Lat.] An herb. Ainsworth.

SA'NGUINE. adj. [from sanguis, Fr. sanguineus, from sanguis, Lat.]

1. Red; having the colour of blood.

This fellow Upbraided me about the rose I wear; Saying, the sanguine colour of the leaves Did represent my master's blushing cheeks. Shak. H. VI.

A stream of nect'rous humour issuing flow'd Sanguine. Milton.

Dire Tisiphone there keeps the ward, Girt in her sanguine gown. Dryden.

Her flag aloft, spread rustling to the wind, And sanguine streamers seem the flood to fire: The weaver, charm'd with what his loom design'd, Goes on to sea, and knows not to retire. Dryden.

2. Abounding with blood more than any other humour; cheerful. The choleric fell short of the longevity of the sanguine. Bro.

Though these faults differ in their complexions as sanguine from melancholy, yet they are frequently united. Gov. of Tongue.

3. Warm; ardent; confident.

A set of sanguine tempers ridicule, in the number of foppes, all such apprehensions. Swift.

SA'NGUINE. n. f. [from sanguis.] Blood colour.

A grievous wound, From which forth gush'd a stream of gore, blood thick, That all her goodly garments stain'd around, And in deep sanguine dy'd the grassy ground. Fa. Queen.

SA'NGUINENESS. n. f. [from sanguine.] Ardour; heat of ex-

SA'NGUINITY. n. f. [from sanguis.] Confidence. Sanguinity is perhaps only used by Swift.

Rage, or phrensy it may be, in some perhaps natural courage, or sanguine of temper in others; but true valour it is not, if it knows not as well to suffer as to do. That mind is truly great, and only that, which stands above the power of all extrinick violence; which keeps itself a distinct principality, independent upon the outward man. Decay of Piety.

I very much distrust your sanguinity. Swift.

SANGUINEOUS. adj. [from sanguis, Latin; sanguis, French.]

1. Constituting blood.

This animal of Plato containeth not only sanguineus and reparable particles, but is made up of veins, nerves, and arteries. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

2. Abounding with blood.

A plethorick constitution, in which true blood abounds, is called sanguineus. Arbutnot.

SA'NHEDRIM. n. f. [from synhedrium, Latin.] The chief council among the Jews, consisting of seventy elders, over whom the high priest presided.

SA'NICLE. n. f. [from sanicle, Fr. sanicula, Latin.] A plant.

It is an umbelliferous plant, and its flower consists of five leaves, placed orbicularly; but bent back to the centre of the flower, and resting on the empalement, which becomes a fruit composed of two seeds, which are gibbous and prickly on one side, but plain on the other. Miller.

SA'NIES. n. f. [Latin.] Thin matter; serous excretion.

It began with a round crack in the skin, without other matter than a little sanies. Wise man's Surgery.

SA'NIOUS. adj. [from sanies.] Running a thin serous matter, not a well digested pus.

Observing the ulcer sanious, I propos'd digestion as the only way to remove the pain. Wise man.

SA'NITY. n. f. [from sanitas, Latin.] Soundness of mind.

How pregnant, sometimes, his replies are? A happiness that often madnels hits on, Which sanity and reason could not be, So prosperously delivered of. Shakespeare. Hamlet.

SANK. The preterite of sink.

As if the opening of her mouth to Zelmane had opened some great floodgate of sorrow, whereof her heart could not abide the violent issue, she sank to the ground. Sidney.

Our men followed them close, took two ships, and gave divers others of their ships their death's wounds, whereof soon after they sank and perished. Bacon's War with Spain.

SANS.

S A N

SAP

SANS, prep. [French.] Without. Out of use.
 Last scene of all,
 That ends this strange eventful history,
 Is second childishness and mere oblivion,
Shakesp.
Sans teeth, sans eyes, sans taste, sans every thing.
 For nature so preposterously to err,
 Being not deficient, blind, or lame of sense,
Shakesp. Othello.
SAP, n. f. [Saxo; sap, Dutch.] The vital juice of plants; the juice that circulates in trees and herbs.
 Now sucking of the sap of herbs most sweet,
 Or of the dew, which yet on them does lie,
 Now in the same bathing his tender feet.
Spenser.
 Though now this grained face of mine be hid
 In sap consuming Winter's drizzled snow,
 And all the conduits of my blood froze up,
 Yet hath my night of life some memory.
Shakespeare.
 Wound the bark of our fruit-trees,
 Left, being over-proud with sap and blood,
 With too much riches it confound itself.
Shakesp. R. II.
 His presence had infused
 Into the plant scintillating sap.
Milton.
 The sap which at the root is bred
 In trees, through all the boughs is spread.
Waller.
 Vegetables consist of the same parts with animal substances, spirit, water, salt, oil, earth; all which are contained in the sap they derive from the earth.
Arbutnot.
 To SAP v. a. [Saxo; French; zappare, Italian.] To undermine; to subvert by digging; to mine.
 Their dwellings were sapp'd by floods,
 Their houses fell upon their household gods.
Dryden.
 To SAP v. n. To proceed by mine; to proceed invisibly.
 For the better security of the troops, both assaults are carried on by sapping.
Tatler.
 In vain may heroes fight, and patriots rave,
 If secret gold saps on from knave to knave.
Pope.
SAPPHIRE, n. f. [Saxo; sapphirus, Latin: so that it is improperly written saphyre.] A precious stone of a blue colour.
 Sapphire is of a bright blue colour.
Woodward.
 In enroll'd tufts, flow'rs purpled, blue and white,
 Like sapphire, pearl, in rich embroidery.
Shakespeare.
 He tinctures rubies with their rosy hue,
 And on the sapphire spreads a heavenly blue.
Blackmore.
 That the sapphire should grow foul, and lose its beauty, when worn by one that is lecherous, and many other fabulous stories of gems, are great arguments that their virtue is equivalent to their value.
DeBam.
SAPPHIRINE, adj. [Saxo; sapphirinus, Latin.] Made of sapphire; resembling sapphire.
 She was too sapphirine and clear for thee;
 Clay, flint, and jet now thy fit dwellings be.
Donne.
 A few grains of shell silver, with a convenient proportion of powdered crystal glass, having been kept three hours in fusion, I found the coliquated mafs, upon breaking the crucible, of a lovely sapphirine blue.
Boyle.
SAPID, adj. [Saxo; sapidus, Latin.] Tasteful; palatable; making a powerful stimulation upon the palate.
 Thus camels, to make the water sapid, do raise the mud with their feet.
Brown's Vulgar Errors.
 The most oily parts are not separated by a slight decoction, till they are disentangled from the salts; for if what remains of the subject, after the infusion and decoction be continued to be boiled down with the addition of fresh water, a fat, sapid, odorous, viscous, inflammable, frothy water will constantly be found floating a-top of the boiling liquor.
Arbutnot.
SAPIDITY, n. f. [from sapid.] Tastefulness; power of stimulating the palate.
 As for their taste, if their nutriment be air, neither can it be an instrument thereof; for the body of that element is inguistible, and void of all sapidity.
Brown's Vulg. Errors.
 If sapidness belong not to the mercurial principle of vegetables and animals, it will scarce be discriminated from their phlegm.
Boyle.
SAPIENCE, n. f. [Saxo; sapientia, Latin.] Wisdom; sagacity; knowledge.
 By sapience, I mean what the ancients did by philosophy; the habit or disposition of mind which importeth the love of wisdom.
Grew.
 Ne only they that dwell in lowly dust,
 The sons of darkness and of ignorance;
 But they whom thou, great Jove, by doom unjust,
 Didst to the top of honour earth advance:
 They now, put up with's deignful insolence,
 Despise the brood of blessed sapience.
Spenser.
 King James, of immortal memory, among all the lovers and admirers of divine and human sapience, accomplished at Theobalds his own days on earth.
Watson.
 Because enterprises guided by ill counsels have equal success to those by the best judgment conducted, therefore had violence the same external figure with sapience.
Raleigh.
 Immense, and all his father in him thone.
Milton.

SAR

O sovereign, virtuous, precious of all trees
 In Paradise! of operation blest
 To sapience.
Milton.
 Many a wretch in Bedlam,
 Though perhaps among the rout
 He wildly flings his filth about,
 Still has gratitude and sapience.
 To spare the folks that give him ha'pence.
Swift.
SARPIENT, adj. [Saxo; sapiens, Latin.] Wise; sage.
 There the sarpiens king held dalliance.
Milton.
SARBLESS, adj. [Saxo; sarble, Dutch.]
 1. Wanting sap; wanting vital juice.
 Pitiless arms, like to a wither'd vine,
 That droops his sarble branches to the ground. Shak. H. VI.
 The tree of knowledge, blasted by disputes,
 Produces sarble leaves instead of fruits.
DeBam.
 This single stick was full of sap; but now in vain does art tie that withered bundle of twigs to its sarble trunk.
Swift.
 2. Dry; old; husky.
 If by this bribe, well plac'd, he would ensnare
 Some sarble usurer that wants an heir. Dryden's Jew.
SARPLING, n. f. [from sap.] A young tree; a young plant.
 Look how I am bewitch'd; behold, mine arm
 Is, like a blasted sarpling, wither'd up. Shakesp. R. III.
 Nurie the sarplings tall, and curl the grove
 With ringlets quaint.
 A sarpling pine he wrench'd from out the ground,
 The readiest weapon that his fury found.
Dryden.
 What planter will attempt to yoke
 A sarpling with a falling oak?
 Slouch turn'd his head, saw his wife's vigorous hand Wielding her oaken sarpling of command. King's Lear.
SARONACEOUS, adj. [from sapo, Latin, soap.] Sapy; re-
SARONARY, n. f. [from sapo, Latin, soap.] Sapy; re-
 By digesting a solution of salt of tartar with oil of almonds,
 I could reduce them to a soft saronary substance. Boyle.
 Any mixture of an oily substance with salt, may be called a soap: bodies of this nature are called saronaceous. Arbutnot.
SAPOR, n. f. [Latin.] Taste; power of affecting or stimulating the palate.
 There is some sapor in all aliments, as being to be distinguished and judged by the gust, which cannot be admitted in air. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
 The shape of those little particles of matter which distinguish the various sapors, odours, and colours of bodies. Watts.
SAPORTICK, adj. [Saxo; saporis, Fr. sapor and facis, Latin.]
 Having the power to produce taste.
SAPPINESS, n. f. [from sappy.] The state or the quality of abounding in sap; succulence; juiciness.
SAPPY, adj. [from sap.]
 1. Abounding in sap; juicy; succulent.
 The sappy parts, and next resembling juice,
 Were turn'd to moisture for the body's use,
 Supplying humours, blood, and nourishment. Dryden.
 The sappy boughs
 Attire themselves with blooms, sweet rudiments
 Of future harvest.
 The green heat the ripe, and the ripe give fire to the green; to which the bigness of their leaves, and hardness of their stalks, which continue moist and sappy long, doth much contribute. Mortimer.
 2. Young; not firm; weak.
 This young prince was brought up among nurses, till he arrived to the age of six years: when he had passed this weak and sappy age, he was committed to Dr. Cox. Hayward.
SARABAND, n. f. [Saxo; sarabanda, Spanish; sarabande, French.] A Spanish dance.
 The several modifications of this tune-playing quality in a fiddle, to play preludes, sarabands, jigs, and gavots, are as much real qualities in the instrument as the thought is in the mind of the composer. Arbutnot.
SARASCISM, n. f. [Saxo; sarasmus, Latin.] A keen reproach; a taunt; a gibe.
Sarasmus of wit are transmitted in story. Gow. of the Torque.
 Rejoice, O young man, says Solomon, in a severe sarasmus, in the days of thy youth, and walk in the ways of thy heart; but know that for these things God will bring thee into judgment. Rogers's Sermon.
 When an angry master says to his servant it is bravely done, it is one way of giving a severe reproach; for the words are spoken by way of sarasmus, or irony. Watts.
SARCASTICALLY, adv. [from sarcastick.] Tauntingly; severely.
 He asked a lady playing with a lap-dog, whether the women of that country used to have any children or no; thereby sarcastically reproaching them for misplacing that affection upon brutes, which could only become a mother to her child. South.
SARCASTICAL, adj. [from sarasmus.] Keen; taunting; severely.
 What a fierce and sarcastick reprehension should this have drawn from the friendship of the world, and yet what a gentle one did it receive from Christ?
SARCENT.

SAT

SARCENT, n. f. [Supposed by Skinner to be sericum saracenium, Latin.] Fine thin woven silk.
 Why art thou then exasperate, thou idle immaterial skein of sleigh silk, thou green sarcent flap for a fore eye, thou tassel of a prodigal's purse?
Shakesp. Troilus and Cressida.
 If they be covered, though but with linnen or sarcent, it intercepts the effluvia. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
 These are they that cannot bear the heat
 Of figur'd silks and under sarcent's sweat. Dryden's Juven.
 She darts from sarcent ambush wily leers,
 Twitches thy sleeve, or with familiar airs
 Her fan will pat the cheek; these snares disdain. Gay.
 To SARCLE, v. a. [Saxo; sarculo, Latin.] To weed corn.
SARCOCELE, n. f. [Saxo; sarcocele, Fr.] A fleshy excrescence of the testicles, which sometimes grow so large as to stretch the scrotum much beyond its natural size. Quincy.
SARCOMA, n. f. [Saxo; sarcoma, Fr.] A fleshy excrescence, or lump, growing in any part of the body, especially the nostrils. Bailey.
SARCOPHAGOUS, adj. [Saxo; sarx and phago.] Flesh-eating; feeding on flesh.
SARCOPHAGY, n. f. [Saxo; sarx and phago.] The practice of eating flesh.
 There was no sarcephagy before the flood; and, without the eating of flesh, our fathers preserved themselves unto longer lives than their posterity. Brown's Vulg. Errors.
SARCO-TICK, n. f. [from sarx and tick, Fr.] Medicines which fill up ulcers with new flesh; the same as incarnatives.
 By this means the humour was moderately repressed, and breathed forth; the scar also separated in the fontanel; after which the ulcer incarnated with common sarcenticks, and the ulcerations about it were cured by ointment of tuty, and such like euphoticks. Wise's Anatomy.
SARCLATION, n. f. [Saxo; sarculus, Latin.] The act of weeding; pulling up weeds. Diels.
SARDEL, n. f. [Saxo; sardel, Latin.] A sort of precious stone.
SARDINE, n. f. [Saxo; sardine, Latin.] A sort of precious stone.
SARDUS, n. f. [Saxo; sardus, Latin.] A sort of precious stone.
 He that fat was to look upon, like a sarper and a sardine stone. Rev. iv. 3.
 Thou shalt set in it four rows of stones: the first row shall be a sardius. Ex. xxviii. 17.
SARDONYX, n. f. A precious stone.
 The onyx is an accidental variety of the agat kind: 'tis of a dark horny colour, in which is a plate of a bluish white, and sometimes of red: when on one or both sides the white there happens to lie also a plate of a reddish colour, the jewellers call the stone a sardonyx. Woodward.
SARK, n. f. [Saxo; sark, Latin.] A shirt.
 1. A shirt or shirt.
 2. In Scotland it denotes a shirt.
 Planting beaus gang with their breasts open, and their sarks over their waistcoats. Arbutnot. Hist. of John Bull.
SARK, n. f. A British word for pavement, or stepping stones, still used in the same sense in Berkshire and Hampshire.
SARPLIER, n. f. [Saxo; sarplier, French.] A piece of canvas for wrapping up wares; a packing cloth. Bailey.
SARASINE, n. f. [In botany.] A kind of birthwort. Bailey.
SARSA, n. f. [In botany.] A kind of birthwort. Bailey.
SARSAPARELLA, n. f. Both a tree and a plant. Ainsworth.
SARSE, n. f. A sort of fine lawn sieve. Bailey.
 To SARSE, v. a. [Saxo; sarse, French.] To sift through a sieve or sarse. Bailey.
SART, n. f. [In agriculture.] A piece of woodland turned into arable. Bailey.
SASH, n. f. [Of this word the etymologists give no account: I suppose it comes from sache, of savoir, to know, a sash worn being a mark of distinction; and a sash window being made particularly for the sake of seeing and being seen.]
 1. A belt worn by way of distinction; a silken band worn by officers in the army.
 2. A window so formed as to be let up and down by pulleys.
 She ventures now to lift the sash,
 The window is her proper sphere. Swift.
 As for the poem he wrote on your sash,
 My sister transcrib'd it last night.
 She broke a pane in the sash window that looked into the yard. Swift.
SASHOON, n. f. A kind of leather stuffing put into a boot for the wearer's ease. Ainsworth.
SASSAFRAS, n. f. A tree: one of the species of the cornelian cherry. The wood is medicinal. South.
SAT, n. f. [Saxo; satana, Latin.] The prince of hell;
 the devil; any wicked spirit.
 I beheld Satan as lightning fall from heaven. Lu. x. 18.

SAT

They are much increased by the false suggestions of Satan.
Sanderfon's Judgment in one View.
 The despicable act
 Of Satan done in Paradise. Milton.
SATANICAL, adj. [from Satan.] Devilish; infernal.
SATANICK, adj. [from Satan.] Devilish; infernal.
 The faint satanick host Defensive scarce. Milton.
SATCHEL, n. f. [Saxo; sackel, German; sacculus, Latin.] A little bag: commonly a bag used by schoolboys to carry their books.
 The whining schoolboy with his satchel,
 And shining morning face, creeping like snail
 Unwillingly to school. Shak. As you like it.
 Schoolboys lag with satchels in their hands. Swift.
 To SATE, v. a. [Saxo; satio, Latin.] To satiate; to glut; to pall;
 to feed beyond natural desires.
 Sated at length, ere long I might perceive Strange alteration in me. Milton's Paradise Lost.
 How will their bodies strip
 Enrich the victors, while the vultures sate
 Their maws with full repast. Phillipi.
 Thy useless strength, mistaken king, employ,
 Sated with rage, and ignorant of joy. Prior.
SATELLITE, n. f. [Saxo; satelles, Lat. satellite, Fr.] This word is commonly pronounced in prose with the e mute in the plural, as in the singular, and is therefore only of three syllables; but Pope has in the plural continued the Latin form, and assigned it four;
 I think, improperly.] A small planet revolving round a larger.
 Four moons move about Jupiter, and five about Saturn, called their satellites. Locke.
 The smallest planets are situated nearest the sun and each other; whereas Jupiter and Saturn, that are vastly greater, and have many satellites about them, are wisely removed to the extreme regions of the system. Bentley.
 Ask of yonder argent fields above,
 Why Jove's satellites are less than Jove? Pope.
SATELLITIOUS, adj. [from satelles, Lat.] Consisting of satellites.
 Their solidity and opacity, and their satellitious attendance, their revolutions about the sun, and their rotations about their axis, are exactly the same. Cheyne's Phil. Princ.
 To SATIATE, v. a. [Saxo; satio, Latin.]
 1. To satisfy; to fill.
 Those smells are the most grateful where the degree of heat is small, or the strength of the smell allayed; for these rather woo the sense than saturate it. Bacon.
 Buying of land is the result of a full and satiated gain; and men in trade seldom think of laying out their money upon land, till their profit has brought them in more than their trade can well employ. Locke.
 The loosen'd winds
 Hur'd high above the clouds; 'till all their force
 Consum'd, her rav'nous jaws th' earth satiated clos'd. Phillipi.
 2. To glut; to pall; to fill beyond natural desire.
 They saturate and soon fill,
 Though pleasant. Milton.
 Whatever novelty presents, children are presently eager to have a taste, and are as soon satiated with it. Locke.
 He may be satiated, but not satisfy'd. North.
 3. To gratify desire.
 I may yet survive the malice of my enemies, although they should be satiated with my blood. King Charles.
 4. To saturate; to impregnate with as much as can be contained or imbibed.
 Why does not salt of tartar draw more water out of the air, than in a certain proportion to its quantity, but for want of an attractive force after it is satiated with water? Newton.
SATIATE, adj. [from the verb.] Glutted; full to satiety.
 When it has satiated, it seems a participle; whereas, an adjective.
 Our generals, retir'd to their estates,
 In life's cool evening, satiated of applause,
 Nor think of bleeding ev'n in Brunswick's cause. Pope.
 Now may's and shrieves all hush'd and satiated lay,
 Yet eat, in dreams, the custard of the day. Pope's Dunc.
SATIE, n. f. [Saxo; satiety, Latin; satiety, Fr.] Fulness beyond desire or pleasure; more than enough; wearisomeness of plenty; state of being palled or glutted.
 He leaves a shallow plash to plunge him in the deep,
 And with satiety seeks to quench his thirst. Shakespeare.
 Nothing more jealous than a favourite, especially towards the waining time and suspect of satiety. Wotton.
 In all pleasures there is satiety; and after they be used, their verdure departeth. Hakewill.
 They saturate and soon fill,
 Though pleasant; but thy words, with grace divine Imbu'd, bring to their sweetness no satiety. Milton.
 No action, the usefulness of which has made it the matter of duty, but a man may bear the continual pursuit of, without loathing or satiety. South.
 The joy unequal'd, if its end it gain,
 Without satiety, though e'er so blest,
 And but more relish'd as the more distress'd. Pope.

Such a glittering shew it bare, and so bravely it was held up from the head: upon her body she wore a doublet of sky-colour satins, covered with plates of gold, and as it were nailed with precious stones, that in it might seem armed. Sidney.
The ladies dress'd in rich fymars were seen,
Of Florence satins, flower'd with white and green,
And for a shade betwixt the bloomy gridelin. Dryden.
Her petticoat, transform'd apace,
Became black satins floun'd with lace. Swift.
Lay the child carefully in a case, covered with a mantle of blue satins. Arbutn. and Pope.
SATIRE. n. f. [satira, anciently satura, Lat. not from satyrus, a satyr; satire, Fr.] A poem in which wickedness or folly is censured. Proper satire is distinguished, by the generality of the reflections, from a lampoon which is aimed against a particular person; but they are too frequently confounded.
He dares to sing thy praises in a clime
Where vice triumphs, and virtue is a crime;
Where ev'n to draw the picture of thy mind,
Is satyr on the most of human kind. Dryden.
SATIRICAL. adj. [satiricus, Latin; satirique, French; from SATIRICK.] adj. [satire.]
1. Belonging to satire; employed in writing of invective.
You must not think, that a satyrick style
Allows of scandalous and brutish words. Recommon.
Rage, passions, pleasures, impotence of will,
Shall this satirical collection fill. Dryden's Juvenal.
2. Cenforious; severe in language.
Slanders, fir; for the satirical slave says here, that old men have grey beards; that their faces are wrinkled. Shak. Hamlet.
He that hath a satirical vein, as he maketh others afraid of his wit, so he had need be afraid of others memory. Bacon.
On me when dunces are satirick,
I take it for a panegyrick. Swift.
SATIRICALLY. adv. [from satirical.] With invective; with intention to censure or vilify.
He applies them satirically to some customs, and kinds of philosophy, which he arraigns. Dryden.
SATIRIST. n. f. [from satire.] One who writes satires.
Wycherly, in his writings, is the sharpest satyrists of his time; but, in his nature, he has all the softness of the tenderest dispositions: in his writings he is severe, bold, undertaking; in his nature gentle, modest, inoffensive. Granville.
All vain pretenders have been constantly the topics of the most candid satyrists, from the Codrus of Juvenal to the Damon of Boileau. Letter to the Publisher of the Dunciad.
Yet soft his nature, though severe his lay;
His anger moral, and his wisdom gay:
Blest satyrists! who touch'd the mean so true,
As show'd vice had his hate and pity too. Pope.
TO SATIRIZE. v. a. [satirizer, Fr. from satire.] To censure as in a satire.
Covetousness is described as a veil cast over the true meaning of the poet, which was to satirize his prodigality and voluptuousness. Dryden.
Should a writer single out and point his railery at particular persons, or satirize the miserable, he might be sure of pleasing a great part of his readers; but must be a very ill man if he could please himself. Addison.
I insist that my lion's mouth be not defiled with scandal; for I would not make use of him to revile the human species, and satirize his better. Addison's Spectator.
It is as hard to satirize well a man of distinguished virtues, as to praise well a man of distinguished vices. Swift.
SATISFACTION. n. f. [satisfactio, Latin; satisfaction, French.]
1. The act of pleasing to the full.
The mind, having a power to suspend the execution and satisfaction of any of its desires, is at liberty to consider the objects of them. Locke.
2. The state of being pleased.
'Tis a wretched satisfaction a revengeful man takes, even in losing his life, provided his enemy go for company. L'Estr.
There are very few discourses so short, clear, and consistent, to which most men may not, with satisfaction enough to themselves, raise a doubt. Locke.
3. Release from suspense, uncertainty, or uneasiness.
—What satisfaction can you have? Shakespeare.
4. Gratification; that which pleases.
Run over the circle of earthly pleasures, and had not God secured a man a solid pleasure from his own actions, he would be forced to complain that pleasure was not satisfaction. South.
Of ev'ry nation each illustrious name,
Such toys as these have cheated into fame;
Exchanging solid quiet to obtain
The windy satisfaction of the brain. Dryden's Juvenal.
5. Amends; atonement for a crime; recompense for an injury.
Die he or justice must; unless for him
Some other able, and as willing, pay
The rigid satisfaction, death for death. Mit. Par. Left.

Of many things useful and curious you may satisfy yourselves in Leonardo de Vinci. Dryden.
When come to the utmost extremity of body, what can there put a stop and satisfy the mind that it is at the end of space, when it is satisfied that body itself can move into it? Locke.
This I would willingly be satisfied in, whether the soul, when it thinks thus, separate from the body, acts less rationally than when conjointly with it? Locke.
5. To convince.
He declares himself satisfied to the contrary, in which he has given up the cause. Dryden.
The standing evidences of the truth of the Gospel, are in themselves most firm, solid, and satisfying. Atterbury.
TO SATISFY. v. n. To make payment.
By the quantity of silver they give or take, they estimate the value of other things, and satisfy for them: thus silver becomes the measure of commerce. Locke.
SATURABLE. adj. [from saturate.] Impregnable with any thing 'till it will receive no more.
Be the figures of the salts never so various, yet if the atoms of water were fluid, they would always so conform to those figures as to fill up all vacuities; and consequently the water would be saturable with the same quantity of any salt, which it is not. Grew's Cynol. Sac.
SATURANT. adj. [from saturans, Lat.] Impregnating to the fill.
TO SATURATE. v. a. [saturare, Latin.] To impregnate 'till no more can be received or imbibed.
Rain-water is plentifully saturated with terrestrial matter, and more or less stored with it. Woodward.
His body has been fully saturated with the fluid of light, to be able to last so many years without any sensible diminution, though there are constant emanations thereof. Cheyne.
Still night succeeds
A soften'd shade, and saturated earth
Awaits the morning beam. Thomson.
SATURDAY. n. f. [sæternus, or sæternus, Saxon, according to Vesstegan, from sætern, a Saxon idol; more probably from Saturn, dis Saturni.] The last day of the week.
This matter I handled fully in last Saturday's Spectator. Add.
SATURDAY. n. f. [saturatus, from saturare, Latin.] Fullness; the state of being saturated; repletion.
SATURN. n. f. [saturnus, French; saturnus, Latin.]
1. The remotest planet of the solar system: supposed by astrologers to impress melancholy, dulness, or severity of temper.
The smallest planets are placed nearest the sun and each other; whereas Jupiter and Saturn, that are vastly greater, are wisely removed to the extreme regions. Bentley.

1. Escape of expence; fomewhat preferved from being fpent.
It is a great saving in all fuch lights, if they can be made as fair and right as others, and yet laft longer. Bacon.
By reducing intereft to four per cent. there was a confiderable saving to the nation; but this year they give fix. Addifon.
2. Exception in favour.
Content not with thofe that are too ftrong for us, but fill with a saving to honefty; for integrity muft be fupported againft all violence. L'Etrange.
SA'VINGLY. adv. [from saving.] With parcimony.
SA'VINGNESS. n. f. [from saving.]
1. Parcimony; frugality.
2. Tendency to promote eternal falvation.
SA'VOUR. n. f. [fauvor, Latin.] Redeemer; he that has faved mankind from eternal death.
So judg'd he man, both judge and Saviour fent. Milton.
However confonant to reafon his precepts appeared, nothing could have tempted men to acknowledge him as their God and Saviour, but their being firmly perfuaded of the miracles he wrought. Addifon.
To SA'VOUR. v. n. [aller à la faine terre, from idle people who roved about the country, and afked charity upon pretence of going à la faine terre, to the holy land; or fau terre, as having no fettled home.] To wander about idly; to loiter; to linger.
The cormorant is ftill sauntering by the fea-fide, to fee if he can find any of his brafs caft up. L'Etrange.
Tell me, why saunt ring thus from place to place

If men were weaned from their sauntering humour, wherein they let a good part of their lives run ufelefsly away, they would acquire fkill in hundreds of things. Lacke.
So the young fquire, when firft he comes From country fchool to Will's or Tom's,
Without one notion of his own,
He saunters wildly up and down. Prior.
The brainlefs ftirling
Spells uncouth Latin, and pretends to Greek;
A saunt ring tribe! fuch born to wide eftates,
With yea and no in fenates hold debates. Titchel.

Led by my hand, he saunter'd Europe round,
And gather'd ev'ry vice. Dunciad.
SA'VOUR. n. f. [favore, French; fatureia, Latin.] A plant.
It is of the verticillate kind, with a labiated flower, whole upper lip or creft is divided into two parts; but the lower lip or beard is divided into three parts, the middle part being crenated: thefe flowers are produced from the wings of the leaves in a loofe order, and not in whorles or fpikes, as are moft of this tribe of plants. Miller.
SA'VOUR. n. f. [faveur, French.]
1. A cent; odour.
What savour is better, if phyfick be true,
For places infected, than wormwood and rue? Tiffner.
Benzoe calls its fmell a tartarous and hellifh savour. Turn

Sight more deteftable. Milton.
SAW. n. f. [fawe, Danifh; faga, or rige, Saxon; fcie, Fr.]
1. A dentated inftrument, by the attrition of which wood or metal is cut.
The teeth are filed to an angle, pointing towards the end of the saw, and not towards the handle of the saw, or ftraight between the handle and end, becaufe the saw is defigned to act only in its progrefs forwards, a man having in that more ftrength than he can have in drawing back his saw, and therefore when he draws it back, he bears it lightly off the unfawn ftuff, which enables him the longer to continue his feveral progrefions of the saw. Moxon's Mech. Exer.
The roach is a leather-mouth'd fifh, and has saw like teeth in his throat. Walton's Angler.
Then saws were tooth'd, and founding axes made. Dryd.
If they cannot cut,
His saws are toothlefs, and his hatchets lead. Pope.
2. [Saxo, Sax. fægbe, Dut.] A faying; a fentence; a proverb.
Good kings, that muft approve the common saw:

SAW-WORT. n. f. [ferratula, Latin.] A plant.
It hath a ftofculous flower, confifting of feveral florets divided into many parts, refting on the embryo, and contained in a fcaly empalement, like the greater centaury, from which this differs in having fmaller heads, and from the knapweed in having the borders of the leaves cut into fmall fharp fegments, resembling the teeth of a saw. Miller.
SAW-WREST. n. f. [faw and wreft.] A fort of tool.
With the faw-wreft they fet the teeth of the saw; that is, they put one of the notches of the wreft between the firft two teeth on the blade of the saw, and then turn the handle horizontally a little about upon the notch towards the end of the saw; and that at once turns the firft tooth fomewhat towards you, and the fecond tooth from you. Moxon's Mech. Exer.
SA'WER. n. f. [fieur, French; from faw.] One whole trade
SA'WYER. n. f. [faw and yer.] is to faw timber into boards or beams.
The pit-faw is ufed by joiners, when what they have to do may be as foon done at home as fend it to the fawyers. Moxon.
SA'XIFRAGE. n. f. [faxifrage, Fr. faxifraga, Lat.] A plant.
The flower confifts of feveral leaves placed orbicularly, which expand in form of a rofe, out of whole multifid flower-cup rifes the pointal, which commonly ends in two horns, and afterward turns, together with the flower-cup, into a roundifh fruit, which has likewife two horns and two cells, which are full of fmall feeds. Miller.
Saxifrage, quafi faxum frangere, to break the ftone, is applicable to any thing having this property; but is a term moft commonly given to a plant, from an opinion of its medicinal virtues to this effect. Quincy.
SA'XIFRAGE Meadow. n. f. [flamum, Latin.] A plant.
It hath a rofe and umbellated flower, confifting of feveral leaves placed circularly, and refting upon the empalement, which afterward becomes a fruit compofed of two fhort channelled feeds.
SA'XIFRAGOUS. adj. [faxum and frago, Latin.] Diffolvent of the ftone.
Becaufe goat's blood was found an excellent medicine for the ftone, it might be conceived to be able to break a diamond; and fo it came to be ordered that the goats fhould be fed on faxi- fragous herbs, and fuch as are conceived of power to break the ftone. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

For nought but well mought him betight,
He is fo meek. Spenser.
In this flumbrv agitation what have you heard her fay? Shak.
Speak unto Solomon; for he will not fay thee nay. 1 Kings.
2. To allege.
After all can be faid againft a thing, this will ftill be true, that many things poffibly are, which we know not of. Tillot.
In vain fhall we attempt to juftify ourfelves, as the rich young man in the gofpel did, by appealing to the great duties of the law; unlefs we can fay fomewhat more, even that we have been liberal in our diftributions to the poor. Atterbury.
3. To tell in any manner.
With flying fpeed, and feeming great pretence,
Came meffenger with letters which his meffage faid. F. 29.

The lion here has taken his right measures, that is to say, he has made a true judgment.
 He has left his succession as undetermined as if he had said nothing about it.
 This ought to weigh with those whose reading is designed for much talk and little knowledge, and I have nothing to say to it.
 Of some propositions it may be difficult to say whether they affirm or deny; as when we say, Plato was no fool.
 In poetry, say is often used before a question; tell.
 Say first what cause
 Mov'd our grand parents to fall off?
 Say, Stella, feel you no content,
 Reflecting on a life well-spent.
 SAY. n. f. [from the verb.]
 1. A speech; what one has to say.
 He no sooner said out his say, but up rises a cunning snap.
 2. [For assay.] Sample.
 Since thy outsize looks to fair and warlike,
 And that thy tongue some say of breeding breathes,
 By rule of knighthood I disdain.
 So good a say invites the eye,
 A little downward to espy
 The lively clusters of her breasts.
 3. Trial by a sample.
 This gentleman having brought that earth to the publick say matters, and upon their being unable to bring it to fusion, or make it fly away, he had procured a little of it, and with a peculiar flux separated a third part of pure gold.
 4. [See, French.] Silk. Obsolete.
 5. A kind of woollen stuff.
 SAYING. n. f. [from say.] Expression; words; opinion sententiously delivered.
 I thank thee, Brutus,
 That thou hast prov'd Lucilius' saying true.
 Moses fled at this saying, and was a stranger in Median. Ant.
 Many are the sayings of the wise,
 Extolling patience as the truest fortitude.
 Others try to divert the troubles of other men by pretty and plausible sayings, such as this, that if evils are long, they are but light.
 We poetick folks, who must restrain
 Our measure'd sayings in an equal chain,
 Have troubles utterly unknown to those,
 Who let their fancy loose in rambling prose.
 The sacred function can never be hurt by their sayings, if not first reproached by our doings.
 SCAB. n. f. [scab, Saxon; scabbia, Italian; scabbe, Dutch; scabies, Latin.]
 1. An eruption formed over a sore by dried matter.
 What's the matter, you dissentious rogues,
 That rubbing the poor itch of your opinion,
 Make yourselves scabs?
 That free from gouts thou may'st preserve thy care,
 And clear from scabs, produce'd by freezing air.
 2. The itch or mange of horses.
 3. A paltry fellow, so named from the itch often incident to negligent poverty.
 I would thou did'st itch from head to foot, and I had the scratching of thee, I would make thee the loathsome'st scab in Greece.
 Well said, wart, thou art a good scab: there is a tetter for thee.
 One of the usurers, a head man of the city, took it in dudgeon to be ranked, cheek by jowl, with a scab of a currier.
 This vap'ring scab must needs devise
 To ape the thunder of the skies.
 SCABBARD. n. f. [schap, German; junius.] The sheath of a sword.
 Enter fortune's gate,
 Nor in thy scabbard sheath that famous blade,
 'Till settled be thy kingdom and estate.
 What eyes! how keen their glances! you do well to keep 'em veil'd: they are too sharp to be trusted out o' th' scabbard.
 SCABBED. adj. [from scab.]
 1. Covered or diseased with scabs.
 The briar fruit makes those that eat them scabbed. Bacon.
 2. Paltry; forry.
 To you such scabb'd harsh fruit is giv'n, as raw
 Young soldiers at their exercisings gnaw.
 SCABBEDNESS. n. f. [from scabb'd.] The state of being scabbed.
 SCABBIENESS. n. f. [from scabby.] The quality of being scabby.
 SCABBY. adj. [from scab.] Diseased with scabs.
 Her writhled skin, as rough as mapple rind,
 So scabby was, that would have loath'd all womankind. F. 2.
 A scabby tetter on their pelts will stick,
 When the raw rain has piec'd them to the quick. Dryden.

If the grazier should bring me one wether, fat and well fleeced, and expect the same price for a whole hundred, without giving me security to restore my money for those that were lean, thorn, or scabby, I would be none of his customer. Swift.
 SCABIOUS. adj. [scabiosus, Latin.] Itchy; leprous.
 In the Spring scabious eruptions upon the skin were epidemical, from the acidity of the blood.
 SCABIOUS. n. f. [scabiosus, Fr. scabiosa, Latin.] A plant.
 It hath a flocculent flower, consisting of many unequal florets, contained in a common empalement: some of these, which occupy the middle, are cut into four or five segments; the rest, which are placed at the edge, are bilabiate: each of these sits on the top of the embryo, which is crowned, and is contained in a proper empalement, which afterward becomes a capsule, either simple or funnel-shaped, pregnant with a seed crowned, which before was the embryo.
 SCABROUS. adj. [scabreus, Fr. scaber, Latin.]
 1. Rough; rugged; pointed on the surface.
 Urine, black and bloody, is occasioned by something sharp or scabrous wounding the small blood-vessels: if the stone is smooth and well bedded, this may not happen.
 2. Harsh; unmusical.
 Lucretius is scabrous and rough in these: he seeks them, as some do Chaucerisms with us, which were better expunged.
 SCABROUSNESS. n. f. [from scabrous.] Roughness; ruggedness.
 SCABWORT. n. f. A plant.
 SCAD. n. f. A kind of fish. Probably the same with scad.
 Of round fish there are sprat, barn, smelts, and scad. Carew.
 SCAFFOLD. n. f. [schaffaut, French; schavet, Dutch, from schaven, to shew.]
 1. A temporary gallery or stage raised either for shows or spectators.
 Pardon
 The flat unraised spirit, that hath dar'd
 On this unworthy scaffold to bring forth
 So great an object.
 The throng
 On banks and scaffolds under sky might stand.
 2. The gallery raised for execution of great malefactors.
 Fortune smiling at her fortune therein, that a scaffold of execution should grow a scaffold of coronation.
 3. Frames of timber erected on the side of a building for the workmen.
 These outward beauties are but the props and scaffolds
 On which we built our love, which, now made perfect, Stands without those supports.
 Sylla added three hundred commons to the senate; then abolished the office of tribune, as being only a scaffold to tyranny, whereof he had no further use.
 To SCAFFOLD. v. a. [from the noun.] To furnish with frames of timber.
 SCAFFOLDAGE. n. f. [from scaffold.] Gallery; hollow floor.
 A strutting player doth think it rich
 To hear the wooden dialogue and found,
 'Twix his stretch'd footing and the scaffoldage.
 SCAFFOLDING. n. f. [from scaffold.]
 1. Temporary frames or stages.
 What are riches, empire, power,
 But steps by which we climb to life and reach
 Our wish; and, that obtain'd, down with the scaffolding
 Of sceptres and of thrones.
 Sicknels, contributing no less than old age to the shaking down this scaffolding of the body, may discover the inward structure.
 2. Building slightly erected.
 Send forth your lab'ring thought;
 Let it return with empty notions fraught,
 Of airy columns every moment broke,
 Of circling whirlpools, and of spheres of smoke:
 Yet this solution but once more affords
 New change of terms and scaffolding of words.
 SCALADE. n. f. [French; scalada, Spanish, from scala, Latin, scala do. } a ladder.] A storm given to a place by raising ladders against the walls.
 What can be more strange than that we should within two months have won one town of importance by scalade, battered and assaulted another, and overthrow great forces in the field?
 Thou rais'dst thy voice to record the stratagems, the arduous exploits, and the nocturnal scalade of needy heroes, the terror of your peaceful citizens.
 SCALARY. adj. [from scala, Latin.] Proceeding by steps like those of a ladder.
 He made at nearer distances certain elevated places and scalary ascents, that they might better ascend or mount their horses.
 To SCALD. v. a. [scaldare, Italian; calidus, Latin.] To burn with hot liquor.
 I am scalded with my violent motion,
 And spleen of speed to see you.

O majesty!
 When thou do'st pinch thy bearer, thou do'st fit
 Like a rich armour worn in heat of day,
 That scalds with safety.
 Thou art a soul in bliss; but I am bound
 Upon a wheel of fire, that mine own tears
 Do scald like molten lead.
 Here the blue flames of scalding brimstone fall,
 Involving swiftly in one ruin all.
 Scalding tears wore a channel where they fell.
 That I grieve, 'tis true;
 But 'tis a grief of fury, not despair!
 And if a manly drop or two fall down,
 It scalds along my cheeks, like the greenwood,
 That, spitting in the flame, works outward into tears.
 It depends not on his will to persuade himself, that what actually scalds him, feels cold.
 Has he any other wound about him, except the accidental scaldings of his woe?
 Warm cataplasms discuss; but scalding hot may confirm the tumour: heat, in general, doth not resolve and attenuate the juices of a human body; for too great heat will produce concretions.
 The best thing we can do is to scald him;
 For which operation there's nothing more proper
 Than the liquor he deals in, his own melted copper.
 2. A provincial phrase in husbandry.
 In Oxfordshire the four land they follow when the sun is pretty high, which they call a scalding fallow.
 SCALD. n. f. [from the verb.] Scuff on the head.
 Her head, altogether bald,
 Was overgrown with scuff and filthy scald.
 SCALD. adj. Paltry; forry.
 Saucy liſtors
 Will catch at us like trumpets, and scald rhymers
 Ballad us out o' tune.
 SCALDHEAD. n. f. [skalladur, bald, Islandick. Hicks.] A loathsome disease; a kind of local leprosy in which the head is covered with a continuous scab.
 The humor is corrupted by the infection of the touch of a salt humour, to which the scab, pox, and scaldhead are referable.
 SCALD. n. f. [scald, Saxon; schal, Dutch; skal, Islandick.]
 1. A balance; a vessel suspended by a beam against another vessel.
 If thou tak'st more
 Or less than just a pound, if the scale turn
 But in the estimation of a hair,
 Thou diest.
 Your vows to her and me, put in two scales,
 Will even weigh, and both as light as tales.
 Here's an equivocator, that could swear, in both the scales, against either scale; who committed treason enough for God's sake, yet could not equivocate to heaven.
 Long time in even scale
 The battle hung.
 The world's scales are even; what the main
 In one place gets, another quits again.
 The scales are turn'd, her kindness weighs no more
 Now than my woe.
 In full assemblies let the crowd prevail;
 I weigh no merit by the common scale,
 The conscience is the test.
 If we consider the dignity of an intelligent being, and put that in the scales against brute inanimate matter, we may affirm, without overvaluing human nature, that the soul of one virtuous and religious man is of greater worth and excellency than the sun and his planets.
 The sign Libra in the Zodiac.
 Juno pours out the urn, and Vulcan claims
 The scales, as the just product of his flames.
 3. [See scall, French; squama, Latin.] The small shells or crusts which lying one over another make the coats of fishes.
 He puts him on a coat of mail,
 Which was made of a fish's scale.
 Standing aloof, with lead they bruise the scales,
 And tear the flesh of the incensed whales.
 4. Any thing exfoliated or desquamated; a thin lamina.
 Take jet and the scales of iron, and with a wet feather,

 Well hast thou the scale of nature set,
 From centre to circumference; whereon
 In contemplation of created things,
 By steps we may ascend to God.
 The scale of the creatures is a matter of high speculation.
 The higher nature still advances, and preserves his superiority in the scale of being.
 All the integral parts of nature have a beautiful analogy to one another, and to their mighty original, whose images are more or less expressive, according to their several gradations in the scale of beings.
 We believe an invisible world, and a scale of spiritual beings all nobler than ourselves.
 Far as creation's ample range extends,
 The scale of sensual mental pow'rs ascends.
 In contemplation's scale I'll soar,
 And be enraptur'd more and more;
 Whilst thus new matter of surprise
 In each gradation shall arise.
 8. A figure subdivided by lines like the steps of a ladder, which is used to measure proportions between pictures and the thing represented.
 The map of London was set out in the year 1658 by Mr. Newcourt, drawn by a scale of yards.

Hath scath'd the forest oaks, or mountain pines,
With finged top their stately growth, though bare,
Stands on the blasted heath. Milton's Parad. Lost, b. i.

SCATH. n. f. [from scath, Saxon.] Waste; damage; mischief; depopulation. Scath in Scotland denotes spoil or damage: as, he bears the scath and the scorn. A proverb.

She suborned hath
This crafty messenger, with letters vain,
To work new woe and unprovided scath. Fairy Queen.

The ear that budded fair is burnt and blasted,
And all my hoped gain is turn'd to scath. Spenser.

He bore a pitiful mind against king Edward, doing him all the scath that he could, and annoying his territories. Spenser.

My proud one doth work the greater scath,
Through sweet allurements of her lovely hue. Spenser.

They placed them in Rhodes, where daily doing great scath to the Turk, the great warrior Soliman, with a mighty army, so overlaid them, that he won the island from them. Knolles.

Still preserv'd from danger, harm, and scath,
By many a sea and many an unknown shore. Fairfax.

SCATHFUL. adj. [from scath.] Mischievous; destructive.

A bawling vessel was he captain of,
For shallow draught, and bulk unprizable,
With which such scathful grapple did he make,
That very envy, and the tongue of loss,
Cried fame and honour on him. Shakespeare. Twelfth Night.

To SCATTER. v. a. [from scatter, Saxon; scatteren, Dutch.]

1. To throw loosely about; to sprinkle.

Where cattle pastur'd late, now scatter'd lies
With carcasses and arms th' enflam'd field. Milton.

Teach the glad hours to scatter, as they fly,
Soft quiet, gentle love, and endless joy. Prior.

Corruption, still Voracious, swallow'd what the liberal hand
Of bounty scatter'd o'er the savage year. Thomson.

2. To dissipate; to disperse.

A king, that sitteth in the throne of judgment, scattereth away all evil with his eyes. Prov. xx. 8.

The Lord shall cause his glorious voice to be heard with scattering and tempest and stones. If. xxx. 30.

Samuel came not to Gilgal, and the people were scattered from Saul. 1 Sa. xiii. 8.

Adam by this from the cold sudden damp
Recovering, and his scatter'd spirits return'd. Milton.

3. To spread thinly.

Why should my muse enlarge on Libyan swains,
Their scatter'd cottages and ample plains. Dryden.

To SCATTER. v. n. To be dissipated; to be dispersed.

Sound diffuseth itself in rounds; but if that which would scatter in open air, be made to go into a canal, it gives greater force to the sound. Bacon.

The sun
Shakes from his noon-day throne the scattering clouds. Thom.

SCATTERINGLY. adv. [from scattering.] Loosely; dispersedly.

The Spaniards have here and there scatteringly, upon the sea-coasts, set up some towns. Abbot.

Those drops of prettiness, scatteringly sprinkled amongst the creatures, were designed to defecate and exalt our conceptions, not to inveigle or detain our passions. Boyle.

SCATTERLING. n. f. [from scatter.] A vagabond; one that has no home or settled habitation.

Such scatterlings cannot easily, by any ordinary officer, be gotten, when challenged for any such fact. Spenser.

Gathering unto him all the scatterlings and outlaws out of all the woods and mountains, in which they long had lurked, he marched forth into the English pale. Spenser on Ireland.

SCATURIENT. adj. [from scaturiens, Latin.] Springing as a fountain.

SCATURIGINOUS. adj. [from scaturigo, Latin.] Full of springs or fountains. Dill.

SCAVENGER. n. f. [from scapan, to have, perhaps to sweep, Saxon.] A petty magistrate, whose province is to keep the streets clean.

Since it is made a labour of the mind, as to inform mens judgements, and move their affections, to resolve difficult places of Scripture, to decide and clear off controversies, I cannot see how to be a butcher, scavenger, or any other such trade, does at all qualify men for this work. South's Sermons.

Bayard.

Dick the scavenger, with equal grace,
Plurks from his cart the mud in Walpole's face. Swift.

SCALERAT. n. f. [French; sceleratus, Latin.] A villain; a wicked wretch. A word introduced unnecessarily from the French by a Scottish author.

Scelerats can by no arts stifle the cries of a wounded conscience. Cheyne.

1. The appearances of place or things.

He must gain a relish of the works of nature, and be conversant in the various scenary of a country life. Addison.

2. The representation of the place in which an action is performed.

The progress of the sound, and the scenary of the bordering regions, are imitated from Aen. vii. on the founding the horn of Aleto. Pope.

3. The disposition and consecution of the scenes of a play.

To make a more perfect model of a picture, is, in the language of poets, to draw up the scenary of a play. Dryden.

SCENE. n. f. [from scena, Latin; σκηνη, scene, French.]

1. The stage; the theatre of dramatick poetry.

Cedar and pine, and fir and branching palm,
A sylvan scene; and as the ranks ascend
Shade above shade, a woody theatre
Of stateliest view. Milton.

2. The general appearance of any action; the whole contexture of objects; a display; a series; a regular disposition.

Now prepare thee for another scene. Milton.

A mute scene of sorrow, mixt with fear;
Still on the table lay the unfinish'd cheer. Dryden.

A larger scene of action is display'd,
And, rising hence, a greater work is weigh'd. Dryden.

Ev'ry fev'ral place must be
A scene of triumph and revenge to me. Dryden.

When rising spring adorns the mead,
A charming scene of nature is display'd. Dryden.

Eternity! thou pleasing, dreadful thought!
Through what variety of untry'd beings,
Through what new scene and changes must we pass! Addison.

About eight miles distance from Naples lies a very noble scene of antiquities: what they call Virgil's tomb is the first. Addison on Italy.

Say, shepherd, say, are these reflections true?
Or was it but the woman's fear that drew
This cruel scene, unjust to love and you. Prior.

3. Part of a play.

It shall be so my care
To have you royally appointed, as if
The scene you play were mine. Shakespeare. Winter's Tale.

Our author would excuse these youthful scenes
Begotten at his entrance. Granville.

4. So much of an act of a play as passes between the same persons in the same place.

If his characters were good,
The scenes entire, and freed from noise and blood,
The action great, yet circumscrib'd by time,
The words not forc'd, but sliding into rhyme,
He thought, in hitting these, his business done. Dryden.

5. The place represented by the stage.

The king is set from London, and the scene
Is now transported to Southampton. Shakespeare. Hen. V.

6. The hanging of the theatre adapted to the play.

The alteration of scenes feeds and relieves the eye, before it be full of the same object. Bacon.

SCENICK. adj. [from scenique, Fr. from scene.] Dramatick; theatrical.

With scenick virtue charm the rising age. Anonymous.

SCENOGRAPHICAL. adj. [from scenographia, Gr.] Drawn in perspective.

SCENOGRAPHICALLY. adv. [from scenographical.] In perspective.

SCENOGRAPHY. n. f. [from scenographia, Gr.; scenographie, Fr.] The art of perspective.

SCENT. n. f. [from sentir, to smell, French.]

1. The power of smelling; the smell.

A hunted hare treads back her mazes, crosses and confounds her former track, and uses all possible methods to divert the scent. Att's Improvement of the Mind.

2. The object of smell; odour good or bad.

Belman cried upon it at the meekest loss,
And twice to-day pick'd out the dullest scent. Shakespeare.

The plague, they report, hath a scent of the smell of a melow apple. Bacon.

Good earth, newly turned up, hath a freshness and good scent. Bacon.

Good scents do purify the brain,
Awake the fancy, and the wits refine. Davies.

Partake
The season, prime for sweetest scents and airs. Milton.

Exulting, 'till he finds their nobler sense
Their disproportion'd speed does recompense;
Then curses his conspiring feet, whose scent
Betrays that safety which their swiftness lent. Denham.

Cheerful health,
His duteous handmaid, through the air improv'd,
With lavish hand diffuses scents ambrosial. Prior.

3. Chace followed by the smell.

He gained the observations of innumerable ages, and travelled upon the same scent into Ethiopia. To

To SCENT. v. a. [from the noun.]
 1. To smell; to perceive by the nose.
 So scented the grim feature, and upturn'd
 His nostrils wide into the murky air,
 Sagacious of his quarry from so far. Milton's Par. Lost.
 2. To perfume; or to imbue with odour good or bad.
 Balm, from a silver box distill'd around,
 Shall all bedew the roots, and scent the sacred ground. Dryd.
 He spies
 His op'ning hounds, and now he hears their cries;
 A gen'rous pack, or to maintain the chace,
 Or snuff the vapour from the scented grafs. Addison.
 SCENTLESS. adj. [from scnt.] Inodorous; having no smell.
 SCÉPTRE. n. f. [from scptum, Latin; scptre, Fr.] The ensign of royalty born in the hand.
 Nor shall proud Lancaster usurp my right,
 Nor hold the sceptre in his childish fist. Shak. Henry VI.
 Thou sceptre's heir,
 That thus affect'st a sheephook. Shakespeare.
 How, best of kings, do'st thou a sceptre bear!
 How, best of poets, do'st thou laurel wear!
 But two things rare the fates had in their store,
 And gave thee both, to shew they could no more. B. John.
 The sceptre bearers lent
 Their tree attendance. Chapman's Odyssey.
 The parliament prefented those acts which were prepared by them to the royal sceptre, in which were some laws restrain-ing the extravagant power of the nobility. Clarendon.
 The court of Rome has, in other instances, so well attested its good managery, that it is not credible crowns and sceptres are conferred gratis. Decay of Piety.
 SCÉPTRED. adj. [from sceptre.] Bearing a sceptre.
 The sceptred heralds call
 To council, in the city-gates. Milton's Paradise Lost.
 To Britain's queen the scepter'd suppliant bends,
 To her his crowns and infant race commends. Tickel.
 SCÉPTICK. n. f. See SKEPTICK.
 SCÉDULE. n. f. [from scdula, Latin; scdula, French.]
 1. A small scroll.
 The first published schedules being brought to a grave knight, he read over an unfavoury sentence or two, and delivered back the libel. Hooker.
 All ill, which all
 Prophets or poets spake, and all which shall B' annex'd in schedules unto this by me, Donne.
 Fall on that man.
 2. A little inventory.
 I will give out schedules of my beauty: it shall be invento-ried, and every particle and utensil label'd to my will. Shak.
 SCHEMATISM. n. f. [from σχηματισμός.] Combination of the aspects of heavenly bodies; particular form or disposition of a thing.
 Every particle of matter, whatever form or schematism it puts on, must in all conditions be equally extended, and therefore take up the same room. Creech.
 SCHEMATIST. n. f. [from scheme.] A projector; one given to forming schemes.
 SCHEMÉ. n. f. [from σχῆμα.]
 1. A plan; a combination of various things into one view, design, or purpose; a system.
 Were our senses made much quicker, the appearance and outward scheme of things would have quite another face to us, and be inconsistent with our well being. Locke.
 We shall never be able to give ourselves a satisfactory account of the divine conduct, without forming such a scheme of things as shall at once take in time and eternity. Atterbury.
 2. A project; a contrivance; a design.
 The haughty monarch was laying schemes for suppressing the ancient liberties, and removing the ancient boundaries of kingdoms. Atterbury's Sermons.
 He forms the well-concerted scheme of mischief;
 'Tis fix'd, 'tis done, and both are doom'd to death. Rowe.
 The stoical scheme of supplying our wants by lopping of our desires, is like cutting off our feet when we want shoes. Swift.
 3. A representation of the aspects of the celestial bodies; any lineal or mathematical diagram.
 It hath embroiled the endeavours of astrology in the errection of schemes, and the judgment of death and diseases.
Brown's Vulgar Errors.
 It is a scheme and face of heaven,
 As th' aspects are dispos'd this even. Hudibras.
 SCHEMER. n. f. [from scheme.] A projector; a contriver.
 SCHEMIS. n. f. [from σχῆμα.] An habitude; state of any thing with respect to other things.
 If that mind which has existng in itself from all eternity all the simple essences of things, and consequently all their possible schemes or habitudes, should ever change, there would arise a new schēsis in the mind, which is contrary to the supposition. Norris.
 SCIRRUS. n. f. [from scirre, French. This should be written scir- in English has before i and r the found of f. See SKEPTICK.]

 An indurated gland.
 Any of these three may degenerate into a scirrhous, and that scirrhous into a cancer. Wifeman of Tournay.
 SCIRRHOUS. adj. [from scirrhous.] Having a gland indurated.
 How they are to be treated when they are strumous, scir- rhous, or cancerous, you may see. Wifeman.
 SCIRRHOUSITY. n. f. [from scirrhous.] An induration of the glands.
 The difficulty of breathing, occasioned by scirrhosities of the glands, is not to be cured. Arbutnot on Diet.
 SCHISM. n. f. [from σχίσμα; schisme, Fr.] A separation or division in the church of God.
 Set bounds to our passions by reason, to our errors by truth, and to our schisms by charity. King Charles.
 Oppose schisms by unity, hypocisly by sober piety, and debauchery by temperance. Spratt's Sermons.
 When a schism is once spread, there grows at length a dipute which are the schismatics: in the fence of the law the schism lies on that side which opposes itself to the religion of the state. Swift.
 SCHISMATICAL. adj. [from schismaticus, Fr. from schismatikos.] Implying schism; practising schism.
 By these tumults all factions, seditions, and schismatical proposals against government, ecclesiastical and civil, must be backed. King Charles.
 Here bare anathema's fall but like so many bruta fulmina upon the obstinate and schismatical, who are like to think themselves shrewdly hurt by being cut off from that body which they chuse not to be of, and so being punished into a quiet enjoyment of their beloved separation. South's Sermons.
 SCHISMATICALLY. adv. [from schismatical.] In a schismatical manner.
 SCHISMATICK. n. f. [from schism.] One who separates from the true church.
 No known heretick nor schismatick should be suffered to go into those countries. Bacon.
 Thus you behold the schismatick bravado's:
 Wild peaks in squibs, and Calamy in granado's. Bulwer.
 The schismatick united in a solemn league and covenant to alter the whole system of spiritual government. Swift.
 To SCHISMATIZE. v. a. [from schism.] To commit the crime of schism; to make a breach in the communion of the church.
 SCHOLAR. n. f. [from scholaris, Latin; ecolier, French.]
 1. One who learns of a master; a disciple.
 Many times that which defereth approbation would hardly find favour, if they which propose it were not to profess themselves scholars, and followers of the ancients. Hooker.
 The scholars of the Stagyrite,
 Who for the old opinion fight,
 Would make their modern friends confess
 The difference but from more to less. Prior.
 2. A man of letters.
 This same scholar's fate, res angusta domi, hinders the promoting of learning. Wilkins's Math. Magic.
 To watch occasions to correct others in their discourse, and not slip any opportunity of shewing their talents, scholars are most blamed for. Locke.
 3. A pedant; a man of books.
 To spend too much time in studies, is sloth; to make judgment wholly by their rules, is the humour of a scholar: they perfect nature, and are perfected by experience. Bacon.
 4. One who has a lettered education.
 My cousin William is become a good scholar: he is at Oxford still, is he not? Shakespeare. Henry VI.
 SCHOLARSHIP. n. f. [from scholar.]
 1. Learning; literature; knowledge.
 It pited my very heart to think that a man of my master's understanding, and great scholarship, who had a book of his own in print, should talk so outrageously. Pope.
 2. Literary education.
 This place should be school and university, not needing a remove to any other house of scholarship. Milton.
 3. Exhibition or maintenance for a scholar. Ainsworth.
 SCHOLASTICAL. adj. [from scholasticus, Latin.] Belonging to a scholar or school.
 SCHOLASTICALLY. adv. [from scholastic.] According to the niceties or method of the schools.
 No moralists or casuists, that treat scholastically of justice, but treat of gratitude, under that general head, as a part of
 it. South's Sermons.
 SCHOLASTICK. adj. [from schola, Latin; scholastique, French.]
 1. Pertaining to the school; practised in schools.
 I would render this intelligible to every rational man, however little versed in scholastic learning. Digby on Bodies.
Scholastic education, like a trade, does so fix a man in a particular way, that he is not fit to judge of any thing that lies out of that way. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
 2. Befting the school; suitable to the school; pedantick; needlessly subtle. The

 Sir Francis Bacon was wont to say, that those who left useful studies for useless scholastick speculations, were like the Olympick gamblers, who abstained from necessary labours, that they might be fit for such as were not so. Bacon.
 Both sides charge the other with idolatry, and that is a matter of confidence, and not a scholastick nicety. Stillingfleet.
 SCHOLIAST. n. f. [from scholaste, French; scholastes, Latin.] A writer of explanatory notes.
 The title of this satyr, in some ancient manuscripts, was the reproach of idleness; though in others of the scholast's 'tis inscribed against the luxury of the rich. Dryden.
 What Gellius or Stobæus cook'd before,
 Or chew'd by blind o'd scholasts o'er and o'er. Dunciad.
 SCHOLION. n. f. [Latin.] A note; an explanatory observation.
 Hereunto have I added a certain gloss or scholion, for the explication of old words, and harder phrases, which manner of glossing and commenting will seem strange in our language. Spenser.
 Some cast all their metaphysical and moral learning into the method of mathematicians, and bring every thing relating to those abstracted or practical sciences under theorems, problems, postulates, scholiums, and corollaries. Watts.
 SCHOLY. n. f. [from scholē, Fr. scholium, Latin.] An explanatory note. This word, with the verb following, is, I fancy, peculiar to the learned Hooker.
 He therefore, which made us to live, hath also taught us to pray, to the end, that speaking unto the Father in the Son's own precept form, without scholy or gloss of ours, we may be sure that we utter nothing which God will deny. Hooker.
 That scholy had need of a very favourable reader, and a tractable, that should think it plain construction, when to be commanded in the word, and grounded upon the word, are made all one. Hooker.
 To SCHOLY. v. n. [from the noun.] To write expositions.
 The preacher should want a text, whereupon to scholy. Hooker.
 SCHOOL. n. f. [from schola, Latin; ecole, French.]
 1. A house of discipline and instruction.
 Their age the fame, their inclinations too,
 And bred together in one school they grew. Dryden.
 2. A place of literary education.
 My end being private, I have not expressed my conceptions in the language of the schools. Digby.
 Writers on that subject have turned it into a composition of hard words, trifles, and subtilties, for the mere use of the schools, and that only to amuse men with empty sounds. Watts.
 3. A state of instruction.
 The calf breed to the rural trade,
 Set him betimes to school, and let him be Instructed there in rules of husbandry. Dryden.
 4. System of doctrine as delivered by particular teachers.
 No craz'd brain could ever yet propound,
 Touching the soul, so vain and fond a thought;
 But some among these matters have been found,
 Which in their schools the self-same thing had taught. Davies.
 Let no man be less confident in his faith, concerning the great blessings God designs in these divine mysteries, by reason of any difference in the several schools of Christians, concerning the consequent blessings thereof. Taylor.
 5. The age of the church, and form of theology succeeding that of the fathers.
 The first principles of Christian religion should not be farced with school points and private tenets. Sanderfon.
 A man may find an infinite number of propositions in books of metaphysics, school divinity, and natural philosophy, and know as little of God, spirits, or bodies, as he did before. Locke.
 To SCHOOL. v. a. [from the noun.]
 1. To instruct; to train.
 Una her besought to be so good
 As in her virtuous rules to school her knight. Fo. Queen.
 He's gentle, never school'd, and yet learned. Shakespeare.
 2. To teach with superiority; to tutor.
 You shall go with me;
 I have some private schooling for you both. Shakespeare.
 Cousin, school yourself; but for your husband,
 He's noble, wife, judicious. Shakespeare. Macbeth.
School your child,
 And ask why God's anointed he revild.
 If this be schooling, 'tis well for the considerer: I'll engage that no adversary of his shall in this sense ever school him. At.
 SCHOOLBOY. n. f. [from school and boy.] A boy that is in his rudiments at school.
Schoolboys tears take up
 The glasse of my fight. Shakespeare.
 He grins, smacks, shrugs, and such an itch endures,
 As 'prentices or schoolboys, which do know
 Of some gay sport abroad, yet dare not go. Donne.

SCI

A schoolboy brought his mother a book he had stolen. L'Estr.
 Once he had heard a schoolboy tell,
 How Semele of mortal race
 By thunder died. Swift.
 SCHOOLDAY. n. f. [from school and day.] Age in which youth is sent to school.
 Is all forgot?
 All school days friendship, childhood, innocence? Shakespeare.
 SCHOOLFELLOW. n. f. [from school and fellow.] One bred at the same school.
 Thy flatterring method on the youth pursue;
 Join'd with his schoolfellow by two and two:
 Persuade them first to lead an empty wheel,
 In length of time produce the lab'ring yoke. Dryden.
 The emulation of schoolfellow often puts life and industry into young lads. Locke.
 SCHOOLHOUSE. n. f. [from school and house.] House of discipline and instruction.
 Fair Una 'gan Fidelia fair request,
 To have her knight unto her schoolhouse plac'd. Spenser.
 SCHOOLMAN. n. f. [from school and man.]
 1. One versed in the niceties and subtilties of academical disputation.
 The king, though no good scholman, converted one of them by dispute. Bacon.
 Unlearn'd, he knew no scholman's subtle art;
 No language, but the language of the heart. Pope.
 2. One skilled in the divinity of the school.
 If a man's wit be not apt to distinguish or find differences, let him study the schoolmen. Bacon.
 To schoolmen I bequeath my doubtfulness,
 My sickness to physicians. Donne.
 Men of nice palates could not relish Aristotle, as he was dress'd up by the schoolmen. Baker.
 Let subtle schoolmen teach these fiends to fight,
 More studious to divide than to unite. Pope.
 SCHOOLMASTER. n. f. [from school and master.] One who prefaces and teaches in a school.
 I, thy schoolmaster, have made thee more profit
 Than other princes can, that have more time
 For vainer hours, and tutors not so careful. Shakespeare.
 Adrian VI. was sometime schoolmaster to Charles V. Kneller.
 The ancient sophists and rhetoricians lived 'till they were an hundred years old; and so likewise did many of the grammarians and schoolmasters, as Orbilius. Bacon.
 A father may see his children taught, though he himself does not turn schoolmaster. South's Sermons.
 SCHOOLMISTRESS. n. f. [from school and mistress.] A woman who governs a school.
 Such precepts I have selected from the most considerable which we have received from nature, that exact schoolmistress.
Dryden's Dufresnoy.
 My schoolmistress, like a vixen Turk,
 Maintains her lazy husband. Gay's What d'ye Call it.
 SCHREIGHT. n. f. A fifth. Ainsworth.
 SCIAGRAPHY. n. f. [from sciagraphie, French; σκιαγραφία.] This should be written with a k.
 1. [In architecture.] The profile or section of a building, to shew the inside thereof. Bailey.
 2. [In astronomy.] The art of finding the hour of the day or night by the shadow of the sun, moon, or stars. Bailey.
 SCIAATHERICAL. adj. [from sciatherique, Fr. σκιαθηρικός.] Belonging to a sun-dial. Did. This should be written sciatherical.
 There were also, from great antiquity, sciatherical or sundials, by the shadow of a stile or gnomon denoting the hours of the day; an invention ascribed unto Anaxamines by Pliny.
Brown's Vulgar Errors.
 SCIA'TICA. n. f. [from sciaticque, French; ischiatrica passio, Latin.]
 SCIA'TICK. n. f. The hip gout.
 Which of your hips has the most profound sciatica? Shakespeare.
 Thou cold sciatica,
 Cripple our senators, that their limbs may halt
 As lamely as their manners. Shakespeare. Timon.
 The Scythians, using continual riding, were generally mof-lested with the sciatica, or hip gout. Brown's Vulgar Err.
 Rack'd with sciatick, martyr'd with the stone,
 Will any mortal let himself alone? Pope.
 SCIA'TICAL. adj. [from sciatica.] Afflicting the hip.
 In obstinate sciatic pains, blistering and cauteries have been found effectual. Arbutnot.
 SCIENCE. n. f. [from science, French; scientia, Latin.]
 1. Knowledge.
 If we conceive God's fight or science, before the creation of the world, to be extended to all and every part of the world, seeing every thing as it is, his prescience or foresight of any action of mine, or rather his science or fight, from all eternity, lays no necessity on any thing to come to pass, any more than my seeing the sun move hath to do in the moving of it. Hamm.
 2. Certainty grounded on demonstration.
 So you arrive at truth, though not at science. Berkley.

3. Art attained by precepts, or built on principles.
Science perfects genius, and moderates that fury of the fancy which cannot contain itself within the bounds of reason. Dryd.
4. Any art or species of knowledge.
 No science doth make known the first principles, whereon it buildeth; but they are always taken as plain and manifest in themselves, or as proved and granted already, some former knowledge having made them evident. Hooker.
 Whatsoever we may learn by them, we only attain according to the manner of natural sciences, which were discourse of wit and reason findeth out. Hooker.
 I present you with a man
 Cunning in musick and the mathematics,
 To instruct her fully in those sciences. Shakespeare.
 The indisputable mathematics, the only science heaven hath yet vouchsafed humanity, have but few votaries among the slaves of the Stagirite. Glauv. Scip.
5. One of the seven liberal arts, grammar, rhetoric, logic, arithmetic, music, geometry, astronomy.
 Good sense, which only is the gift of heav'n,
 And though no science, fairly worth the sev'n. Pope.
- SCIENTIAL. adj. [from science.] Producing science.
 From the tree her step she turn'd;
 But first low reverence done, as to the pow'r
 That dwelt within; whose presence had infus'd
 Into the plant scintill sap, deriv'd
 From noëtar, drink of gods. Milton's Paradise Lost.
- SCIENTIFIC. adj. [from scientia, Fr. scientia and facio, Lat.]
 SCIENTIFIC. adj. Producing demonstrative knowledge; producing certainty.
 Natural philosophy proceeding from settled principles, therein is expected a satisfaction from scientific progressions, and such as beget a sure or rational belief. Brown's Vulg. Err.
 No where are there more quick, inventive, and penetrating capacities, fraught with all kind of scientific knowledge. Hewel.
 No man, who first trafficks into a foreign country, has any scientific evidence that there is such a country, but by report, which can produce no more than a moral certainty; that is, a very high probability, and such as there can be no reason to except against. South's Sermons.
 The systems of natural philosophy that have obtained, are to be read more to know the hypotheses, than with hopes to gain there a comprehensive, scientific, and satisfactory knowledge of the works of nature. Locke.
- SCIENTIFICALLY. adv. [from scientific.] In such a manner as to produce knowledge.
 Sometimes it rests upon testimony, because it is easier to believe than to be scientifically instructed. Locke.
- SCIMITAR. n. f. [See Cimeter.] A short sword with a convex edge.
 I'll heat his blood with Greekish wine to-night,
 Which with my scimitar I'll cool to-morrow. Shakespeare.
- SCINCY. n. f. A species of violet. Ainsworth.
- SCINK. n. f. A cast calf. Ainsworth. In Scotland and in London they call it scink.
- TO SCINTILLATE. v. n. [from scintilla, Latin.] To sparkle; to emit sparks.
 SCINTILLATION. n. f. [from scintillatio, Lat. from scintilla.] The act of sparkling; sparks emitted.
 He saith the planets scintillation is not seen, because of their propinquity. Glauv. Scip.
 These scintillations are not the accession of the air upon the collision of two hard bodies, but rather the inflammable effluences discharged from the bodies collided. Brown.
- SCIOLIST. n. f. [from sciolus, Latin.] One who knows many things superficially.
 'Twas this vain idolizing of authors which gave birth to that silly vanity of impertinent citations: these ridiculous fooleries signify nothing to the more generous discerners, but the pedantry of the affected sciolists. Glauv. Scip.
 These passages, in that book, were enough to humble the presumption of our modern sciolists, if their pride were not as great as their ignorance. Temple.
- SCIOLOUS. adj. [from sciolus, Latin.] Superficially or imperfectly knowing.
 I could wish these sciolous zealots had more judgment joined with their zeal. Hewel.
- SCIOLOGY. n. f. [from sciolus, Fr. sciolus and logia.] Battle with a shadow. 'Tis should be written scianology.
 To avoid this scianology, or imaginary combat of words, let me know, fir, what you mean by the name of tyrant? Cowley.
- SCION. n. f. [from scion, French.] A small twig taken from one tree to be engrafted into another.
 Sweet maid, we marry
 A gentle scion to the wildest stock;
 And make conceive a bark of baler kind,
 By bud of nobler race. Shakespeare. Winter's Tale.
 March is drawn in his left hand blossoms, and scions upon his arm.
 The scions are best of an old tree. Mortimer's Husbandry.
- SCIRE. n. f. [Latin.] A writ judicial, in law, most commonly to call a man to shew cause unto the court, whence

- it is sent, why execution of a judgment passed should not be made. 'Tis writ is not granted before a year and a day is passed, after the judgment given. Cowley.
- SCISSILE. adj. [from scissus, Latin.] Capable of being divided smoothly by a sharp edge.
 The differences of impenetrable and not impenetrable, scissile and not scissile, and many other passions of matter, are plebeian notions. Locke.
- SCISSILE. adj. [from scissile, Fr. scissile, Latin.] Capable of being cut or divided smoothly by a sharp edge.
 Animal fat is a sort of amphibious substance, scissile like a solid, and resolvable by heat. Arbutnot.
- SCISSON. n. f. [from scission, French; scissio, Latin.] The act of cutting.
 Nerves may be wounded by scission or puncture: the former way they are usually cut through, and wholly cease from action. Wifeman's Surgery.
- SCISSOR. n. f. [This word is variously written, as it is supposed to be derived by different writers; of whom some write cissors, from caedo, or incido; others scissors, from scindo; and some cissors, cizars, or scissors, ciseaux, Fr.] A small pair of sheers, or blades moveable on a pivot, and intercepting the thing to be cut.
 His beard they have sing'd off with brands of fire;
 And ever, as it blaz'd, they threw on him
 Great pails of puddled mire to quench the hair:
 My master preaches patience to him, and the while His man with scissors nicks him for a fool. Shakespeare.
 Wanting the scissors, with these hands I'll tear,
 If that obstruct my flight, this load of hair. Prin.
 When the lawyers and tradesmen brought extravagant bills, fir Roger wore a pair of scissors in his pocket, with which he would snip a quarter of a yard off nicely. Arbutnot.
- SCISSURE. n. f. [from scissus, Latin.] A crack; a rent; a fissure.
 The breach seems like the scissures and ruptures of an earthquake, and threatens to swallow all that attempt to close it, and relieves its cure only for omnipotence. Decay of Piety.
- SCLEROTICK. adj. [from scleroticus, Fr. scleroticus.] Hard: an epithet of one of the coats of the eye.
 The ligaments observed in the inside of the sclerotic tunics of the eye, serve instead of a muscle, by their contraction, to alter the figure of the eye. Ray on the Creation.
- SCLEROTICKS. n. f. [from the adjective.] Medicines which harden and consolidate the parts they are applied to. Quincy.
- TO SCOT. v. a. To stop a wheel by putting a stone or To SCOTCH. v. a. piece of wood under it before. Daily.
- TO SCOFF. v. n. [from schoppen, Dutch.] To treat with insolent ridicule; to treat with contemptuous language. With at.
 Of two noblemen of the West of England, the one was given to scoff, but kept ever royal cheer in his house; the other would ask of those that had been at his table, Tell truly, was there never a stout or dry blow given? Bacon.
 There is no greater argument of a light and inconsiderate person, than prophandy to scoff at religion. Tilley.
 Such is love,
 And such the laws of his fantastick empire,
 The wanton boy delights to bend the mighty,
 And scuffs at the vain wisdom of the wife. Rave.
- SCOFF. n. f. [from the verb.] Contemptuous ridicule; expression of scorn; contemptuous language.
 Our answer therefore to their reasons is no; to their scuffs nothing. Hooker.
- With scuffs and scorns, and contemptuous taunts,
 In open market-place produc'd they me. Shakespeare. H. VI.
 How could men surrender up their reason to flattery, more abusive and reproachful than the rudest scuffs and the sharpest invectives? South.
 Some little souls, that have got a smattering of astronomy or chemistry, for want of a due acquaintance with other sciences, make a scuff at them all, in comparison of their favourite science. Whitt.
- SCOFFER. n. f. [from scuff.] Insolent ridiculer; saucy scorner; contemptuous reproacher.
 I must tell you friendly in your ear,
 Sell when you can; you are not for all markets:
 Cry the man mercy, love him, take his offer;
 Foul is most foul, being found to be a scoffer. Shakespeare.
 Divers have herded themselves amongst these profane scuffers, not that they are convinced by their reasons, but terrified by their contumelies. Government of the Tongue.
 Consider what the apostle tells these scuffers they were ignorant of, not that there was a deluge; but he tells them, that they were ignorant that the heavens and the earth of old were so and so constituted. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
- SCOFFING. adv. [from scuffing.] In contempt; in ridicule.
 Aristotle applied this hemistich scoffingly to the sycophants at Athens. Arbutnot.
- TO SCOLD. v. n. [from scholden, Dutch.] To quarrel clamorously and rudely.
 Pardon me, 'tis the first time that ever
 I'm forc'd to scold. Shakespeare. Coriolanus.

- The one as famous for a scolding tongue,
 As the other is for beauteous modesty. Shakespeare.
 They attacked me, some with piteous moans, others grinning and only shewing their teeth, others ranting, and others scolding and reviling. Stillfleet.
- Pallas meets the queen of love;
 For gods, we are by Homer told,
 Can in celestial language scold. Swift.
Scolding and curling are her common conversation. Swift.
- SCOLD. n. f. [from the verb.] A clamorous, rude, mean, low, foul-mouthed woman.
 A threw in domestic life, is now become a scold in politics. Addison's Freeholder.
 Sun-burnt matrons mending old nets;
 Now fingering shrill, and scolding oft between;
 Scolds answer foul-mouth'd scolds. Swift.
- SCOLLOP. n. f. [Written properly scallop.] A pectinated shell-fish.
 SCOLOPENDRA. n. f. [from scolopendra, French; σκολοπενδρα.]
 1. A sort of venomous serpent. Ainsworth.
 2. [from scolopendrum, Latin.] An herb. Ainsworth.
- SCOMM. n. f. [Perhaps from scomma, Latin.] A buffoon. A word out of use, and unworthy of revival.
 The scomm, or buffoons of quality, are wolves in conversation. L'Estrange.
- SCONCE. n. f. [from schonke, German.]
 1. A fort; a bulwark.
 Such fellows are perfect in the great commanders names, and they will learn you by rote where services were done; at such and such a scence, at such a breach. Shakespeare. Henry V.
 2. The head: perhaps as being the acropolis, or citadel of the body. A low word.
 Why does he suffer this rude knave now to knock him about the scence with a dirty shovel, and will not tell him of his action of battery? Shakespeare. Hamlet.
 3. A penile candlestick, generally with a looking-glass to reflect the light.
 Golden scences hang upon the walls,
 To light the costly suppers and the balls. Dryden's Lucret.
 Triumphant Umbriel, on a scence's height,
 Clapp'd his glad wings, and fat to view the fight. Pope.
 Put candles into scences. Swift's Direct. to the Butler.
- TO SCORCE. v. a. [A word used in the universities, and derived plausibly by Stinner, whose etymologies are generally rational, from scence, as it signifies the head; to scence being to fix a fine on any one's head.] To mulct; to fine. A low word which ought not to be retained.
 SCORP. n. f. [from schorpen, Dutch.]
 1. A kind of large ladle; a vessel with a long handle used to throw out liquor.
 They turn upside down hops on malt-kilns, when almost dry, with a scorp. Mortimer's Husbandry.
 Endeavour with thy scorp, or fingers, to force the stone outwards. Sharp's Surgery.
 2. A sweep; a stroke. Perhaps it should be scweep.
 What, all my pretty chickens and their dam,
 At one fell scorp! Shakespeare. Macbeth.
- TO SCORP. v. a. [from schorpen, Dutch.]
 1. To lade out.
 As by the brook he stood,
 He scorp'd the water from the crystal flood. Dryden's Æn.
 2. This word seems to have not been understood by Thomson.
 Melted Alpine snows
 The mountain cisterns fill, those ample stores
 Of water scorp'd among the hollow rocks. Thomson.
3. To empty by lading.
 If some penurious source by chance appear'd,
 Scanty of waters, when you scorp'd it dry,
 And offer'd the full helmet up to Cato,
 Did he not dash th' untasted moisture from him? Addison.
4. To carry off in any thing hollow.
 A spectator would think this circular mount had been actually scorp'd out of that hollow space. Spektator.
 Her fore-feet are broad, that the may scorp away much earth at a time. Addison.
5. To cut hollow, or deep.
 Whatever part of the harbour they scorp in, it has an influence on all the rest; for the sea immediately works the whole bottom to a level.
 Those carbuncles the Indians will scorp, so as to hold above a pint. Addison on China.
 To his single eye, that in his forehead glar'd
 Like a full moon, or a broad burnish'd shield,
 A fork'd staff we dextrously apply'd,
 Which, in the spacious socket turning round,
 Scoop'd out the big round gelly from his orb. Addison.
 It much conduces how to scare
 The little race of birds, that hop
 From spray to spray, scorping the costliest fruit, Insatiate, undisturb'd. Philips.

- The genius of the place
 Or helps th' ambitious hill the heav'n to scale;
 Or scops in circling theatres the vale. Pope.
- SCOOPER. n. f. [from scop.] One who scoops.
 SCOPE. n. f. [from scopus, Latin.]
 1. Aim; intention; drift.
 Your scope is as mine own,
 So to enforce or qualify the laws;
 As to your soul seems good. Shakespeare. Measure for Measure.
 His coming hither hath no farther scope
 Than for his lineal royalties, and to beg Infranchisement immediate on his knees. Shakespeare. R. II.
 Had the whole scope of the author been answerable to his title, he would have only undertaken to prove what every man is convinced of; but the drift of the pamphlet is to stir up our compassion towards the rebels. Addison's Freeholder.
2. Thing aimed at; mark; final end.
 The scope of all their pleading against man's authority is to overthrow such laws and constitutions in the church, as depending thereupon, if they should therefore be taken away, would leave neither face nor memory of church to continue long in the world. Hooker.
- Now was time
 To aim their counsels to the fairest scope. Hubbard's Tale.
 We should impute the war to the scope at which it aimeth. Raleigh.
- He, in what he counsels, and in what excels,
 Mistrustful, grounds his courage on despair,
 And utter dissolution, as the scope
 Of all his aim. Milton's Paradise Lost.
3. Room; space; amplitude of intellectual view.
 An heroic poet is not tied to a bare representation of what is true, but that he might let himself loose to visionary objects, which may give him a freer scope for imagination. Dryden.
 These theorems being admitted into optics, there would be scope enough of handling that science voluminously, after a new manner; not only by teaching those things which tend to the perfection of vision, but also by determining mathematically all kinds of phenomena of colours which could be produced by refraction. Newton's Opt.
4. Liberty; freedom from restraint.
 If this constrain them to grant that their axiom is not to take any place, save in those things only where the church hath larger scope, it reflecteth that they search out some stronger reason. Hooker.
 Ah, cut my lace afunder,
 That my pent heart may have some scope to beat,
 Or else I swoon with this dead killing news. Shakespeare.
5. Liberty beyond just limits; licence.
 'Tis 'twas my fault to give the people scope,
 'Twould be my tyranny to strike and gall them,
 For what I bid them do. Shakespeare.
 Being moody, give him line and scope,
 'Till that his passions, like a whale on ground,
 Confound themselves with working. Shakespeare. Henry IV.
6. Act of riot; folly.
 As surfeit is the father of much fast,
 So every scope, by the immoderate use,
 Turns to restraint. Shakespeare.
7. Extended quantity.
 The scopes of land granted to the first adventurers were too large, and the liberties and royalties were too great for subjects. Davies on Ireland.
8. It is out of use, except in the three first senses.
 SCOPULOUS. adj. [from scopus, Latin.] Full of rocks. Diſt.
- SCORBU'ICAL. n. f. [from scorbuticus, Fr. from scorbutus, Latin.]
 SCORBU'TICK. n. f. Diseased with the scurvy.
 A person about forty, of a full and scorbutical body, having broke her skin, endeavoured the curing of it; but observing the ulcer sanious, I propos'd digestion. Wifeman.
 Violent purging hurts scorbutick constitutions; lenitive substances relieve. Arbutnot.
- SCORBU'TICALLY. adv. [from scorbutical.] With tendency to the scurvy; in the scurvy.
 A woman of forty, scorbutically and hydropically affected, having a sordid ulcer, put herself into my hand. Wifeman.
- SCORCE. n. f. This word is used by Spenser for discourse, or power of reason.
 Lively vigour rested in his mind,
 And recompens'd him with a better score;
 Weak body well is chang'd for mind's redoubled force. F. S.
- TO SCORCH. v. a. [from scorch, Saxon, burnt.]
 1. To burn superficially.
 Fire scorcheth in frosty weather. Bacon's Nat. History.
 The ladies gasp'd, and scarcely could respire;
 The breath they drew, no longer air, but fire;
 The fainty knights were scorch'd. Dryden.
2. To burn.
 Power was given to scorch men with fire. Rev. xvi. 8.
 The same that left thee by the cooling stream,
 Safe from sun's heat; but scorch'd with beauty's beam. Fairfax.
 You

You look with such contempt on pain,
That languishing you conquer more:
So lightnings which in storms appear,
Scorch more than when the skies are clear.
The same beams that shine, scorch too.
I rave,
And, like a giddy bird in dead of night,
Fly round the fire that scorches me to death.
He from whom the nations should receive
Justice and freedom, lies himself a slave;
Tortur'd by cruel change of wild desires,
Lash'd by mad rage, and scorch'd by brutal fires.
To SCORCH. v. n. To be burnt superficially; to be dried up.
To see the chariot of the sun
So near the scorching country run.
The love was made in Autumn, and the hunting followed properly, when the heats of that scorching country were declining.
Scatter a little mungy straw or fern amongst your feedings, to prevent the roots from scorching, and to receive the moisture that falls.
SCORCHING Fennel. n. f. A plant.
SCORDIUM. n. f. [Latin.] An herb.
SCORE. n. f. [from skora, Islandic, a mark, cut, or notch.]
1. A notch of long incision.
Our forefathers had no other books, but the score and the tally: thou hast caused printing to be used. Shaksp. Henry VI.
2. A line drawn.
3. An account, which, when writing was less common, was kept by marks on tallies, or by lines of chalk.
He's worth no more:
They say he parted well, and paid his score. Shaksp. Macb.
Does not the air feed the flame? And does not the flame warm and enlighten the air? Does not the earth quit scores with all the elements, in the fruits that issue from it. South.
4. Account kept of something past.
Universal deluges have swept all away, except two or three persons who begun the world again upon a new score. Tillotson.
5. Debt imputed.
That thou do'st love her, strikes some scores away
From the great compt. Shaksp. All's well that ends well.
He can win widows and pay scores,
Out-flatter favourites, or out-lie either Jovius or Silius, or both together. Donne.
6. Reason; motive.
The knight, upon the fore-nam'd score,
In quest of Sidrophel advancing,
Was now in prospect of the mansion.
He had been prentice to a brewer,
But left the trade, as many more
Have lately done on the same score. Hudibras.
A lion, that had got a polittick fit of sickness, wrote the fox word how glad he should be of his company, upon the score of ancient friendship. L'Estrange.
If your terms are moderate, we'll never break off upon that score. Collier on Pride.
7. Sake; account; reason referred to some one.
You act your kindness on Cydaria's score. Dryden.
Kings in Greece were depol'd by their people upon the score of their arbitrary proceedings. Swift.
8. Twenty. I suppose, because twenty, being a round number, was distinguished on tallies by a long score.
How many score of miles may we well ride
'Twixt hour and hour? Shaksp. Cymbeline.
The fewer still you name, you wound the more;
Bond is but one; but Harpax is a score. Pope.
For some scores of lines there is a perfect absence of that spirit of poetry. Watts.
9. A song in SCORE. The words with the musical notes of a song annexed.
To SCORE. v. a.
1. To set down as a debt.
Madam, I know when Instead of five you scor'd me ten. Swift.
2. To impute; to charge.
Your follies and debauches change
With such a whirl, the poets of your age
Are tir'd, and cannot score 'em on the stage;
Unless each vice in short-hand they indite,
Ev'n as notched prentices whole sermons write. Dryden.
3. To mark by a line.
Hast thou appointed where the moon should rise,
And with her purple light adorn the skies?
Scor'd out the bounded sun's oblique ways,
That he on all might spread his equal rays?
SCORIA. n. f. [Latin.] Drofs; recement.
The scoria, or vitrified part, which most metals, when heated or melted, do continually protrude to the surface, and which, by covering the metals in form of a thin glassy skin, causes these colours, is much denser than water. Newt. Opt.
SCORIOUS. adj. [from scoria, Lat.] Droffly; recementitious.
By the fire they emit many droffy and scorious parts. Brown.

To SCORN. v. a. [from scornen, Dutch; scornere, French.] To despise; to slight; to revile; to vilify; to contemn.
My friends scorn me; but mine eye poureth out tears unto God. Job xvi. 20.
To SCORN. v. n. To scoff.
He said mine eyes were black, and my hair black;
And now, I am remember'd, scorn'd at me. Shaksp. Lear.
Our soul is filled with the scorn of those that are at ease, and with the contempt of the proud. Pf. cxliii. 4.
I've seen the morning's lovely ray
Hover o'er the new-born day,
With rosy wings so richly bright,
As if he scorn'd to think of night. Crahan.
Fame, that delights around the world to stray, Scorns not to take our Argos in her way. Pope's Statius.
SCORN. n. f. [from scornere, old Fr. from the verb.] Contempt; scoff; slight; act of contumely.
If he do fully prove himself the honest shepherd Menalcas his brother and heir, I know no reason why you should think scorn of him. Sidney.
Unto thee will I cry, O Lord: think no scorn of me, lest if thou make as tho' thou hearest not, I become like them that go down into the pit. Pf. xxviii. 1.
We were better parch in Africk's sun,
Than in the pride and salt corn of his eyes. Shaksp. Lear.
Why should you think that I should woo in scorn?
Scorn and derision never come in tears. Shaksp. Lear.
If we draw her not unto us, she will laugh us to scorn. Id.
Diogenes was asked in scorn, what was the matter that philosophers haunted rich men, and not rich men philosophers?
He answered, because the one knew what they wanted, the others did not.
Whoever hath any thing in his person that induces contempt, hath also a perpetual spur to rescue himself from scorn:
therefore all deformed persons are bold, as being on their own defence as exposed to scorn. Bacon.
Every frown and bitter scorn,
But fann'd the fuel that too fast did burn. Dryden.
Is it not a most horrid ingratitude, thus to make a scorn of him that made us? Tillotson.
Numidia's grown a scorn among the nations
For breach of publick vows. Addison's Cat.
SCORNER. n. f. [from scorn.]
1. Contemner; despiser.
They are very active, vigilant in their enterprises, present in perils, and great scorers of death. Spenser on Ireland.
2. Scoffer; ridiculer.
The scorner should consider, upon the sight of a cripple, that it was only the distinguishing mercy of heaven that kept him from being one too. L'Estrange.
They, in the scorner's or the judge's seat,
Dare to condemn the virtue which they hate. Prior.
SCORNFUL. adj. [from scorn and full.]
1. Contemptuous; insolent.
Th' enamour'd deity
The scornful damsel thuns. Dryden.
2. Acting in defiance.
With him I o'er the hills had run,
Scornful of Winter's frost and Summer's sun: Prior.
SCORNFULLY. adv. [from scornful.] Contemptuously; insolently.
He us'd us scornfully: he would have shew'd us
His marks of merit, wounds receiv'd for's country. Shaksp.
The sacred rights of the Christian church are scornfully trampled on in print, under an hypocritical pretence of maintaining them. Atterbury's Sermon.
SCORPION. n. f. [from scorpion, French; scorpio, Latin.]
1. A reptile much resembling a small lobster, but that his tail ends in a point with a very venomous sting.
Well, fore-warning winds
Did seem to say; seek not a scorpion's nest. Shaksp. H.VI.
Full of scorpions is my mind, dear wife. Shak. Macbeth.
If he shall ask an egg, will he offer him a scorpion? Lu. xi.
2. One of the signs of the zodiack.
The squeezing crab and stinging scorpion shine. Dryden.
3. A scourge so called from its cruelty.
My father hath chastised you with whips, but I will chastise you with scorpions. Kings xii. 11.
4. [Scorpius, Latin.] A sea fish. Ainsworth.
SCORPION SENA. n. f. [from scorpius, Latin.] A plant.
The characters are: it hath leaves like those of the colutea:
the flowers are papilionaceous; the pods are slender, and contain two or three cylindrical-shaped seeds in each. Miller.
SCORPION Grass. } n. f. Herbs. Ainsworth.
SCORPION'S TAIL. }
SCORPION Wort. }
SCOT. n. f. [from scot, French.]
1. Shot; payment.
2. Scot and Lot. Parish payments.
'Twas time to counterfeit, or that hot termagant Scot had paid me scot and lot too. Shaksp. Henry IV.
Proteogenes, historians note,
Liv'd there a burgess, scot and lot. Prior.

The chief point that has puzzled the freeholders, as well as those that pay scot and lot, for about these six months, is, whether they would rather be governed by a prince that is obliged by law to be good, or by one who, if he pleases, may plunder or imprison. Addison.
To SCOTCH. v. a. To cut with shallow incisions.
He was too hard for him directly: before Coriolani, he scotcht and notcht him like a carbonado. Shaksp. Coriolanus.
SCOTCH. n. f. [from the verb.] A slight cut; a shallow incision.
We'll beat 'em into bench-holes: I have yet room for fix scotches more. Shaksp. Ant. and Cleopatra.
Give him four scotches with a knife, and then put into his belly and these scotches sweet herbs. Walton's Angler.
SCOTCH Collops, or Scotch Collops. n. f. [from To scotch, or cut.]
Veal cut into small pieces.
SCOTCH Hoopers. n. f. A play in which boys hop over lines or scotches in the ground.
Children being indifferent to any thing they can do, dancing and scotch hoopers would be the same thing to them. Lacke.
SCOTOMY. n. f. [from scotom, Latin.] A dizziness or swimming in the head, causing dimness of sight, wherein external objects seem to turn round. Ains. and Bailey.
SCOTTERING. A provincial word which denotes, in Hercfordshire, a custom among the boys of burning a wad of pease-straw at the end of harvest. Bailey.
SCOTTEL. n. f. [from scot, Latin.] A sort of mop of clouts for sweeping an oven; a maukin. Ains. and Bailey.
SCOTUNDEL. n. f. [from scotunelo, Italian, a hider. Skinner.] A mean rascal; a low petty villain.
Now to be baff'd by a scoundrel,
An upstart scold, and a mungrel. Hudibras.
Scoundrels as these wretched Ombites be,
Canopus they exceed in luxury. Tate.
Go, if your ancient but ignoble blood
Has crept through scoundrels ever since the flood,
Go, and pretend your family is young;
Nor own your fathers have been fools so long. Pope.
To SCOUR. v. a. [from scure, Danish; schuere, Dutch.]
1. To rub hard with any thing rough, in order to clean the surface.
I were better to be eaten to death with a rust, than to be scour'd to nothing with perpetual motion. Shaksp. Hen. IV.
By dint of sword his crown he shall increase,
And scour his armour from the rust of peace. Dryden's En.
Part scold the rusty shields with seam, and part
New grind the blunted ax, and point the dart. Dryden.
Some blamed Mrs. Bull for grudging a quarter of a pound of soap and sand to scour the rooms. Arbutnot.
Poor Vadius, long with learned spleen devour'd,
Can taste no pleasure since his shield was scour'd. Pope.
2. To purge violently.
To cleanse; to bleach; to whiten; to blanch.
In some lakes the water is so nitrous, as, if foul clothes be put into it, it scours them of itself; and, if they stay, they moulder away. Bacon's Natural History.
A garden-worm should be well scour'd eight days in moss, before you fish with him. Walton's Angler.
Beneath the lamp her tawdry ribbons glare,
The new scour'd mantles, and the flatter air. Gay.
3. To remove by scouring.
Never came reformation in a flood
With such a heady current, scouring faults;
Nor ever hydra-headed wilfulness
So soon did lose his seat, and all at once,
As in this king. Shaksp. Henry V.
I will wear a garment all of blood,
And stain my favour in a bloody mask,
Which, wash'd away, shall scour my shame with it. Shak.
Then, in the clemency of upward air,
We'll scour our spots, and the dire thunder's scar. Dryden.
5. To range in order to catch or drive away something; to clear away.
The kings of Lacedemon having set out some galleys, under the charge of one of their nephews, to scour the sea of the pyrates, they met us. Sidney.
Divers are kept continually to scour these seas, infested greatly by pirates. Sandys.
If with thy guards thou scour'st the streets by night,
And do'st in murders, rapes, and spoils delight,
Please not thyself the flatt'ring crowd to hear,
'Tis fulsome stuff. Dryden's Pers.
6. To pass swiftly over.
Sometimes
He scours the right hand coast, sometimes the left. Milton.
Not half the number in their seats are found,
But men and steeds lie growling on the ground;
The points of spears are stuck within the shield,
The steeds without their riders scour the field,
The knights unhors'd. Dryden.

When Ajax strives some rock's vast weight to throw,
The line too labours, and the words move slow;
Not so when swift Camilla scours the plain,
Flies o'er th' unbending corn, and scims along the main. Pope's Essay on Criticism.
To SCOUR. v. n.
1. To perform the office of cleaning domestick utensils.
I keep his house, and was to wring, brow, bake, scour, dress meat, and make the beds. Shaksp. Lear.
2. To clean.
Warm water is softer than cold; for it scours better. Bac.
3. To be purged or lax.
Some apothecaries, upon stamping colicoquintida, have been put into a great scouring by the vapour only. Bacon.
Convulsion and scouring, they say, do often cause one another. Graunt's Bills of Mortality.
If you turn sheep into wheat or rye to feed, let it not be too rank, lest it make them scour. Mortimer's Husbandry.
4. To rove; to range.
Barbarossa, thus scouring along the coast of Italy, struck an exceeding terror into the minds of the citizens of Rome. Knoll.
5. To run here and there.
The enemy's drum is heard, and fearful scouring Doth choke the air with dust. Shak. Timon.
6. To run with great eagerness and swiftness; to scamper.
She from him fled with all her pow'r,
Who after her as hastily 'gan to scour. Fairy Queen.
I saw men scour on their way: I ey'd them
Even to their ships. Shaksp. Winter's Tale.
Word was brought him, in the middle of his schemes, that his house was robbed; and so away he scours to learn the truth. L'Estrange.
If they be men of fraud, they'll scour off themselves, and leave those that trust them to pay the reckoning. L'Estrange.
So four fierce couriers, starting to the race,
Scour through the plain, and lengthen ev'ry pace;
Nor reins, nor curbs, nor threatening cries they fear,
But force along the trembling charioteer. Dryden.
As soon as any foreign object presses upon the sense, those spirits, which are posted upon the out-guards, immediately take the alarm, and scour off to the brain, which is the head quarters. Collier.
Swift at her call her husband scour'd away,
To wreak his hunger on the destin'd prey. Pope.
SCOURER. n. f. [from scour.]
1. One that cleans by rubbing.
2. A purge.
3. One who runs swiftly.
SCOURGE. n. f. [from scurge, French; scoreggia, Italian; corri-gio, Latin.]
1. A whip; a lash; an instrument of discipline.
When he had made a scourge of small cords, he drove them all out of the temple. Jo. ii. 15.
The scourge
Inexorable, and the torturing hour,
Calls us to penance. Milton.
2. A punishment; a vindictive affliction.
What scourge for perjury
Can this dark monarchy afford false Clarence? Shaksp. Lear.
See what a scourge is laid upon your hate,
That heav'n finds means to kill your joys with love. Shak.
Famine and plague are sent as scourges for amendment. 2 Esd.
3. One that afflicts, harasses, or destroys. Thus Attila was called flagellum Dei.
Is this the scourge of France?
Is this the Talbot so much fear'd abroad,
That with his name the mothers still their babes? Sh. H.VI.
Such conquerors are not the favourites, but scourges of God,
the instruments of that vengeance. Atterbury's Sermons.
In all these trials I have born a part;
I was myself the scourge that caus'd the smart. Pope.
Immortal Jove,
Let kings no more with gentle mercy sway,
Or bless a people willing to obey,
But crush the nations with an iron rod,
And every monarch be the scourge of God. Pope.
3. A whip for a top.
If they had a top, the scourge stick and leather strap should be left to their own making. Lacke.
To SCOURGE. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To lash with a whip; to whip.
The gods are just, and of our pleasant vices
Make instruments to scourge us. Shaksp. King Lear.
Others had trial of cruel mockings and scourgings. Hebr.
Is it lawful for you to scourge a Roman, and uncondemned?
He scour'd with many a stroke the indignant waves. Milton's Paradise Lost.
When a professor of any religion is set up to be laughed at, this cannot help us to judge of the truth of his faith, any better than if he were scourged. Watts.

2. To

SCR

2. To punish; to chastise; to chasten; to castigate with any punishment or affliction.
Seeing that thou hast been scourged from heaven, declare the mighty power of God. 2 Mac. iii. 34.
He doth scourge, and hath mercy. Tob. iii. 2.
He will scourge us for our iniquities, and will have mercy again. Tob. xiii. 5.
SCOURGER. n. f. [from scourge.] One that scourges; a punisher or chastiser.
TO SCOURSE. v. a. To exchange one thing for another; to swap. Ainsw. It seems a corruption of scors, Ital. exchange; and hence a horse scourser.
SCOUT. n. f. [escout, Fr. from escouter; auscultare, Lat. to listen; scelta, Italian.] One who is sent privily to observe the motions of the enemy.
Are not the speedy scouts return'd again,
That dogg'd the mighty army of the dauphin? Shaksp.
As when a scout,
Through dark and desert ways with peril gone
All night, at last, by break of cheerful dawn, Obtains the brow of some high-climbing hill. Milton.
This great vessel may have lesser cabins, wherein scouts may be lodged for the taking of observations. Wilkins.
The scouts to several parts divide their way,
To learn the natives names, their towns, explore The coasts. Dryden's Æn.
TO SCOUT. v. n. [from the noun.] To go out in order to observe the motions of an enemy privily.
Oft on the bordering deep
Encamp their legions; or with obscure wing
Scout far and wide into the realm of night, Scorning surprize. Milton.
As a hunted panther casts about
Her glaring eyes, and pricks her list'ning ears to scout,
So she, to shun his toils, her cares employ'd.
Command a party out, Dryden.
With a strict charge not to engage, but scout.
TO SCOWL. v. n. [Crylan, to frown; Saxon; steela sig, to look four, Iländick.] To frown; to pout; to look angry, sour, or fullen.
Miso, having now her authority increased, came with scowling eyes to deliver a flattering good-morrow to the ladies. Sidney.
With bent louting brows, as she would threat,
She scowl'd and frowned with froward countenance. F. & J.
Even so, or with much more contempt, mens eyes
Did scowl on Richard. Shakspere's Richard II.
Not a courtier,
Although they wear their faces to the bent
Of the king's look, but hath a heart that is Glad at the thing they scowl at. Shaksp. Cymbeline.
The dusky clouds o'er'spread
Heav'n's cheerful face, the low'ring element
Scowls o'er the darken'd landscape snow or show'r. Milton.
Fly, fly, prophane fogs! far hence fly away,
With your dull influence; it is for you
To sit and scowl upon night's heavy brow. Crashaw.
In rueful gaze
The cattle stand, and on the scowling heavens Cast a deploring eye. Thomson's Summer.
SCOWL. n. f. [from the verb.] Look of fullenness or discontent; gloom.
I've seen the morning's lovely ray
Hover o'er the new-born day,
With rosy wings so richly bright,
As if he scorn'd to think of night;
When a ruddy storm, whose scowl
Made heaven's radiant face look foul,
Call'd for an untimely night,
To blot the newly-blossom'd light. Crashaw.
SCOWLINGLY. adv. [from scowl.] With a frowning and fullen look.
TO SCRA'BBLE. v. n. [krabbelen, scrabblen, to scrape or scratch, Dutch.] To paw with the hands.
He feigned himself mad in their hands, and scrabbled on the doors of the gate. Sa. xxi. 13.
SCRAG. n. f. [scraghe, Dutch.] Any thing thin or lean.
SCRAGGED. adj. [This seems corrupted from cragged.] Rough; uneven; full of protuberances or asperities.
Is there then any physical deformity in the fabrick of a human body, because our imagination can strip it of its muscles and skin, and shew us the scraged and knotty backbone? Bentley's Sermons.
SCRAGGEDNESS. n. f. [from scraged.]
SCRAGGINES. n. f. [from scraggy.]
1. Leanness; marcour.
2. Unevenness; roughness; ruggedness.
SCRAGGY. n. f. [from scrag.]
1. Lean; marcid; thin
Such a constitution is easily known by the body being lean, warm, hairy, scraggy, and dry, without a disease. Arbutnot.
2. [Corrupted from craggy.] Rough; rugged; uneven.

SCR

- From a scraggy rock, whose prominence
Half overhades the ocean, hardy men,
Fearless of rending winds and dashing waves,
Cut scampire. Phillip.
TO SCRA'MBLE. v. n. [The same with scrabble; scravellen, Dutch.]
1. To catch at any thing eagerly and tumultuously with the hands; to catch with halfe preventive of another; to contend tumultuously which shall catch any thing.
England now is left
To tug and scramble, and to part by th' teeth
The unow'd interest of proud swelling state. Shakspere.
Of other care they little reck'ning make,
Than how to scramble at the shearer's feast,
And shove away the worthy bidden guest. Milton.
It is not to be supposed, that, when such a tree was shaking,
There would be no scrabbling for the fruit. Stillingfleet.
They must have scrumbled with the wild beasts for crabs and nuts. Ray on the Creation.
2. To climb by the help of the hands; as, he scrumbled up that rock.
SCRA'MBLER. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. Eager contend for something, in which one endeavours to get it before another.
As they were in the middle of their gambols, some body threw a handful of apples among them, that let them presently together by the ears upon the scramble. L'Estrange.
Because the desire of money is constantly almost every where the same, its vent varies very little, but as its greater scarcity enhances its price and increases the scramble. Locke.
2. Act of climbing by the help of the hands.
SCRA'MBLER. n. f. [from scramble.]
1. One that scrambles.
All the little scrabblers after fame fall upon him. Addison.
2. One that climbs by help of the hands.
TO SCRANCH. v. a. [scrantzer, Dutch.] To grind somewhat crackling between the teeth. The Scots retain it.
SCRA'NNEL. adj. [Of this word I know not the etymology, nor any other example.] Vile; worthless. Perhaps grating by the sound.
When they lift, their lean and flashy songs
Grate on their scrannel pipes of wretched straw. Milton.
SCRAP. n. f. [from scrape, a thing scraped or rubbed off.]
1. A small particle; a little piece; a fragment.
It is an unaccountable vanity to spend all our time raking into the scraps and imperfect remains of former ages, and neglecting the clearer notices of our own. Glanv.
Trencher esquires spend their time in hopping from one great man's table to another's, only to pick up scraps and intelligence. L'Estrange.
Languages are to be learned only by reading and talking, and not by scraps of authors got by heart. Locke.
No rag, no scrap, of all the beau, or wit,
That once so flutter'd, and that once so writ. Pope.
I can never have too many of your letters: I am angry at every scrap of paper lost. Pope.
2. Crumb; small particles of meat left at the table.
The contract you pretend with that base wretch,
One bred of alms, and foster'd with cold dishes,
With scraps o' th' court, is no contract. Shak. Cymbeline.
The attendants puff a court up beyond her bounds, for their own scraps and advantage. Bacon.
On bones, on scraps of dogs let me be fed,
My limbs uncover'd, and expos'd my head. Grave.
To bleakst colds.
What has he else to bait his traps,
Or bring his vermin in, but scraps?
The offals of a church distress,
A hungry vicarage. Swift.
3. A small piece of paper. This is properly scrip.
Pregnant with thousands fits the scrip unseen,
And silent sells a king, or buys a queen. Pope.
TO SCRAPE. v. a. [scrapen, Saxon; scraperen, Dutch; scraper, Erse; craven, Welsh.]
1. To deprive of the surface by the light action of a sharp instrument, used with the edge almost perpendicular.
These hard woods are more properly scraped than planed. Mar.
2. To take away by scraping; to craze.
They shall destroy the walls, and I will scrape her dust, and make her like the top of a rock. Ezek. xxvi. 4.
Bread for a toast lay on the coals; and, if toasted quite through, scrape off the burnt side, and serve it up. Swift.
3. To act upon any surface with a harsh noise.
The chiming clocks to dinner call;
A hundred footsteps scrape the marble hall. Pope.
4. To gather by great efforts, or penurious or trifling diligence.
Let the government be ruined by his avarice, if, by the same avarice, he can scrape together so much as to make his peace. South's Sermon.
Unhappy those who hunt for a party, and scrape together out of every author all those things only which favour their own tenets. Watts.
5. To

SCR

5. To scrape acquaintance. A low phrase. To curry favour, or insinuate into one's familiarity.
TO SCRAPE. v. n.
1. To make a harsh noise.
2. To play ill on a fiddle.
3. To make an awkward bow. Ainsworth.
SCRAPE. n. f. [skrap, Swedish.] Difficulty; perplexity; distress. This is a low word.
SCRAPER. n. f. [from scrape.]
1. Instrument with which any thing is scraped.
Never clean your shoes on the scraper, but in the entry, and the scraper will last the longer. Swift.
2. A miser; a man intent on getting money; a scrapepenny.
Be thrifty, but not covetous; therefore give Thy need, thine honour, and thy friend his due:
Never was scraper brave man. Get to live,
Then live, and use it; else it is not true
That thou hast gotten: surely use alone
Makes money not a contemptible stone. Herbert.
3. A vile fiddler.
Out! ye fempiternal scrappers. Cowley.
Have wild boars or dolphins the least emotion at the most elaborate strains of your modern scrappers, all which have been tamed and humanized by ancient musicians? Arbutnot.
SCRAT. n. f. [scruta, Saxon.] An hermaphrodite. Skinner and Juvius.
TO SCRATCH. v. a. [kratzen, Dutch.]
1. To tear or mark with slight incisions ragged and uneven.
The lab'ring swain
Scratch'd with a rake a furrow for his grain,
And cover'd with his hand the shallow seed again. Dryden.
A fort of small sand-coloured stones, so hard as to scratch glass. Grew's Musaeum.
2. To tear with the nails.
How can I tell but that his talons may Yet scratch my son, or rend his tender hand. Fa. Queen.
I should have scratched out your unseeing eyes,
To make my master out of love with thee. Shakspere.
I had rather hear my dog bark at a crow, than a man swear he loves me.
—Keep your ladyship still in that mind! so some gentleman or other shall 'scape a predestinate scratch face.
—Scratching could not make it worse, an 'twere such a face as yours were. Shak. Much Ado about Nothing.
Scots are like witches: do but whet your pen,
Scratch 'till the blood come, they'll not hurt you then. Cleov.
To wish that there were nothing but such dull tame things in the world, that will neither bite nor scratch, is as childless as to wish there were no fire in nature. More.
Unhand me, or I'll scratch your face;
Let go, for shame. Dryden.
3. To wound slightly.
4. To hurt slightly with any thing pointed or keen.
Daphne, roaming through a thorny wood,
Scratching her legs, that one shall swear she bleeds. Shaksp.
5. To rub with the nails.
Francis Cornfield did scratch his elbow, when he had sweetly invented to signify his name St. Francis, with a friary cowl in a corn field. Candem.
Other mechanical helps Arctæus uses to procure sleep, particularly the scratching of the temples and the ears. Arbutnot.
Be mindful, when invention fails,
To scratch your head, and bite your nails. Swift.
6. To write or draw awkwardly.
If any of their labourers can scratch out a pamphlet, they desire no wit, style, or argument. Swift.
SCRATCH. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. An incision ragged and shallow.
The coarse file cuts deep, and makes deep scratches in the work; and before you can take out those deep scratches with your finer cut files, those places where the filings were when your work was forged, may become dents to your hammer dents.
The smaller the particles of those substances are, the smaller will be the scratches, by which they continually fret and wear away the glass until it be polished; but be they never so small, they can wear away the glass no otherwise than by grating and scratching it, and breaking the protuberances: and therefore polish it no otherwise than by bringing its roughness to a very fine grain, so that the scratches and frettings of the surface become too small to become visible. Newton's Opt.
2. Laceration with the nails.
These nails with scratches shall deform my breast,
Left by my look or colour be express'd
The mark of aught high-born, or ever better dress'd. Prior.
3. A light wound.
The valiant beast turning on her with open jaws, she gave him such a thrust through his breast, that all the lion could do was with his open paw to tear off the mantle and sleeve of Zelmune, with a little scratch rather than a wound. Sidney.
Heav'n forbid a shallow scratch should drive
The prince of Wales from such a field as this. Shak. H. IV.

SCR

- SCRATCHER. n. f. [from scratch.] He that scratches.
SCRATCHES. n. f. Cracked ulcers or scabs in a horse's foot. Ainsw.
SCRATCHINGLY. adv. [from scratching.] With the action of scratching.
Making him turn close to the ground, like a cat, when scratching the wheels about after a mouse. Sidney.
SCRAW. n. f. [Irish and Erse.] Surface or scurf.
Neither should that odious custom be allowed of cutting scraws, which is flaying off the green surface of the ground to cover their cabins, or make up their ditches. Swift.
TO SCRAWL. v. a. [I suppose to be corrupted from scrabble.]
1. To draw or mark irregularly or clumsily.
2. To write unskillfully and inelegantly.
Peruse my leaves through ev'ry part,
And think thou see'st its owner's heart,
Scrav'd o'er with trifles thus, and quite
As hard, as senseless, and as light. Swift.
Think not your verses sterling,
Though with a golden pen you scrawl,
And scribble in a Perlin. Swift.
3. [From crawl.] To creep like a reptile.
SCRAWL. n. f. [from the verb.] Unskillful and inelegant writing.
The left hand will make such a scrawl, that it will not be legible. Arbutnot. Hist. of John Bull.
Mr. Wycherly, hearing from me how welcome his letters would be, wrote to you, in which I inserted my scrawl. Pope.
SCRAWLER. n. f. [from scrawl.] A clumsy and inelegant writer.
SCRAY. n. f. A bird called a sea-swallow. Ainsw. and Bailey.
SCRE'ABLE. adj. [scrabilis, Latin.] That which may be spit out. Bailey.
TO SCREAM. v. n. [Properly creak, or strick, from strige, Dan.] To make a shrill or hoarse noise. Bailey.
TO SCREAM. v. n. [Dyeman, Saxon.]
1. To cry out shrilly, as in terror or agony.
Soon a whirlwind rose around,
And from afar he heard a screaming sound,
As of a dame distress'd, who cry'd for aid,
And fill'd with loud laments the secret shade. Dryden.
The fearful matrons raise a screaming cry,
Old feeble men with fainter groans reply;
A jarring sound results, and mingles in the sky. Dryden.
If chance a mouse creeps in her light,
Can finely counterfeit a fright;
So sweetly screech, if it comes near her,
She ravishes all hearts to hear her. Swift.
2. To cry shrilly.
I heard the owl screech, and the crickets cry. Shaksp.
SCREAM. n. f. [from the verb.] A shrill quick loud cry of terror or pain.
Our chimneys were blown down; and, as they say, Lamentings heard i' th' air, strange screech of death. Shak.
Then flash'd the livid lightning from her eyes
And screech of horror rend th' affrighted skies. Pope.
TO SCREECH. v. n. [skrakia, to cry, Iländick.]
1. To cry out as in terror or anguish.
Screeching is an appetite of expelling that which suddenly strikes the spirits. Bacon.
2. To cry as a night owl: thence called a screechowl.
SCREECH. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. Cry of horror and anguish.
2. Harsh horrid cry.
The birds obscene, that nightly flock'd to taste,
With hollow screech fled from the dire repast;
And ravenous dogs, allur'd by scented blood,
And starving wolves, ran howling to the wood. Pope.
SCREECHOWL. n. f. [screech and owl.] An owl that hoots in the night, and whose voice is supposed to betoken danger, misery, or death.
Deep night,
The time of night when Troy was set on fire,
The time when *screech*owls cry, and bandogs howl. Shaksp.
Let him, that will a screechowl ay be call'd,
Go into Troy, and lay there, Hector's dead. Shakspere.
By the screechowl's dismal note,
By the black night raven's throat,
I charge thee, Hob.
Jupiter, though he had hung the balance, and given it a jog to weigh down Turnus, sent the screechowl to discourage him. Drayton.
O, that screechowl at the window! we shall be pursued immediately. Dryden's Don Sebastian.
Sooner shall *screech*owls bask in sunny day,
Than I forget my shepherd's wonted love. Gay.
SCREEN. n. f. [ecran, French.]
1. Any thing that affords shelter or concealment.
Now near enough: your leavy screens throw down,
And show like those you are. Shaksp. Macbeth.
Some ambitious men seem as screens to princes in matters of danger and envy. Bacon.

Our people, who transport themselves, are settled in those interjacent tracts, as a screen against the insults of the favages. Swift.

My juniors by a year,
Who wisely thought my age a screen,
When death approach'd, to stand between,
The screen remov'd, their hearts are trembling. Swift.
2. Any thing used to exclude cold or light.
When there is a screen between the candle and the eye, yet the light passeth to the paper whereon one writeth. Bacon.
One speaks the glory of the British queen,
And one describes a charming Indian screen. Pope.
Ladies make their old cloaths into patchwork for screens and stools. Swift.

3. A riddle to sift land.
To SCREEN. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To shelter; to conceal; to hide.

Back'd with a ridge of hills,
That screen'd the fruits of th' earth and seats of men,
From cold Septentrion blasts. Milt. Par. Regain'd.
A good magistrate's retinue of state screens him from the dangers, which he is to incur for the sake of it. Austenbury.
This gentle deed shall fairly be set foremost,
To screen the wild escapes of lawless passion. Rowe.

2. [Corno crevi, Latin.] To sift; to riddle.
Let the cafes be filled with natural earth, taken the first half spit, from just under the turf of the best pasture ground, mixed with one part of very mellow soil screened. Evelyn.
SCREW. n. f. [serueus, Dutch; serueu, French.] One of the mechanical powers, which is defined a right cylinder cut into a furrowed spiral: of this there are two kinds, the male and female; the former being cut convex, so that its threads rise outwards; but the latter channelled on its concave side, so as to receive the former. Quincy.
The serew is a kind of wedge, that is multiplied or continued by a helical revolution about a cylinder, receiving its motion not from any stroak, but from a vectis at one end of it. Wilkins's Math. Magick.

After your apples are ground, commit them to the serew press, which is the best.

To SCREW. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To turn by a serew.

If we should fail.—
—We fail!

But serew your courage to the sticking place,
And we'll not fail. Shakesp. Macbeth.
Some, when the press by utmost vigour serew'd,
Has drain'd the pulposus mass, regale their swine
With the dry refuse. Phillips.

2. To fasten with a serew.
To serew your lock on the door, make wide holes, big enough to receive the shank of the serew. Maxim.

3. To deform by contortions.
Sometimes a violent laughter serew'd his face,
And sometimes ready tears dropp'd down apace. Cowley.
With serew'd face, and doleful whine, they ply you with senseless harangues against human inventions on the one hand, and loud outcries for a further reformation on the other. South.

He serew'd his face into a harden'd smile,
And said Sebastian knew to govern slaves. Dryden.
Let others serew their hypocritical face,
She shews her grief in a sincerer place. Swift.

4. To force; to bring by violence.
He resolv'd to govern by subaltern ministers, who serew'd up the pins of power too high. Howell's Vocal Force.

No discourse can be administered, but they will try to turn the tide, and draw it all into their own channel; or they will serew in here and there some intimations of what they said or did. Government of the Tongue.

The rents of land in Ireland, since they have been so enormously raised and serew'd up, may be computed to be about two millions. Swift.

5. To squeeze; to press.
6. To oppress by extortion.

Our country landlords, by unmeasurable serewing and racking their tenants, have already reduced the miserable people to a worse condition than the peasants in France. Swift.

SCREW TREE. n. f. [sera, Latin.] A plant of the East and West Indies.

To SCRIBBLE. v. a. [scribo, scribillo, Latin.]
1. To fill with artless or worthless writing.

How gird the sphere
With centrick and eccentric, scribble'd o'er Cycle and epicycle, orb in orb. Milton's Paradise Lost.

2. To write without use or elegance.
To SCRIBBLE. v. n. To write without care or beauty.

If a man should affirm, that an ape casually meeting with pen, ink and paper, and falling to scribble, did happen to write exactly the Leviathan of Hobbes, would an atheist believe such a story? And yet he can easily digest things as incredible as that. Bentley.

If Mævius scribble in Apollo's spite,
There are, who judge still worse than he can write. Pope.
Leave flattery to fulsome dedicators,
Whom, when they praise, the world believes no more Than when they promise to give scribbling o'er. Pope.

SCRIBBLE. n. f. [from the verb.] Worthless writing.
By solemnly endeavouring to countenance my conjectures, I might be thought dogmatical in a hasty scribble. Boyle.

If it struck the present taste, it was soon transferred into the plays and current scribbles of the week, and became an addition to our language. Swift.

SCRIBBLER. n. f. [from scribble.] A petty author; a writer without worth.

The most copious writers are the arrantest scribblers, and in so much talking the tongue runs before the wit. L'Estrange.
The actors represent such things as they are capable, by which they and the scribbler may get their living. Dryden.

The scribbler, pinch'd with hunger, writes to dine,
And to your genius must conform his line. Grave.
To affirm he had cause to apprehend the same treatment with his father, is an improbable scandal flung upon the nation by a few bigotted French scribblers. Swift.

No body was concerned or surpris'd, if this or that scribbler was proved a dunce. Letter to Pope's Danciad.

SCRIBE. n. f. [scribo, French; scriba, Latin.]
1. A writer.

Hearts, tongues, figures, scribes, bards, poets, cannot Think, speak, cast, write, sing, number, ho!
His love to Antony. Shak. Ant. and Cleopatra.

My master, being the scribe to himself, should write the letter. Shakesp. Hamlet.
A certain scribe came and said, master, I will follow thee. Mat. viii. 19.

We are not to wonder, if he thinks not fit to make any perfect and unerring scribes. Grew's Ceph.

The following letter comes from some notable young female scribe. Spenser.

2. A public notary.
SCRIMER. n. f. [serimeur, French.] A gladiator; a fencing master. Not in use.

The scriimers of their nation,
He swore, had neither motion, guard, nor eye,
If you oppos'd them. Shakesp. Hamlet.

SCRINE. n. f. [serinum, Latin.] A place in which writings or curiosities are deposited.

Help then, O holy virgin,
Thy weaker novice to perform thy will;
Lay forth, out of thine everlasting scrine,
The antique rolls which there lie hidden still. Fa. Quem.

SCRIP. n. f. [serappa, Islandick.]
1. A small bag; a satchel.

Come, shepherd, let us make an honourable retreat; though not with bag and baggage, yet with scrip and scrippage. Shak. As You Like It.

He'd in requital ope his leathern scrip,
And shew me similes of a thousand names,
Telling their strange and vigorous faculties. Milton.

2. [From scriptio, Latin, as it seems.] A schedule; a small writing.

Call them generally man by man, according to the scrip. Shakesp. Midsummer Night's Dream.

Bills of exchange cannot pay our debts abroad, 'till scrips of paper can be made current coin. Locke.

SCRIPTAGE. n. f. [from scrip.] That which is contained in a scrip. Ditt.

SCRIPTORY. adj. [scriptorius, Latin.] Written; not orally delivered.

SCRIPTURAL. adj. [from scriptura.] Contained in the Bible; biblical.

By creatures, the scriptural use of that word determines it sometimes to men. Atterbury.

SCRIPTURE. n. f. [scriptura, Latin.]
1. Writing.

It is not only remembered in many scriptures, but famous for the death and overthrow of Crassus. Rabich.

2. Sacred writing; the Bible.
With us there is never any time bestowed in divine service, without the reading of a great part of the holy scriptures, which we account a thing most necessary.

The devil can cite scripture for his purpose:
An evil soul producing holy witness, Shakesp. As You Like It.
Is like a villain with a smiling cheek.
There is not any action which a man ought to do, or to forbear, but the scripture will give him a clear precept, or prohibition for it. South.

Forbear any discourse of other spirits, 'till his reading the scripture history put him upon that enquiry. Locke.
Scripture proof was never the talent of these men, and 'tis no wonder they are foiled. Atterbury.

Why are scripture maxims put upon us, without taking notice of scripture examples, that lie cross 'em? Atterbury.
The author of nature and the scriptures has expressly enjoined, that he who will not work, shall not eat. Seed's Sermon.

SCRIVENER.

SCRIVENER. n. f. [scrivano, Latin.]
1. One who draws contracts.

We'll pass the business privately and well:
Send for your daughter by your servant here,
My boy shall fetch the scrivener. Shakesp. Tam. of the Shrew.

2. One whose business is to place money at interest.
How happy in his low degree,
Who leads a quiet country life,
And from the griping scrivener free? Dryden's Horace.

I am reduced to beg and borrow from scriveners and usurers, that suck the heart and blood. Arbutnot Hist. of John Bull.

SCROFULA. n. f. [from serfus, Latin, a sow, as serfus.]
A depravation of the humours of the body, which breaks out in sores commonly called the king's evil.

If matter in the milk dispose to coagulation, it produces a serfula. Wise man of Tuncours.

SCROFULOUS. adj. [from serfula.] Diseased with the scrofula. Scrofulous persons can never be duly nourished; for such as have tumours in the parotides often have them in the pancreas and mesentery. Arbutnot on Aliments.

English consumptions generally proceed from a serfulous disposition. Arbutnot.

What would become of the race of men in the next age, if we had nothing to trust to, beside the serfulous consumptive production furnished by our men of wit and pleasure? Swift.

SCROLL. n. f. [Supposed by Mirabeau to be corrupted from roll; by Skinner derived from serouelle, a shrimp given by the heralds: whence parchment, wrapped up into a resembling form, has the same name. It may be observed, that a gaoler's list of prisoners is serou.] A writing wrapped up.

His chamber all was hang'd about with rolls,
And old records from ancient times deriv'd;
Some made in books, some in long parchment scrolls,
That were all worm-eaten, and full of canker holes. Spens.

Accept this scroll,
Which, in right of Richard Plantagenet,
We do exhibit to your majesty. Shakesp. H. VI.

See't thou this letter, take it up,
And give the king this fatal plotted scroll. Shakesp. Tit. Andr.

We'll add a royal number to the dead,
Gracing the scroll, that tells of this war's loss,
With slaughter coupled to the name of kings. Shakesp. Henry V.

Here is the scroll of every man's name, which is thought fit through all Athens to play in our interlude. Shakesp. A Midsummer Night's Dream.

A Numidian priest, bellowing out certain superstitious charms, cast divers scrolls of paper on each side the way, wherein he cursed and banned the Christians. Knotles.

He drew forth a scroll of parchment, and delivered it to our foremost man. Bacon.

Such follow him, as shall be register'd;
Part good, part bad: of bad the longer scroll. Milton.

With this epistolary scroll,
Receive the partner of my immort soul.
Yet if he wills, may change or spoil the whole;
May take you' beauteous, mystick, stary roll,
And burn it, like an useless parchment scroll. Prior.

SCROYLE. n. f. [This word I remember only in Shakesp. As You Like It: it seems derived from serouelle, French, a scrofulous swelling; as he calls a mean fellow a scab from his itch, or a patch from his raggedness.] A mean fellow; a rascal; a wretch.

The scroyles of Angiers flout you kings,
And stand securely on their battlements,
As in a theatre. Shakesp. King John.

To SCRUB. v. a. [scrabben, Dutch.] To rub hard with something coarse and rough.

Such wrinkles as a skilful hand would draw
For an old grandam ape, when, with a grace,
She sits at squat, and scrubs her leathern face. Dryden.

She never would lay aside the use of brooms and scrubbing brushes. Arbutnot.

Now Moll had whirl'd her mop with dextrous airs, Prepar'd to scrub the entry and the stairs. Swift.

SCRUB. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. A mean fellow, either as he is supposed to scrub himself for the itch, or as he is employed in the mean offices of scouring away dirt.

2. Any thing mean or despicable.
With a dozen large vessels my vault shall be stor'd;
No little scrub joint shall come on my board. Swift.

3. A worn out broom.
SCRUBBED. adj. [scrubbet, Danish.] Mean; vile; worthless; dirty; sorry.

I gave it to a youth,
A kind of boy, a little scrubbed boy,
No higher than thyself. Shak. Merchant of Venice.

The scrubbiest cur in all the pack,
Can set the mastiff on your back.
The scene a wood, produc'd no more Than a few scrubby trees before. Swift.

SCRUFF. n. f. The same, I suppose, with scruf, by a metaphysical usual in pronunciation.

SCRUPLE. n. f. [scrupule, French; scrupulus, Latin.]
1. Doubt; difficulty of determination; perplexity: generally about minute things.

Macduff, this noble passion,
Child of integrity, hath from my soul
Wip'd the black scruples, reconcil'd my thoughts
To your good truth. Shakesp. Macbeth.

Nothing did more fill foreign nations with admiration of his succession, than the content of all estates of England for the receiving of the king without the least scruple, pause, or question. Bacon.

For the matter of your confession, let it be severe and serious; but yet so as it may be without any inordinate anxiety; and unnecessary scruples, which only intangle the soul. Taylor.

Men make no scruple to conclude, that those propositions, of whose knowledge they can find in themselves no original, were certainly the impress of God and nature upon their minds, and not taught them by any one else. Locke.

2. Twenty grains; the third part of a dram.
Milk one ounce, oil of vitriol a scruple, doth coagulate; the milk at the bottom, where the vitriol goeth. Bacon.

3. Proverbially, any small quantity.
Nature never lends
The smallest scruple of her excellence,
But, like a thrifty goddess, she determines Herself the glory of a creditor. Shakesp. Meas. for Meas.

To SCRUPLE. v. n. [from the noun.] To doubt; to hesitate.
He scrupled not to eat

Against his better knowledge; not deceiv'd,
But fondly overcome with female charms. Milt. Par. Lost.

SCRUPLER. n. f. [from scruple.] A doubter; one who has scruples.

The scruples which many publick ministers would make of the worthiness of parents to have their children baptised, forced such questioned parents, who did not believe the necessity of having their children baptised by such scruplers, to carry their children unto other ministers. Graunt's Bills of Mortality.

SCRUPULOSITY. n. f. [from scrupulus.]
1. Doubt; minute and nice doubtfulness.

Amongst ourselves there was some question mov'd, by reason of a few mens scrupulosity touching certain things. Hooker.

The one sort they warn'd to take heed, that scrupulosity did not make them rigorous in giving unadvised sentence against their brethren which were free; the other, that they did not become scandalous, by abusing their liberty and freedom to the offence of their weak brethren, which were scrupulous. Hook.

So careful, even to scrupulosity, were they to keep their sabbath, that they must not only have a time to prepare them for that, but a further time also to prepare them for their very preparations. South.

2. Fear of acting in any manner; tenderness of conscience.
The first sacrilege is looked on with some horror; but when they have once made the breach, their scrupulosity soon retires. Decay of Piety.

SCRUPULOUS. adj. [scrupulosus, French; scrupulosus, Latin; from scruple.]
1. Nicely doubtful; hard to satisfy in determinations of conscience.

They warn'd them that they did not become scandalous, by abusing their liberty, to the offence of their weak brethren which were scrupulous. Hooker.

Some birds, inhabitants of the waters, whose blood is cold as fishes, and their flesh is so like in taste, that the scrupulous are allowed them on fish-days. Locke.

2. Given to objections; captious.
Equality of two domestick pow'rs Breeds scrupulous faction. Shakesp. Ant. and Cleopatra.

3. Nice; doubtful.
As the cause of a war ought to be just, so the justice of that cause ought to be evident; not obscure, not scrupulous. Bacon's Holy War.

4. Careful; vigilant; cautious.
I have been the more scrupulous and wary, in regard the inferences drawn from these observations are of some importance. Woodward.

SCRUPULOUSLY. adv. [from scrupulous.] Carefully; nicely; anxiously.

The duty consists not scrupulously in minutes and half hours. Taylor.

Henry V. manifestly derived his courage from his piety, and was scrupulously careful not to ascribe the success of it to himself. Addison's Freeholder.

SCRUPULOUSNESS. n. f. [from scrupulous.] The state of being scrupulous.

SCRUTABLE. adj. [from scrutator, Latin.] Discoverable by inquiry.

Shall we think God so scrutable, or ourselves so penetrating, that none of his secrets can escape us? Decay of Piety.

SCRUTATION. n. f. [scrutator, Latin.] Search; examination; inquiry.

SCRUTATOR. n. f. [scrutator, Fr. from scrutator, Lat.] Enquirer; searcher; examiner.

SEA

Some leviathan,
Haply flum'ring on the Norway foam,
The pilot of some small night-founder'd skiff
Deeming some island, oft as seamen tell,
With fixed anchor in his scaly rind,
Moors by his side under the lee, while night
Invests the sea. Milton
Small fragments of shells, broken by storms on some shores, are used for manuring of sea land. Woodward
They put to sea with a fleet of three hundred sail. Arbutnot
Sea racing dolphins are train'd for our motion, Moony tides swelling to roll us ashore. Dryden's Albion
But like a rock unmov'd, a rock, that braves
The raging tempest, and the rising waves,
Propp'd on himself he stands: his solid side
Wash off the sea weeds, and the founding tides. Dryden
The sea could not be much narrower than it is, without a great loss to the world. Bentley
So when the first bold vessel dar'd the sea,
High on the stern the Thracian rais'd his strain,
While Argo saw her kindred trees
Descend from Pelion to the main. Pope
2. A collection of water; a lake.
Jesus walking by the sea of Galilee, saw two brethren. Mat. iv. 18.
3. Proverbially for any large quantity.
That sea of blood which hath in Ireland been barbarously shed, is enough to drown in eternal infamy and misery the malicious author and instigator of its effusion. King Charles
4. Any thing rough and tempestuous.
To forrow abandon'd, but worse felt within,
And in a troubled sea of passion tost. Milton
5. Half seas over. Half drunk.
The whole magistracy was pretty well disguised before I gave 'em the slip: our friend the alderman was half seas over before the bonfire was out. Spectator
SEA is often used in composition, as will appear in the following examples.
SEABEAT. [sea and beat.] Dashed by the waves of the sea.
The sovereign of the seas he blames in vain,
That once seabest will to sea again. Spenser's Pastorals
Darkness cover'd o'er
The face of things: along the seabeat shore
Satiate we slept. Pope's Odyssey
SEABOAT. n. f. [sea and boat.] Vessel capable to bear the
sea.
Shipwrecks were occasioned by their ships being bad sea- boats, and themselves but indifferent seamen. Arbutnot
SEABORN. adj. [sea and born.] Born of the sea; produced by the sea.
Like Neptune and his seaborn niece, shall be
The shining glories of the land and sea. Waller
All these in order march, and marching sing
The warlike actions of their seaborn king. Dryden
SEABOY. n. f. [sea and boy.] Boy employed on shipboard.
Can't thou, O partial sleep, give thy repose
To the wet seaboy in an hour so rude,
And in the calmest and the stillest night
Deny it to a king? Shakespeare
SEABREACH. n. f. [sea and breach.] Irruption of the sea by breaking the banks.
To an impetuous woman, tempests and seabreaches are nothing. L'Estrange
SEABREEZE. n. f. [sea and breeze.] Wind blowing from the
sea.
Hedges, in most places, would be of great advantage to shelter the grass from the seabreeze. Mortimer
SEABUILT. adj. [sea and built.] Built for the sea.
Borne each by other in a distant line,
The seabuilt forts in dreadful order move. Dryden
SEACABBAGE. n. f. [searabbe, Latin.] Seacolewort. A plant.
It hath fleshy leaves like those of the cabbage. Miller
SEAHOLLY. n. f. [eryngium, Latin.] A plant.
The species are, seaholly, or eryngo. Common eryngo, &c. The roots of the first are candied, and sent to London for medicinal use, being the true eryngo.
SEACALF. n. f. [sea and calf.] The seal.
The seacalf, or seal, is so called from the noise he makes like a calf: his head comparatively not big, shaped rather like an otter's, with teeth like a dog's, and multachies like those of a cat: his body long, and all over hairy: his forefeet, with fingers clawed, but not divided, yet fit for going: his hinder feet, more properly fins, and fitter for swimming, as being an amphibious animal. The female gives suck, as the porpoise, and other viviparous fishes. Grew's Museum
SEACAP. n. f. [sea and cap.] Cap made to be worn on shipboard.
I know your favour well,
Though now you have no seacap on your head. Shakespeare SEACHART. n. f. [sea and chart.] Map on which only the coasts are delineated.

SEA

The situation of the parts of the earth are better learned by a map or seachart, than reading the description. Watts SEACOA'L. n. f. [sea and coal.] Coal, so called not because found in the sea, but because brought to London by sea; pit-coal.
We'll have a posset soon at the latter end of a seacoal
fire. Shakespeare
SEACOA'L lasts longer than charcoal.
This pulmonic indispotion of the air is very much heightened, where a great quantity of seacoal is burnt. Harv.
SEACOA'L. n. f. [sea and coal.] Shore; edge of the sea.
The venturesome mariner that way,
Learning his ship from those white rocks to save,
Which all along the fouthern seacoast lay,
For safety's sake that fame his seamark made,
And nam'd it Albion. Fairy Queen
Upon the seacoast are many parcels of land, that would pay well for the taking in. Mortimer's Husbandry
SEACOMPASS. n. f. [sea and compass.] The card and needle of mariners.
The needle in the seacompass still moving but to the north-point only, with moveer inmutus, notified the respective constancy of the gentleman to one only. Camden's Remains SEACOW. n. f. [sea and cow.] The manatee.
The seacow is a very bulky animal, of the cetaceous kind.
It grows to fifteen feet long, and to seven or eight in circumference: its head is like that of a hog, but longer, and more cylindrick: its eyes are small, and it has no external ears, but only two little apertures in the place of them; yet its sense of hearing is very quick. Its lips are thick, and it has two long tufts standing out. It has two fins, which stand forward on the breast like hands, whence the Spaniards first called it ma-natee. The female has two round breasts placed between the pectoral fins. The skin is very thick and hard, and not scaly, but hairy. This creature lives principally about the mouths of the large rivers in Africa, the East Indies, and America, and feeds upon vegetables. Its flesh is white like veal, and very well tasted. The lapis manati, which is of a fine clean white colour, and bony texture, is properly the os petriolum of this animal. This stone has been supposed to be a powerful amulet, but is now neglected. Hill's Mat. Med.
SEADOG. n. f. [sea and dog.] Perhaps the shark.
Pierce seadogs devour the mang'd friends. Rosterman
When, stung with hunger, the embroils the flood,
The seadog and the dolphin are her food. Pope's Odyssey
SEAFARER. n. f. [sea and fare.] A traveller by sea; a mariner.
They flitly refused to vail their bonnets by the fummions of those towns, which is reckoned intolerable contempt by the better enabled seafarers. Carew
A wandering merchant, he frequents the main,
Some mean seafarer in pursuit of gain;
Studious of freight, in naval trade well skill'd;
But dreads th' athletic labours of the field. Pope
SEAFARING. adj. [sea and fare.] Travelling by sea.
My wife fasten'd him unto a small spare masts
Such as seafaring men provide for storms. Shakespeare
It was death to divert the ships of seafaring people, against their will, to other uses than they were appointed. Arbutnot SEAFIGHT. n. f. [sea and fight.] Battle of ships; battle on the sea.
Seafights have been often fatal to the war; but this is when princes set up their rest upon the battles. Bacon
They were full of drink at the time of their seafights.
Wisehead's Surgery
If our sense of hearing were a thousand times quicker than it is, we should, in the quietest retirement, be less able to sleep than in the middle of a seafight. Locke
This fleet they recruited with two hundred sail, whereof they lost ninety-three in a seafight. Arbutnot on Cairns
SEAFOWL. n. f. [sea and fowl.] Birds that live at sea.
The bills of curlews, and many other seafowls, are very long, to enable them to hunt for the worms. Dr. Barham
A seafowl properly represents the passage of a deity over the seas. Broom's Notes to the Odyssey
A length of ocean and unbounded sky,
Which scarce the seafowl in a year o'er fly. Pope
SEAGIRT. adj. [sea and girt.] Girded or incircled by the
sea.
Neptune, besides the sway
Of every salt flood and each ebbing stream,
Took in by lot, 'twixt high and nether Jove, Imperial rule of all the seagirt isles. Milton
Telemachus, the blooming heir
Of seagirt Ithaca, demands my care:
'Tis mine to form his green unpractis'd years
In sage debates. Pope
SEAGULL. n. f. [sea and gull.] A water fowl.
Seagulls, when they flock together from the sea towards the shores, forebode rain and wind. Bacon's Nat. History Bittern,

SEA

Bittern, herons, and seagulls, are great enemies to fish.
Mortimer's Husbandry
SEAGREEN. adj. [sea and green.] Resembling the colour of the distant sea; cerulean.
White, red, yellow, blue, with their several mixtures, as green, scarlet, purple, and seagreen, come in only by the eyes. Locke
Upon his urn reclin'd,
His seagreen mantle waving in the wind,
The god appear'd. Pope
SEAGREEN. n. f. Saxifrage. A plant.
SEAGULL. n. f. A sea bird. Ansforth
SEAHEDGEHOG. n. f. [seas, hedge, and hog.] A kind of sea shell-fish.
The seahedgehog is inclosed in a round shell, fashioned as a loaf of bread, wrought and pinched, and guarded by an outer skin full of prickles, as the land urchin. Carew
SEAHOG. n. f. [sea and hog.] The porpus.
SEAHOLM. n. f. [sea and holm.] 1. A small uninhabited island.
2. Seaholly. A kind of sea weed.
Cornwall bringeth forth greater store of seaholm and samphire than any other county. Carew SEAHORSE. n. f. [sea and horse.] 1. The seahorse is a fish of a very singular form, as we see it dried, and of the needlefish kind. It is about four or five inches in length, and nearly half an inch in diameter in the broadest part. Its colour, as we see it dried, is a deep reddish brown; and its tail is turned round under the belly. It is found about the Mediterranean, and has been celebrated for medicinal virtues; but is at present wholly neglected. Hill's Materia Med.
2. The morie.
Part of a large tooth, round and tapering: a tuft of the morie, or waltrons, called by some the seahorse. Woodward
3. The medical and the poetical seahorse seem very different. By the seahorse Dryden means probably the hippopotamus.
By 'em
Seahorses, flound'ring in the slimy mud, Toss'd up their heads, and dash'd the ooze about 'em. Dry.
SEAMAD. n. f. [sea and maid.] Mermaid.
Certain fairs shot from their spheres,
To hear the seamaid's music. Shakespeare
SEAMAN. n. f. [sea and man.] 1. A sailor; a navigator; a mariner.
She, looking out,
Beholds the fleet, and hears the seamen shout. Dentham
Seamen, through dismal storms, are wont
To pass the oyster-breeding Hellepont. Evelyn
The whole poem was first written, and now sent you from a place where I have not so much as the converse of any sea- man. Dryden
Aeneas order'd
A stately tomb, whose top a trumpet bore,
A soldier's fauchion, and a seaman's oar;
Thus was his friend interr'd. Dryden
By undergoing the hazards of the sea, and the company of common seamen, you make it evident you will refuse no opportunity of rendering yourself useful. Dryden
Had they applied themselves to the increase of their strength by sea, they might have had the greatest fleet and the most sea- men of any state in Europe. Adams
2. Merman; the male of the mermaid.
Seals live at land and at sea, and porpoises have the warm blood and intrails of a hog, not to mention mermaids, or sea- men. Locke
SEAMARK. n. f. [sea and mark.] Point or conspicuous place distinguished at sea, and serving the mariners as directions of their course.
Those white rocks,
Which all along the fouthern seacoast lay,
Threat'ning unheedy wreck and rash decay,
For safety's sake his seamark made,
And nam'd it Albion. Fairy Queen
Though you do see me weapon'd,
Here is my journey's end, here is my butt,
The very seamark of my utmost sail. Shakespeare, Othello
They were executed at divers places upon the seacoast, for seamarks or lighthouses, to teach Perkins's people to avoid the coast. Bacon's Henry VII.
They are remembered with a brand of infamy fixt upon them, and set as seamarks for those who observe them to avoid. Dryden
The fault of others sway,
He set as seamarks for himself to shun. Dryden
SEAMOW. n. f. [sea and mew.] A fowl that frequents the
sea.
An island salt and bare,
The haunt of seals, and orcks, and seamow clang. Milton
The chough, the seamow, the loquacious crow, Scream aloft. Pope's Odyssey
SEAMONSTER. n. f. [sea and monster.] Strange animal of the
sea.

SEA

Seamen give suck to their young. La. iv. 3.
Where luxury once reign'd, seamen whelp. Milton
SEANYPH. n. f. [sea and nymph.] Goddess of the sea.
Virgil, after Homer's example, gives us a transformation of Aeneas's ship into seanymphs. Broom
SEANION. n. f. An herb. Ansforth
SEAOOSE. n. f. [sea and oose.] The mud in the sea or shore.
All seagoes, or oozy mud, and the mud of rivers, are of great advantage to all sorts of land. Mortimer SEAPIECE. n. f. [sea and piece.] A picture representing any thing at sea.
Great painters often employ their pencils upon seapièces.
Adison's Spectator
SEAPOOL. n. f. [sea and pool.] A lake of salt water.
I have often heard it wished, that all that land were a sea- pool. Spenser on Ireland
SEAPORT. n. f. [sea and port.] A harbour.
SEARISQUE. n. f. [sea and risque.] Hazard at sea.
He was so great an encourager of commerce, that he charged himself with all the searisque of such vessels as carried corn to Rome in the Winter. Arbutnot
SEAROCKET. n. f. A plant. Miller
SEAROOM. n. f. [sea and room.] Open sea; spacious main.
There is searoom enough for both nations, without offending one another, and it would exceedingly support the navy.
Bacon's Advice to Villiers
The bigger whale like some huge carrack lay,
Which wanteth searoom with her foes to play. Waller SEAROVER. n. f. [sea and rove.] A pirate.
SEASHARK. n. f. [sea and shark.] A ravenous seafish.
Witches mummy, maw and gulf
Of the ravening salt seashark. Shakespeare
SEASHELL. n. f. [sea and shell.] Shells found on the shore.
Seashells are great improvers of four or cold land. Mortimer
SEASHORE. n. f. [sea and shore.] The coast of the sea.
That seashore where no more world is found,
But foaming billows breaking on the ground. Dryden Fournier gives an account of an earthquake in Peru, that reached three hundred leagues along the seashore. Burnet
To say a man has a clear idea of any quantity, without knowing how great it is, is as reasonable as to say he has the positive idea of the number of the lands on the seashore. Locke SEASICK. adj. [sea and sick.] Sick, as new voyagers on the
sea.
She began to be much seasick, extremity of weather continuing. Shakespeare
Barbarossa was not able to come on shore, for that he was,
as they said, seasick, and troubled with an ague. Knelles
In love's voyage nothing can offend;
Women are never seasick. Dryden's Juvenal
Weary and seasick, when in thee confin'd;
Now, for thy safety, cares distract my mind. Swift
SEASIDE. n. f. [sea and side.] The edge of the sea.
Their camels were without number, as the sand by the sea- side. Jud. vii. 12.
There disembarking on the green seaside,
We land our cattle, and the spoil divide. Pope
SEASERPENT. n. f. [sea and serpent.] Serpent generated in the water.
SEASERVICE. n. f. [sea and service.] Naval war.
You were press'd for the seaservice, and got off with much
ado. Swift's Direct. to Servants
SEASURGEON. n. f. [sea and surgeon.] A chirurgeon employed on shipboard.
My design was to help the seasurgeon. Wisehead's Surgery
SEASURROUNDED. adj. [sea and surround.] Encircled by the
sea.
To seasurrounded realms the gods assign Small tract of fertile lawn, the least to mine. Pope
SEATERM. n. f. [sea and term.] Word of art used by the seamen.
I agree with you in your censure of the seaterms in Dryden's
Virgil, because no terms of art, or cant words, suit the majesty of epic poetry. Pope
SEAWATER. n. f. [sea and water.] The salt water of the
sea.
By digging of pits in the seashore, he did frustrate the laborious works of the enemies, which had turned the sea- water upon the wells of Alexandria. Bacon's Nat. History
I took off the dressings, and bathed the member with sea- water. Wisehead
Seawater has many gross, rough, and earthy particles in it, as appears from its saltness; whereas fresh water is more pure and unmixt. Broom's Notes on the Odyssey
SEAL. n. f. [seol, rele, Saxon; seel, Danish] The seacalf.
See SEACALF.
The seal or foyle is in make and growth not unlike a pig, ugly faced, and footed like a moldwarp: he delighteth in muck, or any loud noise, and thereby is trained to shew himself above water: they also come on land. Carew

SEA

- An island salt and bare,
The haunt of seals and orcs, and seamaws clang. Milton.
- SEAL. n. f. [ryzel, Saxon; sigillum, Latin.]
1. A stamp engraved with a particular impression, which is fixed upon the wax that closes letters, or affixed as a testimony.
The king commands you
To render up the great seal. Shaksp. Henry VIII.
If the organs of perception, like wax overharden with cold, will not receive the impression of the seal; or, like wax of a temper too soft, will not hold it; or else supposing the wax of a temper fit, but the seal not applied with a sufficient force to make a clear impression: in any of these cases the print left by the seal will be obscure. Locke.
The same
His grandfate wore about his neck
In three seal rings, which after, melted down, Form'd a vast buckle for his widow's gown. Pope.
2. The impression made in wax.
'Till thou canst rail the seal from off my bond,
Thou hast offend'd thy lungs to speak so loud. Shaksp.
Solyman shewed him his own letters, asking him if he knew not that hand, and if he knew not that seal. Kneller.
He saw his monkey picking the seal wax from a letter. Arb.
3. Any act of confirmation.
They their fill of love
Took largely, of their mutual guilt the seal. Milton.
TO SEAL. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To fasten with a seal.
He that brings this love to thee,
Little knows this love in me;
And by him seal up thy mind. Shaksp. As you like it.
I have seen her rise from her bed, take forth paper, fold it, write upon't, and afterwards seal it. Shaksp. As you like it.
2. To confirm or attest by a seal.
God join'd my heart to Romeo's; thou our hands;
And ere this hand, by thee to Romeo seal'd,
Shall be the label to another deed,
Or my true heart with treacherous revolt
Turn to another, this shall slay them both. Shaksp. As you like it.
3. To confirm; to ratify; to settle.
My soul is purg'd from grudging hate,
And with my hand I seal our true hearts love. Shak. R. III.
When I have performed this, and seal'd to them this fruit,
I will come into Spain. Rom. xv. 28.
4. To shut; to close.
Seal up your lips, and give no words, but mum! Shaksp.
At my death
Thou hast seal'd up my expectation. Shaksp. Henry IV.
The root of evil is seal'd up from you. 2 Esdr. viii. 53.
The sense is like the fun; for the fun seals up the globe of heaven, and opens the globe of earth: so the sense doth obscure heavenly things, and reveals earthly things. Bacon.
Back to th' infernal pit I drag thee chain'd,
The facil gates of hell too slightly barr'd. Milton.
5. To mark with a stamp.
You'd rail upon the hostels,
And say you would present her at the leet,
Because he bought stone jugs, and no seal'd quarts. Shaksp.
TO SEAL. v. n. To fix a seal.
I will seal unto this bond. Shaksp. As you like it.
We make a sure covenant and write it, and our princes and priests seal unto it. Neh. ix. 38.
SEALER. n. f. [from seal.] One that seals.

The orb he roam'd
With narrow search, and with inspection deep. Mil. n.
2. Inquiry.

SEA

2. Inquiry; examination; act of seeking.
His reasons are as two grains of wheat hid in two bushels of chaff: you shall seek all day ere you find them, and when you have them they are not worth the search. Shaksp. As you like it.
Who great in search of God and nature grow,
They best the wife Creator's praise declare. Dryden.
Now mourn thy fatal search;
It is not safe to have too quick a sense.
The mind sets itself on work in search of some hidden idea, and turns the eye of the soul upon it. Locke.
By the philosophical use of words, I mean such an use as conveys the precise notions of things, which the mind may be satisfied with in its search after knowledge. Locke.
The parents, after a long search for the boy, gave him for drowned in a canal. Addison.
This common practice carries the heart aside from all that is honest in our search after truth. Watts.
3. Quest; pursuit.
If zealous love should go in search of virtue,
Where should he find it purer than in Blanch? Shaksp. As you like it.
Stay him from his intendment, or brook such disgrace well as he shall run into; in that it is a thing of his own search, and altogether against my will. Shaksp. As you like it.
Nor did my search of liberty begin,
'Till my black hairs were chang'd upon my chin. Dryden.
SEARCHER. n. f. [from search.]
1. Examiner; inquirer; trier.
The Agarenes that seek wisdom upon earth, the authors of fables, and searchers out of understanding. Bar. iii. 23.
The searchers found a marvellous difference between the Anakis and themselves. Raleigh.
Religion has given us a more just idea of the divine nature: he whom we appeal to is truth itself, the great searcher of hearts, who will not let fraud go unpunished, or hold him guiltless that taketh his name in vain. Addison.
In vain we lift up our presumptuous eyes
To what our Maker to their ken denies:
The searcher follows fast; the object flies. Prior.
Avoid the man who practices any thing unbecoming a free and open searcher after truth. Watts.
2. Officer in London appointed to examine the bodies of the dead, and report the cause of death.
The searchers, who are ancient matrons sworn to their office, repair to the place where the dead corps lies, and by view of the same, and by other inquiries, examine by what disease the corps died. Grant's Bills of Mortality.
SEASON. n. f. [saison, French.]
1. One of the four parts of the year, Spring, Summer, Autumn, Winter.
The fairest flowers o' th' season
Are our carnations and streak'd gillyflowers. Shaksp. As you like it.
Then Summer, Autumn, Winter did appear;
And Spring was but a season of the year. Dryden.
We saw, in six days travelling, the several seasons of the year in their beauty. Addison on Italy.
2. A time as distinguished from others.
He's noble, wise, judicious, and best knows
The fits o' th' season. Shak. Macbeth.
The season prime for sweetest scents and airs. Milton.
3. A fit time; an opportune concurrence.
At season fit let her with thee parake.
All business should be done betimes; and there's as little trouble of doing it in season too, as out of season. L'Estrange.
For active sports, for pleasing rest,
This is the time to be posses't;
The best is but in season best. Dryden.
I would indulge the gladness of my heart!
Let us retire: her grief is out of season. Philips.
There is no season to which such thoughts as these are more suitable.
The season when to come, and when to go,
To sing, or cease to sing, we never know. Pope.
4. A time not very long.
We'll slip you for a season, but our jealousy Do's yet depend. Shaksp. Cymbeline.
5. [From the verb.] That which gives a high relish.
You lack the season of all natures, sleep. Shak. Macbeth.
TO SEASON. v. a. [saisonner, French.]
1. To mix with food any thing that gives a high relish.
Every oblation of thy meat-offering shalt thou season with salt. Lev. ii. 13.
They seasoned every sacrifice, whereof a greater part was eaten by the priests. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
For breakfast and supper, milk and milk-pottage are very fit for children; only let them be seasoned with sugar. Locke.
The wife contriver,
To keep the waters from corruption free,
Mixt them with salt, and season'd all the sea. Blackmore.
2. To give a relish to.
You season still with sports your serious hours;
For age but tastes of pleasures, youth devours. Dryden.
The proper use of wit is to season conversation, to represent

- what is praiseworthy to the greatest advantage, and to expose the vices and follies of men. Tillotson.
3. To qualify by admixture of another ingredient.
Mercy is above this scepter'd sway;
It is an attribute to God himself;
And earthly pow'r does then shew likeliest God's,
When mercy seasons justice. Shak. Merchant of Venice.
Season your admiration but a while,
With an attentive ear, 'till I deliver
This marvel to you. Shak. Hamlet.
4. To imbue; to tinge or taint.
Whatever thing
The scythe of time mows down, devour unparr'd,
'Till I, in man residing, through the race
His thoughts, his looks, words, actions, all infect,
And season him thy last and sweetest prey. Milton's Pa. Lost.
Secure their religion, season their younger years with prudent and pious principles. Taylor.
Sin, taken into the soul, is like a liquor poured into a vessel; so much of it as it fills, it also seasons: the touch and tincture go together. South.
5. To fit for any use by time or habit; to mature.
The crow doth sing as sweetly as the lark;
When neither is attended; and, I think,
The nightingale, if she should sing by day,
When every goose is cackling, would be thought
No better a musician than the wren:
How many things by season'd time are done,
To their right praise and true perfection. Shaksp. As you like it.
Who in want a hollow friend doth try,
Direadly seasons him his enemy. Shaksp. As you like it.
We charge you, that you have contriv'd to take
From Rome all season'd office, and to wind Yourself unto a power tyrannical. Shaksp. Coriolanus.
The archers of his guard shot two arrows every man together against an inch board of well season'd timber. Hayward.
His plenteous stores do season'd timber send;
Thither the brawny carpenters repair. Dryden.
A man should harden and season himself beyond the degree of cold wherein he lives. Addison.
TO SEASON. v. n. To be mature; to grow fit for any purpose.
Carpenters rough plane boards for flooring, that they may set them by to season. Moxon's Mech. Exerc.
SEASONABLE. adj. [saison, French.] Opportune; happening or done at a proper time; proper as to time.
Mercy is seasonable in the time of affliction, as clouds of rain in the time of drought. Eccles. v. 2.
If ever it was seasonable to preach courage in the despised abused cause of Christ, it is now, when his truths are reformed into nothing, when the hands and hearts of his faithful ministers are weakened. South's Sermons.
SEASONABLENESS. n. f. [from seasonable.] Opportuneness of time; propriety with regard to time.
A British freeholder would very ill discharge his part, if he did not acknowledge the excellency and seasonableness of those laws by which his country has been recovered out of its confusions. Addison's Freeholder.
SEASONABLY. adv. [from seasonable.] Properly with respect to time.
This is that to which I would most earnestly, most seasonably advise you all. Spratt's Sermons.
SEASONER. n. f. [from To season.] He who seasons or gives a relish to any thing.
SEASONING. n. f. [from season.] That which is added to any thing to give it a relish.
Breads we have of several grains, with divers kinds of leavenings and seasonings; so that some do extremely move appetites, and some do nourish so as divers do live of them alone. Bacon.
Some abound with words, without any seasoning or taste of matter. Ben. Johnson.
A foundation of good sense, and a cultivation of learning, are required to give a seasoning to retirement, and make us taste the blessing. Dryden.
Political speculations are of so dry and austere a nature, that they will not go down with the publick without frequent seasonings. Addison's Freeholder.
The publick accept a paper which has in it none of those seasonings that recommend the writings which are in vogue among us. Addison's Spectator.
Many vegetable substances are used by mankind as seasonings, which abound with a highly exalted aromatick oil; as thyme and fennel. Arbutnot on Aliments.
SEAT. n. f. [sedes, Latin; selt, old German. Skinner.]
1. A chair, bench, or any thing on which one may sit.
The fons of light
Hasted, resorting to the fummons high,
And took their seats. Milton's Paradise Lost.
The lady of the leaf ordain'd a feast,
And made the lady of the flow'r her guest;
When, lo, a bow'r ascended on the plain,
With sudden seats ordain'd, and large for either train. Dryd.
2. Chair

SEC

2. Chair of state; throne; post of authority; tribunal.
With due observance of thy goodly seat,
Great Agamemnon, Nestor shall supply Thy latest words. Shaksp. Troilus and Cressida.
Thus we debate
The nature of our seats, and make the rabble
Call our cares fears. Shak. Coriolanus.
Whatever be the manner of the world's end, most certain it is an end it shall have, and as certain that then we shall appear before the judgment seat of Christ, that every man may receive according to that which he hath done in his body, whether it be good or evil. Hakewill on Providence.
3. Mansion; residence; dwelling; abode.
It were enough in reason to succour with victuals, and other helps, a vast multitude, compelled by necessity to seek a new seat, or to direct them unto a country able to receive them. Raleigh.
O earth, how like to heav'n! if not prefer'd
Most justly, seat worthier of gods, as built
With second thoughts, reforming what was old! Milton.
In Alba he shall fix his royal seat;
And, born a king, a race of kings beget. Dryden.
Has Winter caus'd thee, friend, to change thy seat,
And seek in Sabine air a warm retreat? Dryden.
The promis'd seat of empire shall again
Cover the mountain, and command the plain. Prior.
4. Situation; site.
The fittest and the easiest to be drawn
To our society, and to aid the war,
The rather for their seat, being next borderers
On Italy. Ben. Johnson's Catiline.
He that builds a fair house upon an ill seat, committeth himself to prison. Bacon.
A church by Strand-bridge, and two bishops heaves, were pulled down to make a seat for his new building. Hayward.
It followeth now that we find out the seat of Eden; for in it was Paradise by God planted. Raleigh.

1. To place on seats; to cause to sit down.
The guests were no sooner seated but they entered into a warm debate. Arbutnot.
2. To place in a post of authority, or place of distinction.
Thus high was king Richard seated. Shak. R. III.
Not Babylon,
Nor great Alcázar, such magnificence
Equal'd in all their glories to insurine
Belus or Serapis their gods, or seat
Their kings. Milton.
A spirit of envy or opposition makes mankind uneasy to see others of the same species seated above them in a sort of perfection. Pope.
3. To fix in any particular place or situation; to settle.
Should one family or one thousand hold possession of all the southern undiscovered continent, because they had seated themselves in Nova Guiana.
By no means build too near a great neighbour, which were, in truth, to be as unfortunately seated on the earth as Mercury is in the heavens; for the most part ever in combustion, or obscurity, under brighter beams than his own. Watson.
4. To fix; to place firm.
Why do I yield to that suggestion,
Whose horrid image doth upfix my hair,
And make my seated heart knock at my ribs,
Against the use of nature. Shak. Macbeth.
From their foundations loosening to and fro,
They pluck'd the seated hills. Milton.
SE'WARD. adv. [from sear, Saxon.] Towards the sea.
The rock rush'd seaward with impetuous roar,
Ingulf'd, and to th' abyss the boaster bore. Pope.
SE'CANT. n. f. [from secans, Latin; seca, Fr.] In geometry, the right line drawn from the centre of a circle, cutting and meeting with another line called the tangent without it. Dict.
To SECE'DE. v. n. [from secedo, Latin.] To withdraw from fellowship in any affair.
SECE'DER. n. f. [from secede.] One who discovers his disapprobation of any proceedings by withdrawing himself.
To SECE'RN. v. a. [from seerno, Latin.] To separate finer from grosser matter; to make the separation of substances in the body.
Birds are commonly better meat than beasts, because their flesh doth assimilate more finely, and *secerne*th more subtilly. Bacon's Natural History.
The pituite or mucus *secerne*d in the nose and windpipe, is not an excrementitious but a laudable humour, necessary for defending those parts, from which it is *secerne*d, from excretions. Arbutnot.
SECE'SSION. n. f. [from secessio, Latin.]
1. The act of departing.
The accession of bodies upon, or secession thereof from the earth's surface, perturb not the equilibration of either hemisphere. Brown.
2. The act of withdrawing from councils or actions.

SEC

- SE'CLE. n. f. [from seculo, French; seculum, Latin.] A century.
Of a man's age, part he lives in his father's life-time, and part after his son's birth; and thereupon it is wont to be said that three generations make one seculo, or hundred years in the genealogies. Hammond's Pract. Catech.
To SECL'UDE. v. a. [from secludo, Latin.] To confine from; to shut up apart; to exclude.
None is secluded from that function of any degree, state, or calling.
Some parts of knowledge God has thought fit to seclude from us, to fence them not only, as he did the interdicted tree, by precept and commination, but with difficulties and impossibilities. Decay of Piety.
The number of birds described may be near five hundred, and the number of fishes, secluding shell-fish, as many; but if the shell-fish be taken in, more than six times the number.
Inclose your tender plants in your conservatory, secluding all entrance of cold.  Evelyn's Calendar.
Let eastern tyrants from the light of heaven
Seclude their bosom slaves. Thomson.
SE'COND. n. f. [from secundus, French; secundus, Latin.] It is observable that the English have no ordinal of two, as the Latins and the nations deriving from them have none of duo. What the Latins call secundus, from sequi, the Saxons term oþer, or æftera.
1. The next in order to the first; the ordinal of two.
Sunk were their hearts with horror of the crime,
Nor needed to be warn'd a second time,
But bore each other back. Dryden.
2. Next in value or dignity; inferior.
I shall not speak superlatively of them, lest I be suspected of partiality; but this I may truly say, they are second to none in the Christian world. Bacon's Advice to Villiers.
None I know
Second to me, or like; equal much less. Milton.
My eyes are still the same; each glance, each grace,
Keep their first lustre, and maintain their place,
Not second yet to any other face. Dryden.
Not these huge bolts, by which the giants slain,
Lay overthrown on the Phlegrean plain;
'Twas of a lesser mould and lighter weight;
They call it thunder of a second rate.  Addison.
By a sad train of miseries alone
Distinguish'd long, and second now to none. Pope.
Persons of second rate merit in their own country, like birds of passage, thrive here, and fly off when their employments are at an end. Swift.
SE'COND-HAND. n. f. Possession received from the first possessor.
SE'COND-HAND is sometimes used adjectively. Not original; not primary.
Some men build so much upon authorities, they have but a second-hand or implicit knowledge. Locke.
They are too proud to cringe to second-hand favourites in a great family. Swift to Gog.
A SECOND-HAND. In imitation; in the second place of order; by transmission; not primarily; not originally.
They pelted them with fatyrs and epigrams, which perhaps had been taken up at first only to make their court, and at second-hand to flatter those who had flattered their king. Temple.
In imitation of preachers at second-hand, I shall transcribe from Bruyere a piece of railery.
Spurious virtue in a maid;
A virtue but at second-hand. Swift.
SE'COND. n. f. [from secundus, French; from the adjective.]
1. One who accompanies another in a duel to direct or defend him.
Their seconds minister an oath,
Which was indifferent to them both,
That on their knightly faith and troth
No magic them supplied;
And fought them that they had no charms,
Wherewith to work each other's harms,
But came with simple open arms
To have their caufs tried. Drayton's Nymphid.
Their first encounters were very furious, till after some toll and bloodshed they were parted by the seconds.  Addison.
Personal brawls come in as seconds to finish the dispute of opinion. Watson.
2. One who supports or maintains; a supporter; a maintainer.
He propounded the duke as a main cause of divers infirmities in the state, being sure enough of seconds after the first onset. Watson.
Courage, when it is only a second to injustice, and falls on without provocation, is a disadvantage to a character. Cellar.
3. A second minute, the second division of an hour by sixty; the sixtieth part of a minute.
Four flames of an equal magnitude will be kept alive the space of sixteen second minutes, though one of these flames alone, in the same vessel, will not last above twenty-five or at most thirty seconds. Wilson's Math. Miscell.

- Sounds move above 1140 English feet in a second minute of time, and in seven or eight minutes of time about 100 English miles. Locke.
To SE'COND. v. a. [from secundo, Fr. secundo, Lat. from the noun.]
1. To support; to forward; to assist; to come in after the act as a maintainer.
The authors of the former opinion were presently seconded by other wittier and better learned, who being loth that the form of church polity, which they fought to bring in, should be otherwise than in the highest degree accounted of, took first an exception against the difference between church polity and matters of necessity to salvation. Hooker.
Though we here fall down,
We have supplies to second our attempt;
If they miscarry, theirs shall second them. Shak. Henry VI.
I to be the power of Israel's God
Avow, and challenge Dagon to the test,
Offering to combat thee his champion bold,
With th' utmost of his godhead seconded. Milton.
Familiar Ovid tender thoughts inspires,
And nature seconds all his lost desires. Rescannon.
If in company you offer something for a jest, and no body seconds you in your laughter, you may condemn their taste; but in the mean time you make a very indifferent figure. Swift.
In human works, though labour'd on with pain,
A thousand movements scarce one purpose gain;
In God's, one single can its ends produce,
Yet serves to second too many other ills. Pope.
2. To follow in the next place.
You some permit
To second ills with ills. Shakspere.
Having formerly discours'd of a marital voyage, I think it not impertinent to second the same with some necessary relations concerning the royal navy. Raleigh.
He saw his guleful act
By Eve, though all unwitting, seconded
Upon her husband. Milton's Paradise Lost.
Sin is usually seconded with sin; and a man seldom commits one sin to please, but he commits another to defend himself. South's Sermons.
SE'COND SIGHT. n. f. The power of seeing things future, or things distant: supposed inherent in some of the Scottish islanders.
As he was going out to steal a sheep, he was seized with a fit of second sight: the face of the country presented him with a wide prospect of new scenes, which he had never seen before.  Addison's Freeholder.
SE'COND SIGHTED. adj. [from second sight.] Having the second sight.
Sawney was descended of an ancient family, renowned for their skill in prognosticks: most of his ancestors were second sighted, and his mother but narrowly escaped for a witch.  Addison.
SE'CONDARILY. adv. [from secondarily.] In the second degree; in the second order; not primarily; not originally; not in the first intention.
These atoms make the wind primarily tend downwards, though other accidental causes impel them secondarily to a sloping motion. Digby.
He confesses that temples are erected, and festivals kept, to the honour of saints, at least secondarily. Stillfleet.
It is primarily generated out of the effusion of melancholick blood, or secondarily out of the drugs and remainder of a phlegmonous or cedematick tumour. Harvey.
SE'CONDARINESS. n. f. [from secondarily.] The state of being secondary.
That which is peculiar and discriminative, must be taken from the primariness and secondariness of the perception. Norr.
SE'CONDARY. adj. [from secundarius, Latin.]
1. Not primary; not of the first intention; not of the first rate; next to the first.
Two are the radical differences: the secondary differences are as four. Bacon's Natural History.
Wherefore there is moral right on the one hand, no secondary right can discharge it. L'Estrange.
Gravitation is the powerful cement which holds together this magnificent structure of the world, which stretcheth the North over the empty space, and banneth the earth upon nothing, to transfer the words of Job from the first and real cause to the secondary. Bentley.
If the system had been fortuitously formed by the convening matter of a chaos, how is it conceivable that all the planets, both primary and secondary, should revolve the same way from the West to the East, and that in the same plane? Bentley.
2. Acting by transmission or deputation.
That we were form'd then, say'st thou? and the work
Of secondary hands, by talk transfer'd
From father to his son? Milton's Paradise Lost, b. v.
As in a watch's fine machine,
Though many artful springs are seen,
The added movements which declare
How full the moon, how old the year,
Derive their secondary pow'r
From that which simply points the hour. Prior.

SEC

3. A secondary fever is that which arises after a crisis, or the discharge of some morbid matter, as after the declension of the small pox or measles. Quincy.
SE'CONDARY. n. f. [from the adjective.] A delegate; a deputy.
SE'CO. adv. [from second.] In the second place.
First she hath disobey'd the law, and secondly trespassed against her husband. Ecclij. xxiii. 23.
First, metals are more durable than plants; and secondly, they are more solid and hard. Bacon.
The house of commons in Ireland, and, secondly, the privy council, addressed his majesty against these half-pence. Swift.
SE'COND RATE. n. f. [from second and rate.]
1. The second order in dignity or value.
They call it thunder of the second rate.  Addison's Ovid.
2. It is sometimes used adjectively, one of the second order. A colloquial license.
He was not then a second rate champion, as they would have him, who think fortitude the first virtue in a hero. Dryden.
SE'CRECY. n. f. [from secret.]
1. Privacy; state of being hidden.
That's not suddenly to be perform'd,
But with advice and silent secrecy. Shak. Henry VI.
The lady Anne,
Whom the king hath in secrecy long married,
This day was view'd in open as his queen. Shaksp. H. VIII.
In nature's book of infinite secrecy,
A little can I read. Shaksp. Ant. and Cleopatra.
2. Solitude; retirement.
Thou in thy secrecy, although alone,
Best with thyself accompany'd, seek'st not Social communication. Milton's Parad. Lost.
There is no such thing as perfect secrecy, to encourage a rational mind to the perpetration of any base action; for a man must first extinguish and put out the great light within him, his conscience; he must get away from himself, and shake off the thousand witnesses which he always carries about him, before he can be alone. South's Sermons.
3. Forbearance of discovery.
It is not with publick as with private prayer: in this rather secrecy is commanded than outward shew; whereas that being the publick act of a whole society, requireth accordingly more care to be had of external appearance. Hooker.
4. Fidelity to a secret; taciturnity inviolate; close silence.
SE'CRET. adj. [from secretus, French; secretus, Latin.]
1. Kept hidden; not revealed; concealed; private.
The secret things belong unto the Lord our God; but those things which are revealed belong unto us. Deutr. xxix. 29.
2. Retired; private; unseen.
Thou open'st wisdom's way,
And giv'st access, though secret the retire:
And I perhaps am secret. Milton.
3. Faithful to a secret entrusted.
Secret Romans, that have spoke the word,
And will not palter? Shaksp. Julius Cæsar.
4. Unknown; not discovered: as, a secret remedy.
5. Privy; obscene.
SE'CRET. n. f. [from secretus, French; secretum, Latin.]
1. Something studiously hidden.
Infected minds
To their deaf pillows will discharge their secrets. Shaksp.
There is no secret that they can hide from thee. Ezek. xxviii.
We not to explore the secrets ask
Of his eternal empire. Milton.
2. A thing unknown; something not yet discovered.
All blest secrets,
All you unpubliſh'd virtues of the earth. Shaksp. King Lear.
All secrets of the deep, all nature's works. Milton.
The Romans seem not to have known the secret of paper-credit. Arbutnot.
3. Privacy; secrecy.
Bread eaten in secret is pleasant. Prov. ix. 17.
In secret, riding through the air she comes. Milton.
To SE'CRET. v. a. [from the noun.] To keep private.
Great care is to be used of the clerks of the council, for the secreting of their consultations. Bacon's Advice to Villiers.
SE'CRETARISHIP. n. f. [from secretaire, Fr. from secretary.] The office of a secretary.
SE'CRETARY. n. f. [from secretaire, Fr. secretarius, low Latin.] One entrusted with the management of business; one who writes for another.
Call Gardiner to me, my new secretary. Shaksp.
That which is most of all profitable is acquaintance with the secretaries, and employed men of ambassadors. Bacon.
Cottington was secretary to the prince. Clarendon.
To SECRE'TE. v. a. [from secretus, Latin.]
1. To put aside; to hide.
2. [In the animal economy.] To secrete; to separate.
SECRE'TION. n. f. [from secretus, Latin.]
1. That part of the animal economy that consists in separating the various fluids of the body.
2. The fluid secreted.
SECRE'TIOUS. adj. [from secretus, Latin.] Parted by animal secretion.
23 L
They

They have a similitude or contrariety to the secretitious humours in taste and quality. Floyer on the Humours.
SECRETIST. n. f. [from secret.] A dealer in secrets.
 Some things I have not yet thought fit so plainly to reveal, not out of any envious design of having them buried with me, but that I may barter with those secretists, that will not part with one secret but in exchange for another. Boyle.
SECRETLY. adv. [from secret.] Privately; privily; not openly; not publicly; not so as to be known.
 Give him this letter, do it secretly. Shakespeare.
 Those thoughts are not wholly mine; but either they are secretly in the poet, or may be fairly deduced from him. Dryden.
 Now secretly with inward grief the pin'd;
 Now warm repentments to his griefs he join'd. Addison.
 Some may place their chief satisfaction in giving secretly what is to be distributed; others, in being the open and avowed instruments of making such distributions. Atterbury.
SECRETNESS. n. f. [from secret.]
 1. State of being hidden.
 2. Quality of keeping a secret.
 I could muster up
 My giants and my witches too,
 Which are vast constancy and secretness. Donne.
SECRETORY. adj. [from secretus, Latin.] Performing the office of secretion.
 All the glands are a congeries of vessels complicated together, whereby they give the blood time to separate through the capillary vessels into the secretory, which afterwards exonerate themselves into one duct. Roy.
SECT. n. f. [secte, French; secta, Latin, from sectando.]
 1. A body of men following some particular master, or united in some settled tenets. Often in a bad sense.
 We'll wear out,
 In a wall'd prison, packs and sects of great ones,
 That ebb and flow by th' moon. Shakef. King Lear.
 The greatest vicissitude of things is the vicissitude of sects and religions: the true religion is built upon the rock; the rest are tossed upon the waves of time. Bacon's Essays.
 The jealous sects that dare not trust their cause
 So far from their own will as to the laws,
 You for their umpire and their synod take. Dryden.
 The academics were willing to admit the goods of fortune into their notion of felicity; but no sects of old philosophers did ever leave a room for greatness. Dryden.
 A sect of free thinkers is a fum of ciphers. Bentley.
 2. In Shakespeare it seems to be misprinted for set.
 Of our unbitted lusts, I take this that you call love to be a sect or cion. Shakef. Othello.
SECTARISM. n. f. [from secta.] Disposition to petty sects in opposition to things established.
 Nothing hath more marks of schism and sectarism than this presbyterian way. King Charles.
SECTARY. n. f. [sectaire, French; from secta.]
 1. One who divides from publick establishment, and joins with those distinguished by some particular whims.
 My lord, you are a sectary,
 That's the plain truth. Shakef.
 Romish catholic tenets are inconsistent, on the one hand, with the truth of religion professed and protected by the church of England, whence we are called protestants; and the anabaptists, and separatists, and sectaries, on the other hand, whose tenets are full of schism, and inconsistent with monarchy. Bac.
 The number of sectaries does not concern the clergy in point of interest or conscience. Swift.
 2. A follower; a pupil.
 The sectaries of my celestial skill,
 That want to be the world's chief ornament,
 And learned imps that wont to shoot up still,
 They under keep. Spenser.
SECTOR. n. f. [sectateur, Fr. sectator, Latin.] A follower; an imitator; a disciple.
 Hereof the wiser fort and the best learned philosophers were not ignorant, as Cicero witnesseth, gathering the opinion of Aristotle and his sectators. Raleigh.
SECTION. n. f. [section, French; sectio, Latin.]
 1. The act of cutting or dividing.
 In the section of bodies, man, of all sensible creatures, has the fullest brain to his proportion. Watson.
 2. A part divided from the rest.
 3. A small and distinct part of a writing or book.
 Instead of their law, which they might not read openly, they read of the prophets, that which in likeness of matter came nearest to each section of their law. Hooker.
 The production of volatile salts I reserve 'till I mention them in another section. Boyle.
 Without breaking in upon the connection of his language, it is hardly possible to give a distinct view of his several arguments in distinct sections. Locke.
SECTOR. n. f. [sector, French.] In geometry.
Sector is an instrument made of wood or metal, with a joint, and sometimes a piece to turn out to make a true square, with lines of sines, tangents, secants, equal parts, rhumbs, polygons, hours, latitudes, metals and solids. It is generally useful in all the practical parts of the mathematicks, and particularly contrived for navigation, surveying, astronomy, dialling, and projection of the sphere. All the lines of the sector can be accommodated to any radius, which is done by taking off all divisions parallelwise, and not lengthwise; the ground of which practice is this, that parallels to the base of any plain triangle, bear the same proportion to it as the parts of the legs above the parallel do to the whole legs. Harri.

SECULAR. adj. [secularis, Latin; seculier, French.]
 1. Not spiritual; relating to affairs of the present world; not holy; worldly.
 This in every several man's actions of common life, appertaineth unto moral; in publick and politick secular affairs, unto civil wisdom. Hooker.
 Then shall they seek 't' avail themselves of names,
 Places, and titles; and with these to join
Secular pow'r, though feigning still to act
 By spiritual. Milton's Paradise Lost.
 2. [In the church of Rome.] Not bound by monastick rules.
 Those northern nations easily embraced the religion of those they subdued, and by their devotion gave great authority and reverence, and thereby safe to the clergy both secular and regular. Temple.
 In France vast numbers of ecclesiasticks, secular and religious, live upon the labours of others. Addison.
 3. [Seculaire, Fr.] Happening or coming once in a secle or century.
 The secular year was kept but once in a century. Addison.
SECULARITY. n. f. [from secular.] Worldliness; attention to the things of the present life.
 Little and secularity of spirit is the greatest enemy to contemplation. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
TO SECULARIZE. v. a. [seculariser, Fr. from secular.]
 1. To convert from spiritual appropriations to common use.
 2. To make worldly.
SECULARLY. adv. [from secular.] In a worldly manner.
SECULARNESS. n. f. [from secular.] Worldliness.
SECUNDINE. n. f. [secundines, secundes, Fr. secundae, viz. partes quod nascentem infantem sequuntur. Ainsw.] The membrane in which the embryo is wrapped; the after-birth.
 The casting of the skin is by the ancients compared to the breaking of the secundine, or cawl, but not rightly; for the secundine is but a general cover, not shaped according to the parts, but the skin is. Bacon's Nat. History.
 Future ages lie
 Wrapp'd in their sacred secundine asleep. Cowley.
 If the fetus be taken out of the womb inclosed in the secundine, it will continue to live, and the blood to circulate. Roy.
SECURE. adj. [securus, Latin.]
 1. Free from fear; exempt from terror; easy; assured.
 Confidence then bore thee on secure
 To meet no danger. Milton.
 One maid she had, belov'd above the rest;
Secure of her, the secret she confest. Dryden.
 In Lethe's lake souls long oblivion taste;
 Of future life secure, forgetful of the past. Dryden.
 But thou, secure of soul, unbent with woes;
 The more thy fortune frowns, the more oppose. Dryden.
 We live and act as if we were perfectly secure of the final event of things, however we may behave ourselves. Atterbury.
 The portion of their wealth they design for the uses of the poor, they may throw into one of these publick repositories, secure that it will be well employed. Atterbury.
 It concerns the most secure of his strength, to pray to God not to expose him to an enemy. Rogers.
 2. Careless; wanting caution; wanting vigilance.
 3. Free from danger; safe.
 Let us not then suspect our happy state,
 As not secure to single or combin'd. Milton.
 Messaps next,
Secure of steel, and fated from the fire,
 In pomp appears. Dryden.
 4. It has sometimes of before the object in all its senses; but more properly from before evil, or the cause of evil.
 Happly too secure of our discharge
 From penalty. Milton.
 Secure from fortune's blows,
 Secure of what I cannot lose,
 In my small pinnacle I can sail. Dryden's Horat.
TO SECURE. v. a. [from the adjective.]
 1. To make certain; to put out of hazard; to ascertain.
 Nothing left
 That might his happy state secure,
 Secure from outward force. Milton.
 I spread a cloud before the victor's sight,
 Sustain'd the vanquish'd, and secure his flight;
 Ev'n then secure him, when I fought with joy
 The vow'd destruction of ungrateful Troy. Dryden.
 Actions have their preference, not according to the transient pleasure or pain that accompanies or follows them here, but as they serve to secure that perfect durable happiness hereafter. Locke.

Truth and certainty are not secured by innate principles; but men are in the same uncertain floating estate with as without them. Locke.
 That prince who shall be so wise as by established laws of liberty to secure protection to the honest industry of mankind, against the oppression of power, will quickly be too hard for his neighbours. Locke.
 Deeper to wound, she thuns the fight;
 She drops her arms to gain the field;
 Secures her conquest by her flight,
 And triumphs when she seems to yield. Prior.
 Nothing can be more artful than the address of Ulysses: he secures himself of a powerful advocate, by paying an ingenious and laudable deference to his friend. Broome.
 2. To protect; to make safe.
 Where two or three sciences are pursued at the same time, if one of them be dry, as logic, let another be more enterprising, to secure the mind from weariness. Watts.
 3. To insure.
 4. To make fast.
SECURELY. adv. [from secure.] Without fear; carelessly; without danger; safely.
 Love, that had now long time securely slept
 In Venus' lap, unarmed then and naked,
 'Gan rear his head, by Clotho being waked. Spenser.
 'Tis done like Hector, but securely done,
 A little proudly, and great deal misprizing
 The knight oppos'd. Shakef. Troilus and Cressida.
 His daring foe securely him defy'd. Milton.
 A foul that can securely death defy,
 And count it nature's privilege to die. Dryden's Juven.
 We upon our globe's last verge shall go,
 And view the ocean leaning on the sky;
 From thence our rolling neighbours we shall know,
 And on the lunar world securely pry. Dryden.
 Whether any of the reasonings are inconsistent, I securely leave to the judgment of the reader. Atterbury.
SECUREMENT. n. f. [from secure.] The cause of safety; protection; defence.
 They, like Judas, desire death; Cain, on the contrary, grew afraid thereof, and obtained a securement from it. Brown.
SECURITY. n. f. [securitas, Fr. securitas, Lat. from securus.]
 1. Carelessness; freedom from fear.
 Marvellous security is always dangerous, when men will not believe any bees to be in a hive, until they have a sharp sense of their stings. Hayward.
 2. Vicious carelessness; confidence; want of vigilance.
 There is scarce truth enough alive to make societies secure; but security enough to make fellowships accurst. Shakefpeare.
 How senseless then, and dead a soul hath he,
 Which thinks his soul doth with his body die;
 Or thinks not so, but so would have it be,
 That he might sin with more security. Davies.
 3. Protection; defence.
 If the providence of God be taken away, what security have we against those innumerable dangers to which human nature is continually exposed? Tillotson.
 4. Any thing given as a pledge or caution; insurance; assurance for any thing.
 When they had taken security of Jason, they let them go. Acts xvii 9.
 It is possible for a man, who hath the appearance of religion, to be wicked and an hypocrite; but it is impossible for a man, who openly declares against religion, to give any reasonable security that he will not be false and cruel. Swift.
 Exchequer bills have been generally reckoned the surest and most sacred of all securities. Swift's Examiner.
 The Romans do not seem to have known the secret of paper credit, and securities upon mortgages. Arbutnot on Coins.
 5. Safety; certainty.
 Some, who gave their advice for entering into a war, alleged that we should have no security for our trade, while Spain was subject to a prince of the Bourbon family. Swift.
SEDA'N. n. f. [from sedes, Latin.] A kind of portable coach; a chair.
 Some beg for absent persons, feign them sick,
 Close mew'd in their sedans for want of air,
 And for their wives produce an empty chair. Dryden.
 By a tax of Cato's it was provided, that women's wearing cloaths, ornament and sedan, exceeding 12 l. 1 s. 10 d. half-penny, should pay 30 s. in the hundred pound value. Arbutnot.
SEDA'TE. adj. [sedatus, Latin.] Calm; quiet; still; unruffled; undisturbed; serene.
 With countenance calm and soul sedate,
 Thus Turnus. Dryden's Æn.
 Disputation carries away the mind from that calm and sedate temper which is so necessary to contemplate truth. Watts.
SEDA'TELY. adv. [from sedate.] Calmly; without disturbance.
 That has most weight with them that appears sedately to come from their parents reason. Locke.
SEDA'TENESS. n. f. [from sedate.] Calmness; tranquillity; serenity; freedom from disturbance.

There is a particular sedateness in their conversation and behaviour that qualifies them for council, with a great intrepidity that fits them for action. Addison on the War.
SE'DENTARINESS. n. f. [from sedentary.] The state of being sedentary; inactivity.
SE'DENTARY. adj. [sedentaire, French; sedentaria, Italian; sedentarius, from sedes, Latin.]
 1. Passed in sitting still; wanting motion or action.
 A sedentary life, appropriate to all students, crushes the bowels; and, for want of stirring the body, suffers the spirits to lie dormant. Harley on Consumptions.
 The blood of labouring people is more dense and heavy than of those who live a sedentary life. Arbutnot.
 2. Torpid; inactive; sluggish; motionless.
 The sedentary earth,
 That better might with far less compass move,
 Serv'd by more noble than herself, attains
 Her end without least motion. Milton.
 'Till length of years
 And sedentary numbness, craze my limbs
 To a contemptible old age obscure. Milton's Agonistes.
 The soul, considered abstractedly from its passions, is of a remiss sedentary nature, slow in its resolves, and languishing in its executions. Addison's Spectator.
SEDGE. n. f. [træcs, Saxon; whence, in the provinces, a narrow flag is called a sag or seg.] A growth of narrow flags; a narrow flag.
 'T'one layeth for turf and for sedge. Tusser.
 The current, that with gentle murmur glides,
 Thou know'st, being stopp'd, impatiently doth rage;
 But when his fair course is not hindered,
 He makes sweet music with th' enamel'd stones,
 Giving a gentle kiss to every sedge
 He overtaketh in his pilgrimage;
 And so by many winding nooks he strays,
 With willing sport, to the wild ocean. Shakefpeare.
 Adonis, painted by a running brook,
 And Cytherea all in sedges hid;
 Which seem to move and wanton with her breath,
 Even as the waving sedes play with wind. Shakefpeare.
 In hotter countries a fly called lucciole, that shineth as the glow-worm, is chiefly upon fens and marshes; yet is not seen but in the height of Summer, and sedge or other green of the fens give as good shade as bushes. Bacon.
 He hid himself in the sedges adjoining. Sandys.
 My bonds I brake,
 Fled from my guards, and in a muddy lake,
 Amongst the sedges, all the night lay hid. Denham.
 Niphates, with inverted urn,
 And drooping sedes, shall his Armenia mourn. Dryden.
SE'DGY. adj. [from sedge.] Overgrown with narrow flags.
 On the gentle Severn's sedgy bank,
 In single opposition, hand to hand,
 He did confound the best part of an hour,
 In changing hardiment with great Glendower. Shak. H. IV.
 Old father Thames rais'd up his reverend head,
 But fear'd the fate of Simois would return:
 Deep in his ooze he sought his sedgy bed,
 And thrunk his waters back into his urn. Dryden.
SEDIMENT. n. f. [sediment, French; sedimentum, Lat.] That which subsides or settles at the bottom.
 The salt water rises into a kind of scum on the top, and partly goeth into a sediment in the bottom, and so is rather a separation than an evaporation. Bacon's Nat. History.
 It is not bare agitation, but the sediment at the bottom, that troubles and defiles the water. South's Sermons.
 That matter sunk not down 'till last of all, settling at the surface of the sediment, and covering all the rest. Woodward.
SEDITION. n. f. [sedition, Fr. seditio, Latin.] A tumult; an insurrection; a popular commotion; an uproar.
 That sunshine brew'd a show'r for him,
 That wash'd his father's fortunes forth of France,
 And heap'd sedition on his crown at home. Shak. H. VI.
 In soothing them we nourish, 'gainst our senate,
 The cockle of rebellion, insolence, sedition. Shak. Coriolan.
SEDITIOUS. adj. [seditieux, Fr. seditiosus, Latin.] Factious with tumult; turbulent.
 The cause, why I have brought this army hither,
 Is to remove proud Somerset from the kings,
 Seditious to his grace and to the state. Shakef. H. VI.
 Very many of the nobility in Edenborough, at that time, did not appear yet in this sedition behaviour. Clarendon.
 Thou return'st
 From flight, seditious angel.
 But if she has deform'd this earthly life
 With murder's rapine and seditious strife,
 In everlasting darkness must she lie;
 Still more unhappy that she cannot die. Prior.
SEDITIOUSLY. adv. [from seditions.] Tumultuously; with factious turbulence.
SEDITIOUSNESS. n. f. [from seditions.] Turbulence; disposition to sedition.

SED

To SEDUCE. v. a. [seduco, Latin; seduire, French.] To draw aside from the right; to tempt; to corrupt; to deprave; to mislead; to deceive.

'Tis meet
That noble minds keep ever with their likes;
For who so firm that cannot be seduc'd? Shakef. Jul. Cæs.
Me the gold of France did not seduce,
Although I did admit it as a motive,
The sooner to effect what I intended. Shakef. H. V.
A beauty-waining and distressed widow,
Seduc'd the pitch and height of all his thoughts
To base declension. Shakef. R. III.
In the latter times some shall depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits. 1 Tim. iv. 1.
I shall never gratify the spitefulness of a few with any finisier thoughts of all their allegiance, whom pious frauds have seduc'd. King Charles.
Subtle he needs must be who could seduce
Angels. Milton.

Nor let false friends seduce thy mind to fame,
By arrogating Johnson's hostile name;
Let father Flecknoe fire thy mind with praise,
And uncle Ogleby thy envy raise. Dryden.

SEDUCEMENT. n. f. [from seduce.] Practice of seduction; art or means used in order to seduce.

To season them, and win them early to the love of virtue and true labour, ere any flattering seducement or vain principle seize them wandering, some easy and delightful book of education should be read to them. Milton on Education.

Her hero's dangers touch'd the pitying pow'r,
The nymph's seducements, and the magic bow'r. Pope.
SEDUCER. n. f. [from seduce.] One who draws aside from the right; a tempter; a corrupter.

Grant it me, O king; otherwise a seducer flourisheth, and a poor maid is undone. Shakespeare.

There is a teaching by restraining seducers, and so removing the hindrances of knowledge. South.

The soft seducer, with enticing looks, Dryden.
The bellowing rivals to the fight provokes.

He whose firm faith no reason could remove, Dryden.
Will melt before that soft seducer, love.

SEDUCIBLE. adj. [from seduce.] Corruptible; capable of being drawn aside.

The vicious example of ages past poisons the curiosity of these present, affording a hint of sin unto seducible spirits.

We owe much of our error to the power which our affections have over our easy seducible understandings. Glauv.

SEDUCTION. n. f. [seduction, Fr. seductus, Latin.] The act of seducing; the act of drawing aside.

Whatsoever mens faith, patience, or perseverance were, any remarkable indulgence to this sin, the seduction of Balaam, were sure to bring judgments. Hammond.

To procure the miseries of others in those extremities, wherein we hold an hope to have no society ourselves, is a strain above Lucifer, and a project beyond the primary seduction of hell. Brown's Vulg. Errours.

Whereby is evident the easy seduction of men, neither inquiring into the verity of the substance, nor reforming upon repugnance of circumstances. Brown's Vulg. Err.

The deceiver soon found out this soft place of Adam's, and innocency itself did not secure him from this way of seduction. Glauv. Sceps.

Helen ascribes her seduction to Venus, and mentions nothing of Paris. Pope.

A woman who is above flattery, and despises all praise, but that which flows from the approbation of her own heart, is, morally speaking, out of reach of seduction. Clarissa.

SEDULITY. n. f. [sedulitas, Latin.] Diligent assiduity; laboriousness; industry; application; intenseness of endeavour.

Man oftentimes pursues, with great sedulity and earnestness, that which cannot stand him in any stead for vital purpose. Hooker.

Let there be but the same propensity and bent of will to religion, and there will be the same sedulity and indefatigable industry in mens enquiries into it. South.

SEDULOUS. adj. [sedulus, Latin.] Assiduous; industrious; laborious; diligent; painful.

Not sedulous by nature to indite
Wars, hitherto the only argument
Heroick deem'd. Milton's Paradise Lost.

What signifies the sound of words in prayer, without the affection of the heart, and a sedulous application of the proper means that may naturally lead us to such an end. L'Estrange.

The goat, now bright amidst her fellow stars,
Kind Amalthæa reach'd her teat, dissent
With milk, thy early food: the sedulous bee Disfill'd her honey on thy purple lips. Prior.

The bare majority of a few representatives is often procured by great industry and application, wherein those who engage in the pursuits of malice are much more sedulous than such as would prevent them. Swift.

SE'DULOUSLY. adv. [from sedulous.] Assiduously; industri-ously; laboriously; diligently; painfully.

The ritual, preceptive, prophetic, and all other parts of sacred writ, were most sedulously, most religiously guarded by them. Government of the Tongue.

All things by experience
Are most improv'd; then sedulously think
To meliorate thy flock, no way or rule
Be unemploy'd. Philips.

SE'DULOUSNESS. n. f. [from sedulous.] Assiduity; assiduousness; industry; diligence.

SEE. n. f. [sedes, Latin.] The seat of episcopal power; the dioceses of a bishop.

You, my lord archbishop,
Whose see is by a civil peace maintain'd,
Whose beard the silver hand of peace hath touch'd,
Whose learning and good letters peace hath tutor'd,
Whose white investments figure innocence,
The dove and every blessed spirit of peace;
Wherefore do you so ill translate yourself
Out of the speech of peace, that bears such grace,
Into the harsh and boist'rous tongue of war? Shakef. H. IV.

It is a false opinion for their sees, empires, and kingdoms, and for themselves, if they be wise. Bacon.

The pope would use these treasures, in case of any great calamity that should endanger the holy see. Addison.

Episcopal revenues were so low reduced, that three or four sees were often united to make a tolerable competency. Swift.

To SEE. v. a. preter. I saw; part. pass. seen. [seon, Saxon;
sen, Dutch.]

1. To perceive by the eye.

Dear son Edgar,
Might I but live to see thee in my touch,
Pd say I had eyes again. Shakef. King Lear.

I was bowed down at the hearing of it; I was dismay'd at the seeing of it. Jf. xxi. 3.

I speak that which I have seen with my father, and ye do that which you have seen with yours. Jo. viii. 38.

He'll lead the life of gods, and be
By gods and heroes seen, and gods and heroes see. Dryden.

It was a right answer of the physician to his patient, that had sore eyes: If you have more pleasure in the taste of wine than in the use of your sight, wine is good for you; but if the pleasure of seeing be greater to you than that of drinking, wine is naught. Locke.

I see her sober over a fampler. Pope.

2. To observe; to find.

Seven other kine came up, lean fleshed, such as I never saw for badness. Gen. xli. 19.

Such command we had,
To see that none thence issu'd forth a spy. Milton.

Give them first one simple idea, and see that they perfectly comprehend it, before you go any farther. Locke.

The thunderbolt we see used by the greatest poet of Augus-tus's age, to express irresistible force in battle. Addison.

3. To discover; to discern.

Who is so gross
As cannot see this palpable device?
Yet who so bold but says he sees it not?
When such ill dealings must be seen in thought. Shakespeare.

4. To converse with.

The main of them may be reduced to language, and to an improvement in wisdom and prudence by seeing men, and conversing with people of different tempers and customs. Locke.

5. To attend; to remark.

I had a mind to see him out, and therefore did not care for contradicting him. Addison's Freeholder.

To SEE. v. n.

1. To have the power of sight; to have by the eye perception of things distant.

Who maketh the seeing or the blind? have not I the Lord?
Air hath some secret degree of light; otherwise cats and owls could not see in the night. Bacon's Natural History.

Could you see into my secret soul,
There you might read your own dominion doubled. Dryden.

2. To discern without deception.

Many fagacious persons will find us out, will look under our mask, and see through all our fine pretensions, and discern the absurdity of telling the world that we believe one thing when we do the contrary. Tillotson.

You may see into the spirit of them all, and form your pen from those general notions. Felton.

3. To enquire; to distinguish.

See whether fear doth make thee wrong her. Shakef.

4. To be attentive.

Mark and perform it, see'st thou; for the fail
Of any point in't shall be death. Shakespeare.

5. To scheme; to contrive.

Cassio's a proper man: let me see now;
To get his place. Shakespeare's Othello.

SEE

SEE. interjection. [Originally the imperative of the verb see.]
Lo; look; observe; behold.

See, see! upon the banks of Boyne he stands,
By his own view adjusting his commands. Halfax.

See! the sole bliss heav'n could on all bestow,
Which who but feels can taste, but thinks can know? Pope.

See what it is to have a poet in your house. Pope.

SEED. n. f. [seeb, Saxon; seed, Danish; saet, Dutch.]

1. The organised particle produced by plants and animals, from which new plants and animals are generated.

If you can look into the seeds of time,
And say which grain will grow and which will not,
Speak then to me. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Seed of a year old is the best, though some seed and grains last better than others. Bacon's Nat. History.

That every plant has its seed is an evident sign of divine providence. More.

Did they ever see any herbs, except those of the grassleaved tribe, come up without two seed leaves; which to me is an argument that they came all of seed, there being no reason else why they should produce two seed leaves different from the subsequent. Ray.

Just gods! all other things their like produce;
The vine arises from her mother's juice:
When feeble plants or tender flows decay,
They to their seed their images convey. Prior.

In the fourth part of Staffordshire they go to the north for seed corn. Mortimer.

2. First principle; original.

The seed of whatsoever perfect virtue groweth from us, is a right opinion touching things divine. Hooker.

3. Principle of production.

Praise of great acts he scatters as a seed,
Which may the like in coming ages breed. Waller.

4. Progeny; offspring; descendants.

Next him king Lear in happy peace long reign'd;
But had no issue male him to succeed,
But three fair daughters, which were well uptrain'd
In all that seem'd fit for kingly seed. Fairy Queen.

The thing doth touch
The main of all your states, your blood, your seed. Daniel.

When God gave Canaan to Abraham, he thought fit to put his seed into the grant too. Locke.

5. Race; generation; birth.

Of mortal seed they were not held,
Which other mortals so excel'd;
And beauty too in such excess,
As your's, Zelinda! claims no less. Waller.

To SEED. v. n. [from the noun.] To grow to perfect maturity so as to shed the seed.

Whatever I plant, like corn on barren earth,
By an equivocal birth,
Seds and runs up to poetry. Swift.

They pick up all the old roots, except what they design for seed, which they let stand to seed the next year. Mortimer.

SEEDCAKE. n. f. [seed and cake.] A sweet cake interspersed with warm aromatick seeds.

Remember, wife,
The seedcake, the pasties, and fermenty pot. Tusser.

- Ask not what pains, nor further seek to know Their process, or the forms of law below. Dryden.
Have been forced to relinquish that opinion, and have endeavoured to seek after some better reason. Addison's Spectator.
2. To make pursuit.
Violent men have sought after my soul. Pf. lxxxvi. 14.
If thy brother's ox or sheep go astray, it shall be with thee until thy brother seek after it. Deut. xxii. 2.
3. To apply to; to use solicitation.
All the earth sought to Solomon, to hear his wisdom. 1 K.
Unto his habitation shall ye seek, and thither thou shalt come. Deutr. xii. 5.
4. To endeavour after.
Being a man of experience, he wished by wisdom to order that which the young prince sought for by war. Knolles.
To SEEK. [An adverbial mode of speech.] At a loss; without measures, knowledge, or experience.
Being brought and transferred from other services abroad, though they be of good experience in those, yet in these they will be new to seek; and before they have gathered experience, they shall buy it with great loss to his majesty. Spenser.
Unpractis'd, unprepar'd, and still to seek. Milton.
But they misplace them all;
And are as much to seek in other things,
As he that only can design a tree,
Would be to draw a shipwreck. Roscommon.
- SEEKER*. n. f. [from seek.] One that seeks; an inquirer.
Though I confess that in philosophy I'm a seeker, yet cannot believe that a sceptick in philosophy must be one in divinity. Glauco.
A language of a very witty volatile people, seekers after novelty, and abounding with variety of notions. Locke.
- SEEKSORROW*. n. f. [seek and sorrow.] One who contrives to give himself vexation.
Afield they go, where many lookers be,
And thou seekst for us, Klaius, them among:
Indeed thou fadist it was thy friend to see,
Strephon, whose absence seem'd unto thee long. Sidney.
- To SEEL. v. a. [seeler, to seal, French.] To close the eyes.
A term of falconry, the eyes of a wild or haggard hawk being for a time sealed or closed.
Now she brought them to see a sealed dove, who the blinder she was, the higher she flave. Sidney.
As gentle hind, whose sides with cruel steel
Through lanced, her bleeding life does rain;
While the sad pang approaching she does feel,
Brays out her last breath, and up her eyes doth feel. F. 2.
Mine eyes no more on vanity shall feed,
But sealed up with death shall have their deadly meed. F. 2.
Come, seeling night,
Scarf up the tender eye of pitiful day. Shakespeare. Macbeth.
Some ambitious men seem as screens to princes in matters of danger and envy; for no man will take such parts, unless he be like the sealed dove, that mounts and mounts, because he cannot see about him. Bacon.
- Since, blinded with ambition, he did soar
Like a sealed dove, his crime shall be his punishment,
To be depriv'd of sight. Denham's Sophy.
- To SEEL. v. n. [ryllan, Saxon.] To lean on one side.
When a ship seels or rows in foul weather, the breaking loose of ordinance is a thing very dangerous. Raleigh.
- SEELY*. adj. [from seel, lucky time, Saxon.]
1. Lucky; happy.
My seely sheep like well below,
For they been hale enough and trow,
And liken their abode. Spenser.
2. Silly; foolish; simple. Spenser.
Peacock and turkie, that nibbles off top,
Are very ill neighbours to seely poor top. Tusser.
- To SEEM. v. n. [sembler, French; unless it has a Teutonic original, as seemly certainly has.]
1. To appear; to make a show; to have semblance.
My lord, you've lost a friend, indeed;
And I dare swear, you borrow not that face
Of seeming sorrow; it is sure your own. Shakespeare. H. IV.
Speak: we will not trust our eyes
Without our ears: thou art not what thou seem'st. Shakespeare.
So spake th' Omnipotent; and with his words
All seem'd well pleas'd; all seem'd, but were not all. Milton.
In holy nuptials ty'd;
A seeming widow, and a secret bride. Dryden.
Observe the youth
Already seems to snuff the vital air. Dryden's Æn.
2. To have the appearance of truth.
It seems to me, that the true reason why we have so few versions which are tolerable, is because there are so few who have all the talents requisite for translation. Dryden.
3. In Shakespeare, to seem, perhaps signifies to be beautiful.
Sir, there she stands:
If aught within that little seeming substance
May fitly like your grace,
She's there, and she is your's. Shakespeare. King Lear.

4. It SEEMS. A phrase hard to be explained. It sometimes signifies that there is an appearance, though no reality; but generally it is used ironically to condemn the thing mentioned;
like the Latin scilicet, or the old English forsooth. Id. nisi datur negotii scilicet. This, it seems, is to be my task.
The earth by these, 'tis said,
This single crop of men and women bred;
Who, grown adult, so chance, it seems, enjoin'd,
Did male and female propagate. Blackmore's Creation.
5. It is sometimes a slight affirmation.
A prince of Italy, it seems, entertained his mistress upon a great lake. Addison's Guardian.
The raven, urg'd by such impertinence,
Grew passionate, it seems, and took offence. Addison.
He had been a chief magistrate; and had, it seems, executed that high office justly and honourably. Atterbury.
It seems that when first I was discovered sleeping on the ground, the emperor had early notice. Gulliver.
6. It appears to be.
Here's another discontented paper,
Found in his pocket too; and this, it seems,
Rodorigo meant t' have sent. Shakespeare. Othello.
It seems the camel's hair is taken by painters for the skin with the hair on. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
- SEEMER*. n. f. [from seem.] One that carries an appearance.
Angelo scarce confesses
That his blood flows, or that his appetite
Is more to bread than stone: hence shall we see,
If pow'r change purpose, what our seemers be. Shakespeare.
- SEEMING*. n. f. [from seem.]
1. Appearance; show; semblance.
All good seeming,
By thy revolt, oh husband, shall be thought
Put on for villainy. Shakespeare. Cymbeline.
Give him heedful note;
And, after, we will both our judgments join
In censure of his seeming. Shakespeare. Hamlet.
2. Fair appearance.
For you there's rosemary and rue; these keep Seeming and favour all the Winter long. Shakespeare.
3. Opinion.
Nothing more clear unto their seeming, than that a new Jerusalem, being often spoken of in Scripture, they undoubtedly were themselves that new Jerusalem. Hooker.
His persuasive words impregnd
With reason to her seeming. Milton.
- SEEMINGLY*. adv. [from seeming.] In appearance; in show;
in semblance.
To this her mother's plot,
She, seemingly obedient, likewise hath Made promise to the doctor. Shakespeare. Merry Wives of Windsor.
They to their viands fell, not seemingly
The angels, nor in mist. Milton.
I have touched upon them, though seemingly collateral to my scope; and yet I think they are more than seemingly so, since they pertinently illustrate my design. Glauco. Scyll.
The city dame was so well bred, as seemingly to take all in good part. L'Estrange.
The king and haughty empress, to our wonder,
If not aton'd, yet seemingly at peace. Dryden.
This the father seemingly complied with; but afterwards refusing, the son was likewise set aside. Addison's Freeholder.
They depend often on remote and seemingly disproportioned causes. Atterbury.
- SEEMINGNESS*. n. f. [from seeming.] Plausibility; fair appearance.
The seemingness of those reasons persuades us on the other side. Digby.
- SEEMLINESS*. n. f. [from seemly.] Decency; handfomeness;
comeliness; grace; beauty.
When substantialness combineth with delightfulness, seemli-ness with portliness, and currentness with staydness, how can the language sound other than full of sweetness? Camden.
- SEEMLY*. adj. [seemly, Danish, from seem, Islandick, honour or decency.] Decent; becoming; proper; fit.
Suspense of judgment and exercise of charity were safer and seemlier for Christian men, than the hot pursuit of these controversies. Hooker.
- I am a woman, lacking wit
To make a seemly answer to such persons. Shakespeare. H. VIII.
The wife safest and seemliest by her husband stays. Milton.
May we enjoy
Our humid products, and with seemly draughts Enkindle mirth and hospitable love. Phillips.
- SEEMLY*. adv. [from the adjective.] In a decent manner; in a proper manner.
There, seemly rang'd in peaceful order, flood Ulysses' arms, now long diffus'd to blood. Pope.
- SEEN*. adj. [from see.] Skilled; versed.
Petruchio shall offer me, disguis'd in sober robes,
To old Baptista as a schoolmaster. Shakespeare.
Well seen in music. Noble.

SEI

- Noble Boyle, not less in nature seem,
Than his great brother read in flates and men. Dryden.
- SEER*. n. f. [from see.]
1. One who sees.
We are in hopes that you may prove a dreamer of dreams,
and a seer of visions. Addison's Spectator.
2. A prophet; one who foresees future events.
How soon hath thy prediction, seer blest!
Measur'd this transient world the race of time,
'Till time stand fix'd? Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xii.
By day your frighted seers
Shall call for fountains to express their tears,
And with their eyes were floods: by night from dreams
Of opening gulphs, black storms, and raging flames,
Starting amaz'd, shall to the people show
Emblems of heav'nly wrath and mystick types of woe. Pri.
- SEERWOOD*. n. f. See SEARWOOD. Dry wood.
Caught, like dry stubble field, or like seerwood;
Yet from the wound ensu'd no purple flood,
But look'd a bubbling mass of frying blood. Dryden.
- SEESAW*. n. f. [from sew.] A reciprocating motion.
His wit all seesaw, between that and this;
Now high, now low, now master up, now miss,
And he himself one vile antithesis. Pope.
- To SEESAW. v. n. [from sew.] To move with a reciprocating motion.
Sometimes they were like to pull John over, then it went all of a sudden again on John's side; so they went seesawing up and down, from one end of the room to the other. Arbut.
- To SEETH. v. a. preterite I sed or seethed; part. pass. sadden.
[seosan, Saxon; sieden, Dutch.] To boil; to decoct in hot liquor.
The Scythians used to seeth the flesh in the hide, and so do the northern Irish. Spenser.
Go, suck the subtle blood o' th' grape,
'Till the high fever seeth your blood to froth,
And so 'scape hanging. Shakespeare's Timon.
Set on the great pot, and seeth pottage for the sons of the prophets. 2 Kings iv.
- To SEETH. v. n. To be in a state of ebullition; to be hot.
The boiling baths at Carbadon,
Which seeth with secret fire eternally,
And in their entrails, full of quick brimston,
Nourish the flames, which they are warm'd upon. Fa. Qu.
I will make a complimentary assault upon him; for my buliness seeth. Shakespeare. Troilus and Cressida.
Lovers and madmen have their seething brains,
Such shaping fantasies, that apprehend
More than cool reason ever comprehends. Shakespeare.
The priest's servant came, while the flesh was in seething, with a flesh-hook, and fluck it into the pan. 1 Sa. ii. 13.
- SEETHR*. n. f. [from seeth.] A boiler; a pot.
The fire thus form'd, the fets the kettle on;
Like burnish'd gold the little seether shone. Dryden.
- SEGMENT*. n. f. [segment, French; segmentum, Lat.] A figure contained between a chord and an arch of the circle, or so much of the circle as is cut off by that chord.
Even unto a parallel sphere, and such as live under the poles for half a year, some segments may appear at any time, and under any quarter, the sun not setting, but walking round.
Their segments or arcs, which appeared to numerous, for the most part exceeded not the third part of a circle. Newton.
- SEGMENTY*. n. f. [from segment, Latin.] Sluggishness; inactivity. Ditt.
- To SEGREGATE. v. a. [segregate, Latin; segregare, French.]
To set apart; to separate from others.
- SEGREGATION*. n. f. [segregation, Fr. from segregate.] Separation from others.
What shall we hear of this?
—A segregation of the Irish fleet;
For do but stand upon the foaming shore,
The chiding billows seem to pelt the clouds. Shakespeare. Othello.
- SEIGNERIAL*. adj. [from seignior.] Invested with large powers; independent.
Those lands were seignerial. Temple.
- SEIGNIOR*. n. f. [from seignior, Latin; seigneur, Fr.] A lord.
The title of honour given by Italians.
- SEIGNIOREY*. n. f. [seigneurie, Fr. from seignior.] A lordship;
a territory.
O'Neal never had any seignior over that country, but what by incroachment he got upon the English. Spenser.
Were you not restor'd
To all the duke of Norfolk's *seignior*ies? Shakespeare. H. IV.
Hoc, in the person of God, sayeth of the Jews, they have reigned, but not by me; they have set a seignior over themselves; which place proveth plainly, that there are governments which God doth not avow. Bacon.
William Marshal, earl of Pembroke, being lord of all Leinster, had royal jurisdiction throughout that province, and every one of his five sons enjoyed that seignior successively.
Darvies on Ireland.

SEL

- SEIGNORAGE*. n. f. [seigneurage, Fr. from seignior.] Authority; acknowledgment of power.
They brought work to the mint, and a part of the money coined to the crown for seignorage. Locke.
- To SEIGNORISE. v. a. [from seignior.] To lord over.
As fair he was as Cytherea's make,
As proud as he that *seignior*eth hell. Fairfax.
- SEINE*. n. f. [jezne, Saxon; seine, senne, seme, French.] A net used in fishing.
They have cock-boats for passengers, and seine boats for taking of pilchards. Carow.
- SEINER*. n. f. [from seine.] A fisher with nets.
Seiners complain with open mouth, that these drovers work much prejudice to the commonwealth of fishermen, and reap small gain to themselves. Carow's Survey of Cornwall.
- To SEIZE. v. a. [saïr, French.]
1. To take possession of; to grasp; to lay hold on; to fasten on:
In her sad breast the prince's fortunes rowl,
And hope and doubt alternate seize her soul. Pope.
2. To take forcible possession of by law.
An escheator of London had arrested a clothier that was outlawed, and seized his goods. Camden.
It was judged by the highest kind of judgment, that he should be banished, and his whole estate confiscated and seized, and his houses pulled down. Bacon.
3. To make possessed.
So th' one for wrong, the other strives for right:
As when a griffin, seized of his prey;
A dragon fierce encount'reth in his flight,
Through wildest air making his idle way. Fa. Queen.
So Pluto, seiz'd of Proserpine, convey'd
To hell's tremendous gloom th' affrighted maid,
There grimly smil'd, pleas'd with the beauteous prize,
Nor envy'd Jove his sunshine and his skies. Addison. Cato.
- To SEIZE. v. n. To fix the grasp or the power on any thing.
Fairst Cordelia,
Thee and thy virtues here I seize upon:
Be't lawful I take up what's cast away? Shakespeare. K. Lear.
Where there is a design of supplanting, that necessarily requires another of accusing: even Jezebel projects not to seize on Naboth's vineyard without a precedent charge. Dec. of Piety.
- SEIZIN*. n. f. [saïne, French.]
1. [In law.] Is of two sorts: seisin in fact, and seisin in law:
Seisin in fact, is when a corporal possession is taken: seisin in law, is when something is done which the law accounteth a seisin, as an inrolment. This is as much as a right to lands and tenements, though the owner be by wrong dispossessed of them. Cowell.
2. The act of taking possession.
Every indulged sin gives Satan livery and seisin of his heart;
and a power to dispose of it as he pleases. Decay of Piety.
Seisin is the same in the canon law as livery and seisin at the common law. Ayliffe's Parergon.
3. The things possessed.
Many recoveries were had as well by heirs as successors of the seizin of their predecessors. Hale.
- SEIZURE*. n. f. [from seize.]
1. The act of seizing.
2. The thing seized.
Sufficient that thy pray'rs are heard, and death,
Then due by sentence when thou did'st transgress,
Defeated of his seizure, many days
Giv'n thee of grace. Milton's Paradise Lost.
3. The act of taking forcible possession.
Thy lands, and all things that thou do'st call thine,
Worth seizure, do we seize into our hands. Shakespeare.
In the general town he maintained a seizure, and possession of the whole. Watson.
Henry continued to burn protestants, after he had cast off the pope; and his seizure of ecclesiastical revenues cannot be reckoned as a mark of the church's liberty. Swift.
4. Gripe; possession.
And shall these hands, so lately purg'd of blood,
Unyoke this seizure, and this kind regret? Shakespeare.
Make o'er thy honour by a deed of trust,
And give me seizure of the mighty wealth. Dryden.
5. Catch.
Let there be no sudden seizure of a lapsed syllable to play upon it. Watts.
- SELCOUTH*. adj. [selb, rare, Sax. and couth, known.] Uncommon. Spenser. 'T he same with uncouth.
- SELDOM*. adv. [selban, rarely; selson, more rarely; sel-bort, most rarely. Selban is supposed to be contracted from selben, or selb, rare, and præne, when, Saxon. Selden.
Dutch; selban, German.] Rarely; not often; not frequently.
Wisdom and youth are seldom joined in one; and the ordinary course of the world is more according to Job's observation, who giveth men advice to seek wisdom amongst the ancients, and in the length of days understanding. Hooker.
There is true joy conveyed to the heart by preventing grace, which pardoning grace seldom gives. South's Sermons.

The footmen, selected out of all the provinces, were greatly diminished, being now scarce eight thousand strong. Kneller.

The pious chief
A hundred youths from all his train selected. Dryden.
SELECT. adj. [from the verb.] Nicely chosen; choice; culled out on account of superiour excellence.

To the nuptial bow'r
I led her, blushing like the morn: all heav'n,
And happy constellations, on that hour Shed their selectest influence. Milton's Parad. Lost.

'Tis plain it then may absent be from all. Blackmore.

Who then will this self-existence call? Blackmore.

Shall nature, erring from her first command,
Self-preservation fall by her own hand? Granville.

Low nonense is the talent of a cold phlegmatick temper:
a writer of this complexion gropes his way softly amongst self-contradiction, and grovels in absurdities. Addison.

This fatal hypocrisy and self-deceit is taken notice of in these words, Who can understand his errors? Cleanse thou me from secret faults. Addison's Spectator.

The guilt of perjury is so self-evident, that it was always reckoned amongst the greatest crimes, by those who were only governed by the light of reason. Addison.

Self-sufficiency proceeds from inexperience. Addison.

Men had better own their ignorance than advance doctrines which are self-contradictory. Spectator.

Light, which of all bodies is nearest allied to spirit, is also most diffusive and self-communicative. Norris.

Thus we see in bodies, the more of kin they are to spirit in subtlety and refinement, the more spreading are they and self- diffusive. Norris.

God, who is an absolute spiritual act, and who is such a pure light as in which there is no darkness, must needs be infinitely self-impacting and communicative. Norris.

Every animal is conscious of some individual, self-moving,
self-determining principle. Pope and Arbuthn. Mart. Scrib.

Nick does not pretend to be a gentleman: he is a tradesman, a self-seeking wretch. Arbuthn. John Bull.

By the blast of self-opinion mov'd,
We wish to charm, and seek to be belov'd. Prior.

Living and understanding substances do most clearly demonstrate to philosophical inquirers the necessary self- existence, power, wisdom, and beneficence of their maker. Bentley's Sermons.

If it can intrinsically stir itself, and either commence or alter its course, it must have a principle of self-activity, which is life and sense. Bentley's Sermons.

This desire of existence is a natural affection of the soul;
it's self-preservation in the highest and truest meaning. Bentley.

The philosophers, and even the Epicureans, maintained the self-sufficiency of the Godhead, and seldom or never sacrificed at all. Bentley's Sermons.

Matter is not endued with self-motion, nor with a power to alter the course in which it is put: it is merely passive, and must ever continue in that state it is settled in. Cheyne.

I took not arms, 'till urg'd by self-defence,
The eldest law of nature. Rousse's Emile. Stepmother.

His labour and study would have shewn his early mistakes, and cured him of self-flattering delusions. Watts.

This is not to be done in a rash and self-sufficient manner; but with an humble dependence on divine grace, while we walk among sinners. Watts.

The religion of Jesus, with all its self-denials, virtues, and devotions, is very practicable. Watts.

I heard in Crete, this island's name;
For 'twas in Crete, my native soil, I came Self-banish'd thence. Pope's Odyssey.

Achilles's courage is furious and untractable;

They who reach Parnassus' lofty crown,
Employ their pains to spurn some others down;
And while self-love each jealous writer rules,
Contending wits become the sport of fools. Pope.
It may be thought that Ulysses here is too ostentatious, and that he dwells more than modestly allows upon his own accomplishments; but self-praise is sometimes no fault. Brown.
No wonder such a spirit, in such a situation, is provoked beyond the regards of religion or self-conviction. Swift.
SEMPHEAL. n. f. [sempheal, Latin.] A plant. The same with SANICLE, which see.
SELFISH. adj. [from self.] Attentive only to one's own interest; void of regard for others.
What could the most aspiring selfish man desire more, were he to form the notion of a being to whom he would recommend himself, than such a knowledge as can discover the least appearance of perfection, and such a goodness as will proportion a reward to it? Addison's Spectator.
Passions, though selfish, if their means be fair,
Lift under reason, and deserve her care;
Those that imparted court a nobler aim,
Exalt their kind, and take some virtue's name. Pope.
SELFISHNESS. n. f. [from selfish.] Attention to his own interest, without any regard to others; self-love.
This sublimer love, being, by an intimate conjunction with its object, thoroughly refined from all base dross of selfishness and interest, nobly begets a perfect submission of our wills to the will of God. Boyle's Seraphick Love.
SELFISHLY. adv. [from selfish.] With regard only to his own interest; without love of others.
He can your merit selfishly approve,
And shew the sense of it without the love. Pope.
SELFISHNESS. adj. [from self and same.] Numerically the same.
I have no great cause to look for other than the self-same portion and lot, which your manner hath been hitherto to lay on them that concur not in opinion with you. Hooker's Pref.
Flight pursu'd one way the self-same hour. Milton.
I have been base,
Base ev'n to him from whom I did receive
All that a son could to a parent give;
Behold me punish'd in the self-same kind;
Th' ungrateful does a more ungrateful find. Dryden.
SELTION. n. f. [sel, low Latin.] A ridge of land. Ainslie.
SELL. trans. [from sell.] Sell is retained in Scotland for sell, and sell in the plural for selles.
They turn round like griddle-stones,
Which they dig out fro' the dells,
For their barns bread, wives and selles. Ben. Johnson.
SELL. n. f. [sel, French; sel, Latin.] A saddle.
Turning to that place, in which
He left his lofty steed with golden selles,
And goodly gorgeous barbes, him found not there. P. Qu.
To SELL. v. a. [sell, Saxon; sel, Icelandic.] To give for a price; the word correlative to buy; to vend.
The Midianites sell him unto Egypt, unto Potiphar. Gen.
Let us sell him to the Ishmaelites. Gen. xxxvii. 27.
The first tenth part I gave to the sons of Aaron, and another
I sell away. Tob. i. 7.
All the inns and public houses are obliged to furnish themselves with corn, which is sell out at a much dearer rate than it is bought up. Addison on Italy.
You have made an order that ale should be sell for three half-pence a quart. Swift.
To SELL. v. n. To have commerce or traffick with one.
I will buy with you, sell with you; but I will not eat with you. Shakespeare. Merchant of Venice.
Consult not with a buyer of selling. Bede's xxxvii. 11.
SELLANDER. n. f. A dry scab in a horse's hough or pastern. Ainsworth.
SELLER. n. f. [from sell.] The person that sells; vender.
To things of sale a seller's praise belongs. Shakespeare.
The name of the agent, of the seller, notary, and witnesses, are in both instruments. Addison on Italy.
SELVAGE. n. f. [Of this word I know not the etymology.
Skinner thinks selvage is said as salvage, from its saving the cloth.] The edge of cloth where it is closed by complicating the threads.
Make loops of blue upon the edge of the one curtain from the selvage in the coupling. Ex. xxvii. 4.
SELVES. The plural of self.
Consciousness being interrupted, and we losing sight of our past selves, doubts are raised whether we are the same. Locke.
SEMBLABLE. adj. [semblable, French.] Like; resembling.
Then be abhor'd
All sects, societies, and throngs of men!
His semblable, yea himself, Timon diffinds. Shakespeare.
With semblable reason we might expect a regularity in the winds. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
SEMBLABLY. adv. [from semblable.] With resemblance.
A gallant knight he was, his name was Blunt;
Semblably furnish'd like the king himself. Shakespeare. H. IV.

SEMBLANCE. n. f. [semblance, Fr. from semblant.]
1. Likeness; resemblance; similitude; representation.
Solicit Henry with her wondrous praise;
Bethink thee on her virtues, that surmount
Her natural graces, that extinguish art:
Repeat their semblance often. Shakespeare.
She's but the sign and semblance of her honour:
Behold how like a maid she blushes here!
O, what authority and shew of truth
Can cunning sin cover itself withal! Shakespeare.
He with high words, that bore
Semblance of worth, not substance, gently rais'd
Their fainting courage, and dispell'd their fears. Milton.
This last effort brought forth the opinion, that these bodies are not what they seem to be; that they are no shells, but mere sportings of active nature, and only semblances or imitations of shells. Woodward.
It is not his meaning that we put on the outward face and semblance of virtue, only to conceal and disguise our vice. Reg.
2. Appearance; show; figure.
Be you the soldier; for you likest are,
For many semblance and for skill in war. Spenser.
Their semblance kind, and mild their gestures were,
Peace in their hands, and friendship in their face. Fairfax.
All that fair and good in thy divine
Semblance, and in thy beauty's heavenly ray, United I behold. Milt. Par. Lost.
SEMBLANT. adj. [semblant, French.] Like; resembling; having the appearance of anything. Little used.
In despite of age, of impious flame,
And eating time, thy picture, like thy fame,
Entire may last; that as their eyes survey
The semblant shade, men yet unborn may say,
Thus great, thus gracious look'd Britannia's queen;
Her brow thus smooth, her look was thus serene. Prior.
SEMBLANT. n. f. Show; figure; resemblance; representation. Not in use.
Her purpose was not such as she did feign,
Ne yet her person such as it was seen;
But under simple shew, and semblant plain,
Lurks false Duella, secretly unseen. Fairy Queen.
Full lively is the semblant, tho' the substance dead. Spens.
SEMBLATIVE. adj. [from semblant.] Suitable; accommodate;
fit; resembling.
Diana's lip
Is not more smooth and ruby; thy small pipe
Is as the maiden's organ, shrill and sound;
And all is semblative a woman's part. Shak. Twelfth Night.
To SEMBLEE. v. n. [sembler, French.] To represent; to make a likeness. Little used.
Let Europe, sav'd, the column high erect,
Than Trajan's higher, or than Antonine's,
Where sembling art may carve the fair effect;
And full achievement of thy great designs. Prior.
SEMI. n. f. [Latin.] A word which, used in composition, signifies half: as semicircle, half a circle.
SEMIANNULAR. adj. [semi and annulus, a ring.] Half round.
Another bear tusk, somewhat slenderer, and of a semiannu- lar figure. Gray's Museum.
SEMIARRE. n. f. [semibreve, French.]
Semibreve is a note in music relating to time, and is the last in augmentation. It is commonly called the master-note, or measure-note, or time-note, as being of a certain determinate measure or length of time by itself; and all the other notes of augmentation and diminution are adjusted to its value. Harris.
He takes my hand, and as a still which stays
A semibreve, 'twixt each drop, he niggardly;
As loth to enrich me, he tells many a lye. Dante.
SEMICIRCLE. n. f. [semicirculus, Lat. semi and circle.] A half round; part of a circle divided by the diameter.
Black brows
Become some women best, so they be in a semicircle,
Or a half-moon, made with a pen. Shakespeare.
Has he given the lye
In circle, or oblique, or semicircle,
Or direct parallel?
The chains that held my left leg gave me the liberty of walking backwards and forwards in a semicircle. Swift.
SEMICIRCLED. adj. [semi and circular.] Half round.
SEMICIRCULAR. adj. [semi and circular.] Half round.
The firm fixure of thy foot would give an excellent motion to thy gait, in a semicircled farthingale. Shakespeare.
The rainbow is caused by the rays of the sun falling upon a roil and opposite cloud, whereof some reflected, others re-fracted, beget the semicircular variety we call the rainbow.
The seas are inclosed between the two semicircular moles that surround it. Addison on Italy.
SEMICOLON. n. f. [semi and colon.] Half a colon; a point made thus (;) to note a greater pause than that of a comma.

SEMDIA'METER.

SEM

SEMDIA'METER. n. f. [semi and diameter.] Half the line which, drawn through the centre of a circle, divides it into two equal parts; a straight line drawn from the circumference to the center of a circle.
Their difference is as little considerable as a semidiameter of the earth in two measures of the highest heaven, the one taken from the surface of the earth, the other from its centre:
the disproportion is just nothing. Mare.
The force of this instrument consists in the disproportion of distance betwixt the semidiameter of the cylinder and the semidiameter of the bundle with the spokes. Wilkins.
SEMDIAPHANEITY. n. f. [semi and diaphaneity.] Half transparency; imperfect transparency.
The transparency or semidiaphaneity of the superficial corpuscles of bigger bodies may have an interest in the production of their colours. Boyle on Colours.
SEMDIAPHANOUS. adj. [semi and diaphanous.] Half transparent; imperfectly transparent.
Another plate, finely variegated with a semidiaphanous grey or sky, yellow and brown. Woodward on Fossils.
SEMDIOUBLE. n. f. [semi and double.] In the Romish breviary, such offices and feasts as are celebrated with less solemnity than the double ones, but yet with more than the single ones. Boyle.
SEMDIOSCULOUS. adj. [semi and osculous, Latin.] Having a semiofset.
SEMDIOFRET. n. f. [semi and ofret.] Among florists, an half flourish, which is tubulous at the beginning like a flower, and afterwards expanded in the form of a tongue. Bailey.
SEMDIUID. adj. [semi and fluid.] Imperfectly fluid.
Phlegm, or pettite, is a sort of semifluid, it being so far solid that one part draws along several other parts adhering to it, which do not happen in a perfect fluid, and yet no part will draw the whole mass, as happens in a perfect solid. Art.
SEMDIUNAR. adj. [semidunare, Fr. semi and luna, Latin.]
SEMDIUNARY. n. f. Resembling in form a half moon.
The eyes are guarded with a semilunar ridge. Gray.
SEMDIMETAL. n. f. [semi and metal.] Half metal; imperfect metal.
Semimetals are metallic fossils, heavy, opaque, of a bright glittering surface, and not malleable under the hammer; such as quicksilver, antimony, cobalt, with the arsenicks, bismuth, zinc, with its ore calamine: to these may be added the semi-metallic recements, such as tutty and pampholyx. Hill.
SEMINALITY. n. f. [from semen, Latin.]
1. The nature of seed.
As though there were a seminality in urine, or that, like the seed, it carried with it the idea of every part, they foolishly conceive we visibly behold therein the anatomy of every particle. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
2. The power of being produced.
In the seeds of wheat, there lieth obscurely the seminality of darnel. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
SEMINAL. adj. [seminal, French; seminis, Latin.]
1. Belonging to seed.
2. Contained in the seed; radical.
Had our senses never presented us with those obvious seminal principles of apparent generations, we should never have suspected that a plant or animal would have proceeded from such unlikely materials. Clarke's Scept.
Though we cannot prolong the period of a commonwealth beyond the decree of heaven, or the date of its nature, any more than human life beyond the strength of the seminal virtue, yet we may manage a sickly constitution, and preserve a strong one. Swift.
SEMINARY. n. f. [seminaire, Fr. seminarium from semino, Lat.]
1. The ground where any thing is sown to be afterwards transplanted.
Some, at the first transplanting trees out of their seminaries, cut them off about an inch from the ground, and plant them like quickset.
2. The place or original stock whence any thing is brought.
This stratum is still expanded at top of all, serving for a common integument, and being the seminary or promptuary that furnisheth forth matter for the formation and increment of animal and vegetable bodies. Woodward.
3. Seminal state.
The hand of God, who first created the earth, hath wisely contrived them in their proper seminaries, and where they best maintain the intention of their species. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
4. Original; first principles.
Nothing subministrates apter matter to be converted into pellucid seminaries, sooner than fleams of nasty folks and beggars. Harvey on the Plague.
5. Breeding place; place of education, from whence scholars are transplanted into life.
It was the seat of the greatest monarchy, and the seminary of the greatest men of the world, whilst it was heathen. Bacon.
The inns of court must be the worst instituted seminaries in any Christian country. Swift.

SEM

SEMINATION. n. f. [from semino, Latin.] The act of sowing.
SEMINIFICAL. adj. [semen and facio, Latin.] Productive of SEMINIFICK. } seed.
We are made to believe, that in the fourteenth year males are seminifical and pubescent; but he that shall inquire into the generality, will rather adhere unto Aristotle. Brown.
SEMINIFICATION. n. f.
Seminification is the propagation from the seed or seminal parts. Hale's Origin of Mankind.
SEMIOPACOUS. adj. [semi and opacus, Latin.] Half dark.
Semiofacous bodies are such as, looked upon in an ordinary light, and not held betwixt it and the eye, are not wont to be discriminated from the rest of opacous bodies. Boyle.
SEMIPEDAL. adj. [semi and pedis, Latin.] Containing half a foot.
SEMIPEPISCUCOUS. adj. [semi and perspicuus, Latin.] Half transparent; imperfectly clear.
A kind of amethystine flint, not composed of crystals or grains; but one intire massy stone, semiperspicuus, and of a pale blue, almost of the colour of some cow's horns. Gray.
SEMIORDINATE. n. f. [In conic sections.] A line drawn at right angles to and bisected by the axis, and reaching from one side of the section to another; the half of which is properly the semiordinate, but is now called the ordinate. Harris.
SEMIPELLOCID. adj. [semi and pellucidus, Latin.] Half clear; imperfectly transparent.
A light grey semipellucid flint, of much the same complexion with the common Indian agat. Woodward.
SEMIPOOF. n. f. [semi and proof.] The proof of a single evidence. Bailey.
SEMIQUADRATE. n. f. [In astronomy.] An aspect of the SEMIQUARTILE. } planets when distant from each other forty five degrees, or one sign and a half. Bailey.
SEMIQUAVER. n. f. [In music.] A note containing half the quantity of the quaver. Bailey.
SEMIQUINTILE. n. f. [In astronomy.] An aspect of the planets when at the distance of thirty-six degrees from one another. Bailey.
SEMISEXILE. n. f. [In astronomy.] A semisextile; an aspect of the planets when they are distant from each other one twelfth part of a circle, or thirty degrees. Bailey.
SEMI SPHERICAL. adj. [semi and spherical.] Belonging to half a sphere. Bailey.
SEMI SPHEROIDAL. adj. [semi and spheroidal.] Formed like a half spheroid.
SEMI TERTIAN. n. f. [semi and tertian.] An ague compounded of a tertian and a quotidian. Bailey.
The natural product of such a cold moist year are tertians,
semitertians, and some quartans. Arbutnot on Air.
SEMITONE. n. f. [semiton, French.] In music, one of the degrees of continuous intervals of concords. Bailey.
SEMITOQUE. n. f. [semi and toque.] A consonant which makes an imperfect sound, or does not demand a total occlusion of the mouth.
When Homer would represent any agreeable object, he makes use of the smoothest vowels and most flowing semi- vowels. Brown's Notes to the Odyssey.
SEMPERVIVE. n. f. [semper and vivus, Latin, that is, always alive.] A plant.
The greater sempervive will put out branches two or three years; but they wrap the root in an oil cloth once in half a year. Bacon.
SEMPITERNAL. adj. [sempiternus, Fr. sempiternus, from semper and eternus, Latin.]
1. Eternal in futurity; having beginning, but no end.
Those, though they suppose the world not to be eternal, a parte ante, are not contented to suppose it to be semi- eternal, or eternal a parte post; but will carry up the creation of the world to an immense antiquity. Hale.
2. In poetry it is used simply for eternal.
Should we the long depending scale ascend
Of sons and fathers, will it never end?
If 'twill, then must we through the order run,
To some one man whose being ne'er begun;
If that one man was sempiternal, why Did he, since independent, ever die? Blackmore.
SEMPITERNITY. n. f. [sempiternitas, Latin.] Future duration without end.
The future eternity, or sempiternity of the world, being admitted, though the eternity a parte ante be denied, there will be a future infinity for the emanation of the divine goodness. Hale.
SEMPITRESS. n. f. [sempitress, Saxon.] A woman whose business is to sew; a woman who lives by her needle.
Two hundred sempitresses were employed to make me shirts, and linnen for bed and table, which they were forced to quilt together in several folds. Culliver's Travels.
The tuck'd up sempitress walks with hasty strides. Swift.
SENNARY. adj. [senarius, semi, Latin.] Belonging to the number six; containing six.
SENATE.

SEN

SENATE. n. f. [senatus, Latin; senat, French.] An assembly of counsellors; a body of men set apart to consult for the publick good.

We debate

The nature of our feats, which will in time break ope
The locks o' th' senate, and bring in the crows
To peck the eagles. Shak. Coriolanus.

There they shall found

Their government, and their great senate chuse. Milton.
He had not us'd excursions, spears, or darts,
But counsel, order, and such aged arts;
Which, if our ancestors had not retain'd,
The senate's name our council had not gain'd. Denham.
Gallus was welcom'd to the sacred strand,
The senate rising to salute their guest. Dryden.

SENATEHOUSE. n. f. [senate and house.] Place of publick council.

The nobles in great earnestness are going

All to the senatehouse; some news is come. Shakespeare.

SENATOR. n. f. [senator, Latin; senateur, French.] A publick counsellor.

Most unwise patricians,

You grave but reckless senators. Shakespeare. Coriolanus.

As if to ev'ry sop it might belong,

Like senators, to censure, right or wrong. Granville.

SENATORIAL. adj. [senatorius, Lat. senatorial, senatorien, Fr.]

SENATORIAN. s. Belonging to senators; befitting senators.

TO SEND. v. a. [sandgan, Gothick; senban, Saxon; senden, Dutch.]

1. To dispatch from one place to another.

There shalt thou serve thine enemies, which the Lord shall send against thee, in hunger and in thirst. Deut. xxviii. 48.

Send our brother with us, and we will go down. Gen. xliii.

His citizens sent a message after him, saying, we will not have this man to reign over us. Lu. xix. 14.

The messenger came, and shewed David all that Joab had sent him for. 2 Sa. xi. 22.

My overshadowing spirit and might with thee

I send along. Milton.

Send down men he first sends off to shore. Dryden.

Servants, sent on messages, stay out somewhat longer than the message requires. Swift.

2. To commission by authority to go and act.

There have been commissions

Sent down among them, which have flow'd the heart

Of all their loyalties. Shakespeare. Henry VIII.

3. To grant as from a distant place: as, if God send life.

I pray thee send me good speed this day, and shew kindness unto my master. Gen. xxiv. 12.

O send out thy light and thy truth; let them lead me. Pf.

4. To inflict, as from a distance.

The Lord shall send upon thee curfings, vexation, and rebuke, in all that thou settest thine hand unto. Deut. xxviii.

5. To emit; to immit; to produce.

The water sends forth plants that have no roots fixed in the bottom, being almost but leaves. Bacon's Nat. History.

The senses send in only the influxes of material things, and the imagination and memory present only their pictures or images, when the objects themselves are absent. Cheyne.

6. To diffuse; to propagate.

When the fury took her stand on high,

A hiss from all the snaky tire went round:

The dreadful signal all the rocks rebound,

And through the Achaian cities send the found. Pope.

7. To let fly; to cast or shoot.

To SEND. v. n.

1. To deliver or dispatch a message.

I have made bold to send in to your wife:

My suit is that she will to Desdemona

Procure me some access. Shakespeare. Othello.

They could not attempt their perfect reformation in church and state, 'till those votes were utterly abolished; therefore they sent the same day again to the king. Clarendon.

2. To SEND for. To require by message to come, or cause to be brought.

Go with me some few of you, and see the place; and then you may send for my sick, which bring on land. Bacon.

He sent for me; and, while I rais'd his head,

He threw his aged arms about my neck,

And, seeing that I wept, he press'd me close. Dryden.

SENDER. n. f. [from send.] He that sends.

This was a merry message.

—We hope to make the sender blush at it. Shak. H. V.

Love that comes too late,

Like a remorseful pardon slowly carried,

To the great sender turns a four offence. Shakespeare.

Best with the best, the sender, not the sent. Milton.

SENESCENCE. n. f. [senescere, Latin.] The state of growing old; decay by time.

The earth and all things will continue in the state wherein they now are, without the least senescence or decay, without jarring, disorder, or invasion of one another. Woodward.

SEN

SENESCHAL. n. f. [seneschal, French, of uncertain original.]

1. One who had in great houses the care of feasts, or domestick ceremonies.

John earl of Huntingdon, under his seal of arms, made for

John Arundel, of Trerice, seneschal of his household, as well in peace as in war. Carver's Survey of Cornwall.

Marshall'd feast,

Serv'd up in hall with sewers and seneschals;

The skill of artifice, or office, mean! Milton's Par. Lost.

The seneschal rebuk'd, in haste withdrew;

With equal haste a menial train pursue. Pope's Odyssey.

2. It afterwards came to signify other offices.

SENGREEN. n. f. A plant. Ainsworth.

SE'NILE. adj. [senilis, Latin.] Belonging to old age; consequent on old age.

My green youth made me very unripe for a task of that nature, whose difficulty requires that it should be handled by a person in whom nature, education, and time have happily matched a senile maturity of judgment with youthful vigour of fancy. Boyle on Colours.

SE'NIOR. n. f. [senior, Latin.]

1. One older than another; one who on account of longer time has some superiority.

How can you admit your seniors to the examination or allowing of them, not only being inferior in office and calling, but in gifts also? Whitgift.

2. An aged person.

A senior of the place replies,

Well read, and curious of antiquities. Dryden.

SENIORITY. n. f. [from senior.] Eldership; priority of birth.

As in all civil insurrections the ring-leader is looked on with a peculiar severity, so, in this case, the first provoker has, by his seniority and primogeniture, a double portion of the guilt.

Government of the Tongue.

He was the elder brother, and Ulysses might be assigned to his care, by the right due to his seniority. Brown.

SE'NNA. n. f. [senas, Latin.] A physical tree.

The flower, for the most part, consists of five leaves, which are placed orbicularly, and expand in form of a rose:

the point afterwards becomes a plain, incurved, bivalve pod, which is full of seeds, each being separated by a double thin membrane. The species are three. The third sort, that used in medicine, is at present very rare. Miller.

What rhubarb, senna, or what purgative drug,

Would scour these English hence! Shak. Macbeth.

Senna tree is of two sorts: the bastard senna, and the scorpion senna, both which yield a pleasant leaf and flower. Mort.

SE'NNIGHT. n. f. [Contracted from seven night.] The space of seven nights and days; a week. See FORTNIGHT.

Time trots hard with a young maid between the contract of her marriage and the day it is solemnized: if the interim be but a sennight, time's pace is so hard that it seems the length of seven years. Shakespeare. As you like it.

SE'NO'CLAR. adj. [seni and oculus, Latin.] Having six eyes.

Most animals are binocular, spiders octonocular, and some senocular. Darwin's Physico-Theology.

SENSA'TION. n. f. [sensation, French; senfatio, school Latin.]

Perception by means of the senses.

Diversity of constitution, or other circumstances, vary the sensations; and to them of Java pepper is cold. Glanv. Scpf.

The brain, disordered by a cold, beating against the root of the auditory nerve, and protruded to the tympanum, causes the sensation of noise. Harvey on Consumption.

This great source of most of the ideas we have, depending wholly upon our senses, and derived by them to the understanding, I call sensation. Locke.

When we are asleep, joy and sorrow give us more vigorous sensations of pain or pleasure than at any other time. Adams.

The happiest, upon a fair estimate, have stronger sensations of pain than pleasure. Rogers.

SENSE. n. f. [sens, French; sentus, Latin.]

1. Faculty or power by which external objects are perceived;

the sight; touch; hearing; smell; taste.

This pow'r is sense; which from abroad doth bring

The colour, taste, and touch; and scent, and sound,

The quantity and shape of ev'ry thing

Within earth's centre, or heav'n's circle found:

And though things sensible be numberless,

But only five the sense's organs be;

And in those five, all things their forms express,

Which we can touch, taste, feel, or hear or see. Davies.

Then is the soul a nature, which contains

The pow'r of sense within a greater pow'r,

Which doth employ and use the sense's pains;

But sits and rules within her private bow'r. Davies.

Both contain

Within them ev'ry lower faculty

Of sense, whereby they hear, see, smell, touch, taste. Milt.

Of the five senses, two are usually and most properly called the sense of learnings, as being most capable of receiving communication of thought and notions by selected signs; and these are hearing and seeing. Holder's Elements of Speech.

There's

SEN

2. Perception by the senses; sensation.

In a living creature, though never so great, the sense and the affects of any one part of the body instantly make a transcursion throughout the whole. Bacon's Natural History.

If we had nought but sense, then only they Should have found minds which have their senses found;

But wisdom grows when senses do decay,

And folly most in quickest sense is found. Davies.

Such is the mighty swiftness of your mind,

That, like the earth's, it leaves the sense behind. Dryden.

3. Perception of intellect; apprehension of mind.

This Basilus, having the quick sense of a lover, took as though his mistress had given him a secret reprehension. Sidn.

God, to remove his ways from human sense,

Plac'd heav'n from earth so far. Milton.

Why hast thou added sense of endless woes?

He should have liv'd, Milton.

4. Sensibility; quickness or keenness of perception.

He should have liv'd,

Save that his riotous youth, with dangerous sense,

Might in the times to come have ta'en revenge. Shakespeare.

5. Understanding; soundness of faculties; strength of natural reason.

Opprest nature sleeps:

This rest might yet have balm'd thy broken sense. Shakespeare.

God hath endued mankind with powers and abilities, which we call natural light and reason, and common sense. Bentley.

There's something previous ev'n to taste; 'tis sense,

Good sense, which only is the gift of heav'n;

And, though no science, fairly worth the sev'n:

A light within yourself you must perceive;

Jones and Le Notre have it not to give. Pope.

6. Reason; reasonable meaning.

He raves; his words are loose

As heaps of sand, and scattering wide from sense:

You see he knows not me, his natural father;

That now the wind is got into his head,

And turns his brains to frenzy. Dryd. Spanish Fryar.

7. Opinion; notion; judgment.

I speak my private but impartial sense

With freedom, and, I hope, without offence. Roscommon.

8. Conscientiousness; conviction.

In the due sense of my want of learning, I only make a confession of my own faith. Dryden.

9. Moral perception.

Some are so hardened in wickedness, as to have no sense of the most friendly offices. L'Estrange.

10. Meaning; import.

In this sense to be preferred from all sin is not impossible.

Hooker, b. v.

My hearty friends,

You take me in too dolorous a sense. Shakespeare.

This comes out of a haughty presumption, that because we are encouraged to believe that in some sense all things are made for man, that therefore they are not made at all for themselves. More's Antidote against Atheism.

All before Richard I. is before time of memory; and what is since, is, in a legal sense, within the time of memory. Hale.

In one sense it is, indeed, a building of gold and silver upon the foundation of Christianity. Tillotson.

When a word has been used in two or three senses, and has made a great inroad for error, drop one or two of those senses, and leave it only one remaining, and affix the other senses or ideas to other words. Watts's Logic.

SE'NSED. part. [from sense.] Perceived by the senses. A word

not in use.

Let the sciolist tell me, why things must needs be so as his individual senses represent them: is he sure that objects are

The verification is as beautiful as the description complete; every ear must be sensible of it. Broome's Notes on the Odyssey.

6. Having moral perception; having the quality of being affected by moral good or ill.

If thou wert sensible of courtesy, I should not make so great a shew of zeal. Shakespeare.

7. Having quick intellectual feeling; being easily or strongly affected. Even I, the bold, the sensible of wrongs, Restrained by shame, was forced to hold my tongue. Dryd.

8. Convinced; persuaded. A low life. They are very sensible that they had better have pushed their conquests on the other side of the Adriatick; for then their territories would have lain together. Addison.

9. In low conversation it has sometimes the sense of reasonable; judicious; wise. I have been tired with accounts from sensible men, furnished with matters of fact, which have happened within their own knowledge. Addison.

SENSIBLENESS. n. f. [from sensible.] 1. Possibility to be perceived by the senses. 2. Actual perception by mind or body. 3. Quickness of perception; sensibility.

The sensibleness of the eye renders it subject to pain, as also unfit to be dressed with sharp medicaments. Sharp.

4. Painful consciousness. There is no condition of soul more wretched than that of the senseless obdurate finner, being a kind of numbness of soul; and, contrariwise, this feeling and sensibleness, and forrow for sin, the most vital quality. Hammond.

5. Judgment; reasonableness. An use not admitted but in conversation. Locke.

SENSIBLY. adv. [from sensible.] 1. Perceptibly to the senses. He is your brother, lords; sensibly fed Of that self-blood, that first gave life to you. Shakespeare.

A sudden pain in my right foot increased sensibly. Temple.

The salts of human urine may, by the violent motion of the blood, be turned alkaline, and even corrosive; and so they affect the fibres of the brain more sensibly than other parts. Arb.

2. With perception of either mind or body. That church of Christ, which we properly term his body mystical, can be but one; neither can that one be sensibly discerned by any, inasmuch as the parts thereof are some in heaven already with Christ. Hooker.

3. Externally; by impression on the senses. With quick intellectual perception: 5. In low language, judiciously; reasonably.

SENSITIVELY. adv. [from sensitive.] Having sense or perception, but not reason. The sensitive faculty may have a sensitive love of some sensitive objects, which though moderated so as not to fall into sin; yet, through the nature of man's sense, may express itself more sensitively towards the inferior object than towards God: this is a piece of human frailty. Hammond.

All the actions of the sensitive appetite are in painting called passions, because the soul is agitated by them, and because the body suffers and is sensibly altered. Dryden.

Bodies are such as are endued with a vegetative soul, as plants; a sensitive soul, as animals; or a rational soul, as the body of man. Ray.

SENSITIVE PLANT. n. f. [mimosa, Latin.] A plant. The flower consists of one leaf, which is shaped like a funnel, having many lamina in the centre: these flowers are collected into a round head: from the bottom of the flower rises the pistillum, which afterwards becomes an oblong flat-jointed pod, which opens both ways, and contains in each partition one roundish seed. Of this plant the humble plants are a species, which are so called, because, upon being touched, the pedicle of their leaves falls downward; but the leaves of the sensitive plant are only contracted. Miller.

Vegetables have many of them some degrees of motion, and, upon the different application of other bodies to them, do very briskly alter their figure and motion, and so have obtained the name of sensitive plants, from a motion which has some resemblance to that which in animals follows upon sensation. Locke.

Whence does it happen, that the plant which well we name the sensitive, should move and feel? Whence know her leaves to answer her command, And with quick horror fly the neighb'ring hand? Prior.

The sensitive plant is so call'd, because, as soon as you touch it, the leaf shrinks. Mortimer.

SENSITIVELY. adv. [from sensitive.] In a sensitive manner. The sensitive faculty, through the nature of man's sense, may express itself more sensitively towards an inferior object than towards God: this is a piece of frailty. Hammond.

SENSORIUM. n. f. [Latin.] 1. The part where the senses transmit their perceptions to the mind; the seat of sense. Spiritual species, both visible and audible, will work upon the sensories, though they move not any other body. Bacon.

As found in a bell or musical string, or other sounding body, is nothing but a trembling motion, and the air nothing but that motion propagated from the object, in the sensory. 'tis a sense of that motion under the form of sound. Newton.

Is not the sensory of animals the place to which the sensitive substance is present, and into which the sensitive species of things are carried through the nerves of the brain, that there they may be perceived by their immediate presence to that substance? Newton's Opt.

2. Organ of sensation. That we all have double sensories, two eyes, two ears, is an effectual confutation of this atheistical sophism. Beulley.

SENSUAL. adj. [from sensual, French.] 1. Consisting in sense; depending on sense; affecting the senses. Men in general are too partial, in favour of a sensual appetite, to take notice of truth when they have found it. L'Espr.

Far as creation's ample range extends, The scale of sensual, mental pow'r's ascends. Pope.

2. Pleasing to the senses; carnal; not spiritual. The greatest part of men are such as prefer their own private good before all things, even that good which is sensual before whatsoever is most divine. Hooker.

3. Devoted to sense; lewd; luxurious. From amidst them rose Belial, the dissolute spirit that fell, The sensualist; and, after Asmodai, The fleshliest incubus. Paradise Regain'd.

No small part of virtue consists in abstaining from that where sensual men place their felicity. Atterbury.

SENSUALIST. n. f. [from sensual.] A carnal person; one devoted to corporal pleasures. Let atheists and sensualists satisfy themselves as they are able; the former of which will find, that, as long as reason keeps her ground, religion neither can nor will lose her's. South.

SENSUALITY. n. f. [from sensual.] Devotedness to the senses; addition to brutal and corporal pleasures. But you are more intemperate in your blood Than Venus, or those pamper'd animals That rage in savage sensuality. Shakespeare.

Kill not her quickning pow'r with surfeitings; Mar not her sense with sensuality: Cast not her serious wit on idle things; Make not her free will slave to vanity. Davies.

Sensuality is one kind of pleasure, such an one as it is. South. They avoid dress, lest they should have affections tainted by any sensuality, and diverted from the love of him who is to be the only comfort and delight of their whole beings. Addison.

Impure and brutal sensuality was too much confirmed by the religion of those countries, where even Venus and Bacchus had their temples. Bentley.

To sensualize. v. a. [from sensual.] To sink to sensual pleasures; to degrade the mind into subjection to the senses. Not to suffer one's self to be sensualized by pleasures, like those who were changed into brutes by Circe. Pope.

SENSUALLY. adv. [from sensual.] In a sensual manner. SENSUOUS. adj. [from sense.] Tender; pathetic; full of passion. To this poetry would be made precedent, as being less subtle and fine; but more simple, sensuous, and passionate. Mil.

SENT. The participle passive of sens. I make a decree that all Israel go with thee; forasmuch as thou art sent of the king. Ezr. vii. 14.

SENTENCE. n. f. [from sententia, French; sententia, Latin.] 1. Determination or decision, as of a judge civil or criminal. The rule of voluntary agents on earth is the sentence that reason giveth, concerning the goodness of those things which they are to do. Hooker.

If we have neither voice from heaven, that so pronounceth of them, neither sentence of men grounded upon such manifest and clear proof, that they, in whose hands it is to alter them, may likewise infallibly, even in heart and conscience, judge them so; upon necessity to urge alteration, is to trouble and disturb without necessity. Hooker.

How will I give sentence against them. Jer. iv. 12. If matter of fact breaks out with too great an evidence to be denied, why, still there are other lenitives, that friendship will apply, before it will be brought to the decretory rigours of a condemning sentence. South's Sermons.

Let him set out some of Luther's works, that by them we may pass sentence upon his doctrines. Atterbury.

2. It is usually spoken of condemnation pronounced by the judge; doom. By the consent of all laws, in capital causes, the evidence must be full and clear; and if so, where one man's life is in question, what say we to a war, which is ever the sentence of death upon many? Bacon's help War.

What rests but that the mortal sentence pass? Milton. A maxim; an axiom, generally moral. A sentence may be defined a moral instruction couched in a few words. Broome's Notes on the Odyssey.

4. A

4. A short paragraph; a period in writing. An excellent spirit, knowledge, understanding, and shewing of hard sences were found in Daniel. Dan. v. 12.

To SENTENCE. v. a. [from sententia, Fr. from the noun.] 1. To pass the last judgment on any one. After this cold confid'rance, sentence me; And, as you are a king, speak in your state, What I have done that misbecame my place. Shakespeare.

Came the mild judge and intercessor both, To sentence man. Milton.

2. To condemn. Could that decree from our brother come? Nature herself is sentenced in your doom: Piety is no more. Dryden.

Idleness, sentenced by the decurions, was punished by so many stripes. Temple.

SENTENTIOUSLY. n. f. [from sententious.] Comprehension in a sentence. Vulgar precepts in morality carry with them nothing above the line, or beyond the extemporary sententiousness of common conceits with us. Broome's Vulg. Errors.

SENTENTIOUS. adj. [from sententia, Fr. from sentence.] Abounding with short sentences, axioms, and maxims, short and energetic. He is very swift and sententious. Shakespeare. As you like it.

Eyes are vocal, tears have tongues: Sententious showers! O let them fall; Their cadence is rhetorical. Crashaw.

Eloquence, with all her pomp and charms, Foretold us useful and sententious truths. Waller.

How he apes his fire, Ambitiously sententious. Addison's Cato.

The making of those figures being tedious, and requiring much room, put men first upon contracting them; as by the most ancient Egyptian monuments it appears they did: next, instead of sententious marks, to think of verbal, such as the Chinese still retain. Grew's Cosmol.

SENTENTIOUSLY. adv. [from sententious.] In short sentences; with striking brevity. They describe her in part finely and elegantly, and in part gravely and sententious: they say, look how many feathers she hath, so many eyes she hath underneath. Bacon's Essays.

Nautica delivers her judgment sententious, to give it more weight. Broome.

SENTENTIOUSNESS. n. f. [from sententious.] Pithiness of sentences; brevity with strength. The Medea I esteem for the gravity and sententiousness of it, which he himself concludes to be suitable to a tragedy. Dryd.

SENTERY. n. f. [This is commonly written sentry, corrupted from sentinel.] One who is set to watch in a garrison, or in the outlines of an army. What strength, what art can then Suffice, or what evasion bear him safe Through the strict sentries, and stations thick Of angels watching round. Milton.

SENTERY. adj. [from sentinella, Latin.] Perceiving; having perception. This acting of the sentry phantasy is performed by a presence of sense, as the horse is under the sense of hunger, and that without any formal syllogism prefiguring him to eat. Hale.

SENTIENT. n. f. [from the adjective.] He that has perception. If the sentient be carried, passibus aquis, with the body, whose motion it would observe, supposing it regular, the remove is insensible. Glauco. Scaph.

SENTIMENT. n. f. [from sentiment, French.] 1. Thought; notion; opinion. The consideration of the reason, why they are annexed to so many other ideas, serving to give us due sentiments of the wisdom and goodness of the sovereign Disposer of all things, may not be unsuitable to the main end of these enquiries. Locke.

Alike to counsel or th' assembly came, With equal souls and sentiments the same. Pope.

2. The sense considered distinctly from the language or things; a striking sentiment in a composition. SENTINEL. n. f. [from sentinelle, French, from sentia, Lat.] One who watches or keeps guard to prevent surprise. Norfolk, his thee to thy charge; Use careful watch, chuse trusty sentinels. Shakespeare. R. III.

Counsellors are not commonly so united, but that one counsellor keepeth sentinel over another; so that if any do counsel out of faction or private ends, it commonly comes to the king's ear. Bacon's Essays.

First, the two eyes, which have the seeing pow'r, Stand as one watchman, spy, or sentinel, Being plac'd aloft, within the head's high tow'r; And though both see, yet both but one thing tell. Davies.

Love to our citadel resorts, Through those deceitful fallports; Our sentinels betray our forts. Denham.

The senses are situate in the head, as sentinels in a watchtower, to receive and convey to the soul the impressions of external objects. Ray on the Creation.

Perhaps they had sentinels waking while they slept; but even this would be unforderlike. Broome's Notes on the Odyssey.

SENTRY. n. f. [Corrupted, I believe, from sentinel.] 1. A watch; a sentinel; one who watches in a garrison, or army, to keep them from surprise. If I do send, dispatch Those sentries to our aid; the rest will serve For a short holding. Shakespeare. Coriolanus.

The youth of hell strict guard may keep, And set their sentries to the utmost deep. Dryden.

One goose they had, 'twas all they could allow, A wakeful sentry, and on duty now. Dryden.

2. Guard; watch; the duty of a sentry. Here toils and death, and death's half brother, sleep, Forms terrible to view, their sentry keep. Dryden.

Thou, whose nature cannot sleep, O'er my slumbers sentry keep; Guard me 'gainst those watchful foes, Whose eyes are open while mine close. Brown.

SEPARABILITY. n. f. [from separable.] The quality of admitting division or dissection. Separability is the greatest argument of real distinction. Glauco.

The greatest argument of real distinction is separability, and actual separation; for nothing can be separated from itself. Norris.

SEPARABLE. adj. [from separable, Fr. separabilis, Lat. from separare.] 1. Susceptive of division; discernible. 2. Possible to be disjoined from something. Expansion and duration have this farther agreement, that though they are both considered by us as having parts, yet their parts are not separable one from another. Locke.

The infusions and decoctions of plants contain the most separable parts of the plants, and convey not only their nutritious but medicinal qualities into the blood. Arbutnot.

SEPARABLENESS. n. f. [from separable.] Capableness of being separable. Trials permit me not to doubt of the separableness of a yellow tincture from gold. Boyle.

To SEPARATE. v. a. [separo, Latin; separar, French.] 1. To break; to divide into parts. 2. To disunite; to disjoin. I'll to England. —To Ireland, I: our separated fortunes Shall keep us both the sinner. Shakespeare. Macbeth.

Resolv'd, Rather than death, or aught than death more dread, Shall separate us. Milton.

3. To sever from the rest. Can a body be inflammable, from which it would puzzle a chymist to separate an inflammable ingredient? Boyle.

Death from sin no power can separate. Milton.

4. To set apart; to segregate. Separate me Barnabas and Saul, for the work whereunto I have called them. Acts xiii. 2.

David separated to the service those who should prophesy. Chron. xxv. 1.

5. To withdraw. Separate thyself from me: if thou wilt take the left, I will go to the right. Gen. xiii. 9.

To SEPARATE. v. n. To part; to be disunited. When there was not room enough for their herds to feed, they by consent separated, and enlarged their pasture. Locke.

SEPARATE. adj. [from the verb.] 1. Divided from the rest. Eve separate he with'd. Milton.

'Twere hard to conceive an eternal watch, whose pieces were never separate one from another, nor ever in any other form. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

In a secret vale the Trojan fees A separate grove. Dryden.

2. Disunited from the body; disengaged from corporeal nature. Whatever ideas the mind can receive and contemplate without the help of the body, it can retain without the help of the body too; or else the soul, or any separate spirit, will have but little advantage by thinking. Locke.

SEPARATELY. adv. [from separate.] Apart; singly; not in union; distinctly; particularly. It is of singular use to princes, if they take the opinions of their council, both separately and together; for private opinion is more free, but opinion before others is more reserved. Bacon.

If you admit of many figures, then conceive the whole together, and not every thing separately and in particular. Dryden.

SEPARATENESS. n. f. [from separate.] The state of being separate. SEPARATION. n. f. [separatio, Lat. separation, Fr. from separare.] 1. The act of separating; disjunction. They have a dark opinion, that the soul doth live after the separation from the body. Abbot.

Any part of our bodies, vitally united to that which is conscious in us, makes a part of ourselves; but upon separation from the vital union, by which that consciousness is communicated, separated.

SEP

- nicated, that which a moment since was part of ourselves, is now no more so. Locke.
2. The state of being separate; disunion.
As the confusion of tongues was a mark of separation, so the being of one language was a mark of union. Bacon.
3. The chemical analysis, or operation of disuniting things mingled.
A fifteenth part of silver, incorporate with gold, will not be recovered by any matter of separation, unless you put a greater quantity of silver, which is the last refuge in separations. Bacon.
4. Divorce; disjunction from a married state.
Did you not hear
A buzzing of a separation Between the king and Catharine? Shakespeare.
- SEPARATIST. n. f. [separatiste, Fr. from separate.] One who divides from the church; a schismatic; a seceder.
The anabaptists, separatists, and sectaries tenets are full of schism, and inconsistent with monarchy. Bacon.
Our modern separatists pronounce all those heretical, or carnal, from whom they have withdrawn. Decay of Piety.
Says the separatist, if those, who have the rule over you, should command you any thing about church affairs, you ought not, in conscience, to obey them. South's Sermons.
- SEPARATOR. n. f. [from separate.] One who divides; a divider.
SEPARATORY. adj. [from separate.] Used in separation.
The most conspicuous gland of an animal is the system of the guts, where the lacteals are the emissary vessels, or separatory ducts. Cheyne's Phil. Prin.
- SEPIABLE. adj. [sepio, Lat.] That may be buried. Bailey.
- SEPIENT. n. f. [sepiementum, Lat.] A hedge; a fence. Bailey.
- SEPOSITION. n. f. [sepono, Latin.] The act of setting apart; segregation.
- SEPT. n. f. [septum, Latin.] A clan; a race; a generation.
A word used only with regard or allusion to Ireland, and, I suppose, Irish.
This judge, being the lord's brehon, adjudgeth a better share unto the lord of the soil, or the head of that sept, and also unto himself for his judgment a greater portion, than unto the plaintiffs. Spenser on Ireland.
The true and ancient Russians, a sept whom he had met with in one of the provinces of that vast empire, were white like the Danes. Boyle.
The English forces were ever too weak to subdue so many warlike nations, or septs, of the Irish as did possess this island. Davies on Ireland.
- SEPTANGULAR. adj. [septem and angulus, Latin.] Having seven corners or sides.
- SEPTEMBER. n. f. [Latin; Septembre, French.] The ninth month of the year; the seventh from March.
September hath his name as being the seventh month from March: he is drawn with a merry and cheerful countenance, in a purple robe. Penham on Drawing.
- SEPTENARY. adj. [septenarius, Lat.] Consisting of seven.
Every controversy has seven questions belonging to it; tho' the order of nature seems too much neglected by a confinement to this septenary number. Watts.
- SEPTEMARY. n. f. The number seven.
The days of men are cast up by septenaries, and every seventh year conceived to carry some altering character in temper of mind or body. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
These constitutions of Moses, that proceed so much upon a septenary, or number of seven, have no reason in the nature of the thing. Burnet.
- SEPTENNIAL. adj. [septennis, Latin.]
1. Lasting seven years.
  2. Happening once in seven years.
Being once dispensed with for his septennial visit, by a holy instrument from Petropolis, he relolved to govern them by subaltern ministers. Hewel's Vocal Forest.
With weekly libels and septennial ale,
Their wish is full, to riot and to rail. Anonym.
- SEPTENTRION. n. f. [Fr. septentrion, Latin.] The North.
Thou art as opposite to every good,
As the antipodes are unto us, Shakespeare. Hen. VI.
- SEPTENTRIONAL. adj. [septentrionalis, Latin; septentrional, French.] Northern.
Back'd with a ridge of hills,
That green'd the fruits of th' earth and seats of men
From cold septentrion blasts. Milton's Par. Regain'd.
If the Spring
Proceeding should be desirous of rain,
Or blast septentrional with brushing wings
Sweep up the smoky mists and vapours damp,
Then woe to mortals. Philips.
- SEPTENTRIONALITY. n. f. [from septentrional.] Northerliness.
- SEPTENTRIONALLY. adv. [from septentrional.] Towards the North; northerly.

SEQ

- If they be powerfully excited, and equally let fall, they commonly sink down, and break the water, at that extreme whereat they were septentrionally excited. Brown.
- To SEPTENTRIONATE. v. n. [from septentrion, Lat.] To tend northerly.
Steel and good iron, never excited by the loadstones, septentrional at one extreme, and australize at another. Brown.
- SEPTICAL. adj. [seculus, Lat.] Having power to promote or produce putrefaction.
As a septical medicine, Galen commended the ashes of a salamander. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
- SEPTILATERAL. adj. [septem and lateris, Lat.] Having seven sides.
By an equal interval they make seven triangles, the bases whereof are the seven sides of a septilateral figure, described within a circle. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
- SEPTUAGENARY. adj. [septuagenarius, Lat. septuagena, Fr.] Consisting of seventy.
The three hundred years of John of times, or Nestor, cannot afford a reasonable encouragement beyond Moses's septuaginary determination. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
- SEPTUAGESIMAL. adj. [septuagesimus, Latin.] Consisting of seventy.
In our abridged and septuagesimal age, it is very rare to behold the fourth generation. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
- SEPTUAGINT. n. f. [septuaginta, Latin.] The old Greek version of the Old Testament, so called as being supposed the work of seventy-two interpreters.
Which way soever you try, you shall find the product great enough for the extent of this earth; and if you follow the septuagint chronology, it will still be far higher. Barnet.
- SEPTUPLE. adj. [septuplex, Latin.] Seven times as much. A technical term.
- SEPULCHRAL. adj. [sepulchralis, Fr. sepulchralis, from sepulchrum, Lat.] Relating to burial; relating to the grave; monumental.
Whilst our souls negotiate there,
We like sepulchral statues lay;
All day the same our postures were,
And we said nothing all the day. Donne.
Mine eye hath found that sad sepulchral rock,
That was the casket of heav'n's richest store. Milton.
Sepulchral lies our holy walls to grace,
And new-year odes. Pope's Dunciad.
- SEPULCHRE. n. f. [sepulchre, Fr. sepulchrum, Lat.] A grave; a tomb.
To entail him and his heirs unto the crown,
What is it but to make thy sepulchre? Shakespeare. Henry VI.
Flies and spiders get a sepulchre in amber, more durable than the monument and embalming of any king. Bacon.
There where the virgin's son his doctrine taught,
His miracles, and our redemption wrought;
Where, by three inspir'd, his praises sung,
And on his sepulchre my offering hung. Sandys.
Perpetual lamps for many hundred years have continued burning, without supply, in the sepulchres of the ancients. Wilk.
If not one common sepulchre contains
Our bodies, or one urn our last remains,
Yet Ceyx and Alcione shall join. Dryden.
- To SEPULCHRE. v. a. [from the noun. It is accented on the second syllable by Shakespeare and Milton; on the first, more properly, by Johnson and Prior.] To bury; to entomb.
Go to thy lady's grave, and call her thence;
Or, at the least, in her's sepulchre thine. Shakespeare.
I am glad to see that time survive,
Where merit is not sepulchred alive;
Where good men's virtues them to honours brings,
And not to dangers. Ben. Johnson.
Thou sepulchred in such pomp do'st lie,
That kings for such a tomb would wish to die. Milton.
Disparted streams shall from their channels fly,
And, deep furchard, by sandy mountains lie, Obscurely sepulchred. Prior.
- SEPULTURE. n. f. [sepulture, Fr. sepultura, Lat.] Interment; burial.
That Niobe, weeping over her children, was turned into a stone, was nothing else but that during her life she erected over her sepultures a marble tomb of her own. Brown.
Where we may royal sepulture prepare;
With speed to Meleinda bring relief,
Recall her spirits, and moderate her grief. Dryden.
In England sepulture, or burial of the dead, may be deferred and put off for the debts of the person deceased. Ayliffe.
- SEQUALOUS. adj. [sequaci, Latin.]
1. Following; attendant.
Orpheus could lead the savage race,
And trees uprooted left their place,
Sequacious of the lyre;
But bright Cecilia rais'd the wonder higher:
When to her organ vocal breath was giv'n,
An angel heard and straight appear'd,
Mistaking earth for heav'n. Dryden.

SEQ

- Above those superstitious horrors that enslave
The fond sequacious herd, to mystick faith
And blind amazement prone, th' enlighten'd few
The glorious stranger hail! Thomson.
2. Ductile; pliant.
In the greater bodies the forge was easy, the matter being ductile and sequacious, and obedient to the hand and stroke of the artificer, and apt to be drawn, formed, or moulded. Ray.
- SEQUALITY. n. f. [from sequax, Latin.] Ductility; toughness.
- Matter, whereof creatures are produced, hath a closeness, lentor, and sequacity. Bacon's Natural History.
- SEQUEL. n. f. [sequelle, French; sequela, Latin.]
1. Conclusion; succeeding part.
If black scandal or foul-faced reproach
Attend the sequel of your imposition,
Your meek enforcement shall acquaintance me. Shakespeare. R. III.
Was he not a man of wisdom? Yes, but he was poor: but was he not also successful? True, but still he was poor: and once grant this, and you cannot keep off that unavoidable sequel in the next verse, the poor man's wisdom is despised. South's Sermons.
  2. Consequence; event.
Let any principal thing, as the sun or the moon, but once cease, fail, or fwerve, and who doth not easily conceive that the sequel thereof would be ruin both to itself and whatsoever dependeth on it? Hooker.
In these he put two weights,
The sequel each of parting and of fight. Milton's Par. Lost.
  3. Consequence inferred; consequentialness.
What sequel is there in this argument? An archdeacon is the chief deacon: ergo, he is only a deacon. Whitgift.
- SEQUENCE. n. f. [from sequor, Latin.]
1. Order of succession.
How art thou a king,
But by fair sequence and succession? Shakespeare. R. II.
  2. Series; arrangement; method.
The cause proceedeth from a precedent sequence, and series of the seasons of the year. Bacon's Nat. History.
- SEQUENT. adj. [sequens, Latin.]
1. Following; succeeding.
Let my trial be mine own confession:
Immediate sentence then, and sequent death,
Is all the grace I beg. Shakespeare. Macb. for Measure.
There he dies, and leaves his race
Growing into a nation; and now grown,
Suspected to a sequent king, who seeks
To stop their overgrowth. Milton's Paradise Lost.
  2. Consequential.
SEQUENT. n. f. [from the adjective.] A follower. Not in use.
Here he hath framed a letter to a sequent of the stranger queen's, which accidentally miscarried. Shakespeare.
- To SEQUESTER. v. a. [sequester, Fr. sequester, Spanish; sequestro, low Latin.]
1. To separate from others for the sake of privacy.
Why are you sequestered from all your train? Shakespeare.
To the which place a poor sequester'd stag,
That from the hunter's aim had ta'en a hurt,
Did come to languish. Shakespeare. As you like it.
In shady bow'rs,
More sacred and sequester'd, though but feign'd,
Pan or Sylvanus never slept. Milton.
Ye sacred Nine! that all my soul possess,
Whose raptures fire me, and whose visions bless,
Bear me, oh bear me to sequester'd scenes
Of bow'ry mazes, and surrounding greens. Pope.
To put aside; to remove.
Although I had wholly sequestered my civil affairs, yet I set down, out of long continued experience in business, and conversation in books, what I thought pertinent to this affair. Bacon.
  2. To withdraw; to segregate.
A thing as reasonable in grief as in joy, as decent being added unto actions of greatest weight and solemnity, as being used when men most sequester themselves from action. Hooker.
  3. To set aside from the use of the owner to that of others.
To deprive of possessions.
It was his taylor and his cook, his fine fashions and his French ragout, which sequestered him; and, in a word, he came by his poverty as finisly as some usually do by their riches. South.
- SEQUESTERABLE. adj. [from sequester.]
1. Subject to privation.
2. Capable of separation.
Hartthorn, and divers other bodies belonging to the animal kingdom, abound with a not uneasily sequesterable salt. Boyle.
- To SEQUESTRATE. v. n. To sequester; to separate from company.
In general contagions more perish for want of necessaries than by the malignity of the disease, they being sequestered from mankind. Arbutnot on Air.

SER

- SEQUESTRA'TION. n. f. [sequestration, Fr. from sequestrare.]
1. Separation; retirement.
His addition was to courses vain;
I never noted in him any study,
Any retirement, any sequestration
From open haunts and popularity. Shakespeare. Henry V.
There must be leisure, retirement, solitude, and a sequestration of a man's self from the noise and toils of the world; for truth scorns to be seen by eyes too much fixt upon inferior objects. South's Sermons.
  2. Disunion; disjunction.
The metals remain unsevered, the fire only dividing the body into smaller particles, hindering rest and continuity, without any sequestration of elementary principles. Boyle.
  3. State of being set aside.
Since Henry Monmouth first began to reign,
Before whose glory I was great in arms,
This loathsome sequestration have I had. Shakespeare. H. VI.
  4. Deprivation of the use and profits of a possession.
If there be a single spot in the glebe more barren, the rector or vicar may be obliged, by the caprice or pique of the bishop, to build upon it, under pain of sequestration. Swift.
- SEQUESTRA'TOR. n. f. [from sequestrare.] One who takes from a man the profit of his possessions.
I am fallen into the hands of publicans and sequestrators, and they have taken all from me. Taylor.
- SERAGLIO. n. f. [Italian, perhaps of Oriental original. The g is lost in the pronunciation.] A house of women kept for debauchery.
There is a great deal more solid content to be found in a constant course of well living, than in the voluptuousness of a seraglio. Norris.
- SERAPH. n. f. [סֵרָפִים] One of the orders of angels.
He is infinitely more remote in the real excellency of his nature, from the highest and perfectest of all created beings, than the purest seraph is from the most contemptible part of matter, and consequently must infinitely exceed what our narrow understandings can conceive of him. Locke.
As full, as perfect in vile man that mourns,
As the rapt seraph that adores and burns. Pope.
- SERAPHICAL. adj. [seraphique, French; from seraph.] Angelic; angelical.
Love is curious of little things, desiring to be of angelical purity, of perfect innocence, and seraphical fervour. Taylor.
Seraphick arms and trophies. Milton.
'Tis to the world a secret yet,
Whether the nymph, to please her swain,
Talks in high romantick strain;
Or whether he at last descends
To take with less seraphick ends. Swift.
- SERAPHIM. n. f. [This is properly the plural of seraph, and therefore cannot have a added; yet, in compliance with our language, seraphims is sometimes written.] Angels of one of the heavenly orders.
To thee cherubim and seraphim continually do cry. Com. Pr.
Then flew one of the seraphims unto me, having a live coal in his hand. Is. vi. 6.
Of seraphim another row. Milton.
- SERE. adj. [crepans, Saxon, to dry.] Dry; withered; no longer green. See SEAR.
The mules, that were wont green bays to wear,
Now bringen bitter elder-branches seré. Spenser.
He is deformed, crooked, old, and seré,
Ill-fac'd, worse bodied, shapely every where;
Vicious, ungente. Shakespeare. Comedy of Errors.
Ere this diurnal star
Leave cold the night, how we his gather'd beams Reflected, may with matter seré foment. Milton.
They seré wood from the rotten hedges took,
And seeds of latent fire from flints provoke. Dryden.
On a seré branch,
Low bending to the bank, I sat me down,
Musing and still. Rowe's Royal Convert.
- SERE. n. f. [Of this word I know not the etymology, nor, except from this passage, the meaning. Can it come, like stern, from crepan, Saxon, to cut?] Claw; talon.
Two eagles,
That, mounted on the winds, together still
Their strokes extended; but arriving now
Amidst the council, over every brow
Shook their thick wings, and threatening death's cold fears,
Their necks and cheeks tore with their eager seres. Chapman.
- SERENADE. n. f. [Serenade, Fr. serenata, Italian, whence, in Milton, serenate, from serenus, Latin, the lovers commonly attending their mistresses in fair nights.] Music or songs with which ladies are entertained by their lovers in the night.
Mixt dance, or wanton mask, or midnight ball,
Or serenate, which the starv'd lover sings
To his proud fair; best quitted with disdain. Milton.
Foolish swallow, what do'st thou
So often at my window do,
With thy tuneless serenade? Cowley.

SER

Shall I the neighbours nightly rest invade,
At her deaf doors, with some vile serenade? Dryden.
Will, fancies he never should have been the man he is, had not he broke windows, and disturbed honest people with his midnight serenades, when he was a young fellow. Adiſon.
To SERENADE. v. a. [from the noun.] To entertain with nocturnal music.
He continued to serenade her every morning, 'till the queen was charmed with his harmony. Speſator.
SERENE. adj. [ſerein, French; ſerenus, Latin.]
1. Calm; placid; quiet.
Spirits live inſp'her'd
In regions mild, of calm and serene air. Milton.
The moon, serene in glory, mounts the ſky. Pope.
2. Unruffled; undisturbed; even of temper; peaceful or calm of mind; ſhewing a calm mind.
There wanted yet a creature might erect
His ſtature, and upright with front serene Milton.
Govern the reſt.
Exciting them, by a due remembrance of all that is paſt, unto future circumſpection, and a serene expectation of the future life. Greav's Coſmology.
Gutta SERENA. n. f. An obſtruction in the optic nerve.
Theſe eyes that roll in vain, Milton.
So thick a drop serene hath quench'd their orbs.
SERENE. n. f. [from the adjective.] A calm damp evening.
Where ever death doth pleaſe t' appear,
Seas, serenes, ſwonds, ſhot, ſickneſs, all are there. Ben. Johnſ.
To SERENE. v. a. [ſerener, French; ſereno, Latin.]
1. To calm; to quiet.
2. To clear; to brighten. Not proper.
Take care
Thy muddy bev'rage to serene, and drive
Precipitant the baſer roſy lees. Philips.
SERENELY. adv. [from serene.]
1. Calmly; quietly.
The ſetting ſun now ſhone serenely bright. Pope.
2. With unruffled temper; coolly.
Whatever practical rule is generally broken, cannot be ſup-poſed innate; it being impoſſible that men would, without ſhame or fear, confidently and serenely break a rule, which they could not but evidently know that God had ſet up. Locke.
The nymph did like the ſcene appear,
Serenely pleaſant, calmly fair: Prior.
Soft fell her words as flew the air.
SERENESS. n. f. [from serene.] Serenity.
SERENITUDE. n. f. [from serene.] Calmneſs; coolneſs of mind. Not in uſe.
From the equal diſtribution of the phlegmatick humour, will flow quietude and serenitude in the affections. Wotton.
SERENITY. n. f. [ſerenitas, Fr. from ſerenus, Latin.]
1. Calmneſs; temperance.
In the conſtitution of a perpetual equinox, the beſt part of the globe would be deſolate; and as to that little that would be inhabited, there is no reaſon to expect that it would conſtantly enjoy that admired calm and serenity. Bentley.
Pure serenity apace
Induces thought, and contemplation ſtill. Thomſon.
2. Peace; quietneſs; not diſturbance.
A general peace and serenity newly ſucceeded a general trouble and cloud throughout all his kingdoms. Temple.
3. Evenneſs of temper; coolneſs of mind.
I cannot ſee how any men ſhould ever tranſgreſs thoſe moral rules, with confidence and serenity, were they innate, and ſtamped upon their minds. Locke.
SERGE. n. f. [ſerge, French; xerxa, Spaniſh, which Covairu- vias derives from xirica, Arabick; Skinner from ſerge, German, a mat.] A kind of cloth.
The ſame wool one man felts into a hat, another weaves into cloth, another into kerſey or serge, and another into arras. Hale.
Ye weavers, all your ſhuttles throw,
And bid broad-cloaths and serges grow. Gay.
SERGEANT. n. f. [ſerjent, French; ſergente, Italian, from ſervicus, Latin.]
1. An officer whoſe buſineſs it is to execute the commands of magiſtrates.
Had I but time, as this fell ſerjeant, death,
Is ſtrict in his arreſt, oh, I could tell. Shakeſp. Hamlet.
When it was day the magiſtrates ſent the ſerjeants, ſaying, let theſe men go. Adiſon xvi. 35.
2. A petty officer in the army.
This is the ſerjeant,
Who, like a good and hardy ſoldier, fought. Shakeſp. Macbeth.
3. A lawyer of the higheſt rank under a judge.
None ſhould be made ſerjeants, but ſuch as probably might be held fit to be judges afterwards. Bacon.
4. It is a title given to ſome of the king's ſervants: as, ſerjeant chirurgeons.
SERGEANTRY. n. f. [from ſerjeant.]
Grand ſerjeantry is that where one holdeth lands of the king by ſervice, which he ought to do in his own perſon unto him: as to bear the king's banner or his ſpear, or to lead his hoſt, or to be his maſhal, or to blow a horn, when he ſeeth his enemies invade the land; or to find a man at arms to fight within the four ſeas, or eſſe to do it himſelf; or to bear the king's ſword before him at his coronation, or on that day to be his ſewer, carver, butler, or chamberlain. Petit ſerjeantry is where a man holdeth land of the king, to yield him yearly ſome ſmall thing toward his wars: as a ſword, dagger, bow, knife, ſpear, pair of gloves of mail, a pair of ſpurs, or ſuch like. Croſſet.

SERGEANTSHIP. n. f. [from ſerjeant.] The office of a ſerjeant.
SERIES. n. f. [ſerie, Fr. ſeries, Latin.]
1. Sequence; order.
Draw out that antecedent, by reflecting briefly upon the text as it lies in the ſeries of the epistle. Ward of Inſidelity.
The chaſms of the correſpondence I cannot ſupply, having deſtroyed too many letters to preſerve any ſeries. Pope.
2. Succeſſion; courſe.
This is the ſeries of perpetual woe,
Which thou, alas, and thine are born to know. Pope.
SERIOUS. adj. [ſerious, Fr. ſerius, Latin.]
1. Grave; ſolemn; not volatile; not light of behav' ad.
2. Important; weighty; not trifling.
I'll hence to London on a ſerious matter. Shakeſp. H. VI.
There's nothing ſerious in mortality;
All is but toys. Shakeſp. Macbeth.
SERIOUSLY. adv. [from ſerious.] Gravely; ſolemnly; in earnest; without levity.
It cannot but be matter of very dreadful conſideration to any one, ſober and in his wits, to think ſeriously with himſelf, what horror and conſuſion muſt needs ſurprize that man, at the laſt day of account, who had led his whole life by one rule, when God intends to judge him by another. Saith.
All laugh to find
Unthinking plainneſs ſo o'erſpread thy mind,
That thou could'ſt ſeriously perſuade the crowd
To keep their oaths, and to believe a god. Dryden.
Juſtin Martyr, Tertullian, Lactantius, and Arnobius, tell us, that this martyrdom fiſt of all made them ſeriously inquiſitive into that religion, which could endure the mind with ſo much ſtrength, and overcome the fear of death, nay, raiſe an earnest deſire of it, though it appeared in all its terrors. Adiſon.
SERIOUSNESS. n. f. [from ſerious.] Gravity; ſolemnity; ear-neſt attention.
That ſpirit of religion and ſeriousneſs vaniſhed all at once, and a ſpirit of libertiniſm and prophaneneſs ſtarted up in the room of it. Atterbury's Sermon.
The youth was received at the door by a ſervant, who then conducted him with great ſilence and ſeriousneſs to a long gallery, which was darkened at noon-day. Adiſon's Speſator.
SARMOCINATOR. n. f. [ſermocinator, Latin.] The act or practice of making ſpeeches.
SARMOCINATOR. n. f. [ſermocinator, Latin.] A preacher; a ſpeechmaker.
Theſe obſtrep'rous ſermocinators make eaſy impreſſion upon the minds of the vulgar. Howell.
SERMON. n. f. [ſermon, Fr. ſermo, Lat.] A diſcourſe of inſtruction pronounced by a divine for the edification of the people.
As for our sermons, be they never ſo found and perfect, God's word they are not, as the sermons of the prophets were; no, they are but ambiguouſly termed his word, becauſe his word is commonly the ſubject whereof they treat, and muſt be the rule whereby they are framed. Hecker.
This our life, exempt from publick haunt,
Finds tongues in trees, books in the running brooks,
Sermons in ſtones, and good in every thing. Shakeſp. Lear.
In his sermons unto the ſoldiers, and in open talk with the nobility, it ſhould ſeem that he himſelf had been enough to have overthrow'n the Turks. Knotley's Hiſtory of the Turks.
Sermons he heard, yet not ſo many
As left no time to praſtice any;
He heard them reverently, and then
His praſtice preach'd them o'er again. Croſſet.
Many, while they have preached Chriſt in their sermons, have read a lecture of atheiſm in their praſtice. Saith.
His preaching much, but more his praſtice wrought;
A living ſermon of the truths he taught. Dryden.
To SERMON. v. a. [ſermoneo, Fr. from the noun.]
1. To diſcourſe as in a ſermon.
Some would rather have good diſcipline delivered plainly by way of precept, or ſermon'd at large, than thus cloudily in-wrapped in allegorical devices. Spencer.
2. To tutor; to teach dogmatically; to leſſon.
Come, ſermon me no farther:
No villainous bounty yet hath paſt my heart. Shak. Timon.
SERMOUNTAIN, or SEJEL. n. f. [ſilex, Lat.] A plant.
It hath a roſe and umbellated flower, conſiſting of ſeveral

SERO'SITY.

SER

SERO'SITY. n. f. [ſeroſitas, Fr.] Thin or watery part of the blood.
In theſe the ſalt and lixiviated ſeroſity is divided between the guts and the bladder; but it remains undivided in birds. Brown.
The tumour of the throat, which occaſions the difficulty of ſwallowing and breathing, proceeds from a ſeroſity obſtructing the glands, which may be watery, ædematole, and ſchirrous, according to the viſcoſity of the humour. Arbutnot.
SEROUS. adj. [ſereus, French; ſerous, Latin.]
1. Thin; watery. Uſed of the part of the blood which ſeparates in congelation from the grumous or red part.
2. Adapted to the ſerum.
This diſeaſe is commonly an extravafation of ſerum, received in ſome cavity of the body; for there may be alſo a dropſy by a dilatation of the ſerous veſſels, as that in the ovarium. Arbutnot on Diet.
SERPENT. n. f. [ſerpens, Latin.] An animal that moves by undulation without legs. They are often venomous. They are divided into two kinds; the viper, which brings young, and the ſnake, that lays eggs.
She was arrayed all in lily white,
And in her right hand bore a cup of gold,
With wine and water filled up to the height;
In which a ſerpent did himſelf enfold,
That horror made to all that did behold. Fairy Queen.
She ſtruck me with her tongue,
Moſt ſerpent like, upon the very heart. Shakeſp. K. Lear.
They, or under ground, or circuit wide,
With ſerpent-error wand'ring, found their way. Milton.
Haply piercing through the dark diſguiſe,
The chief I challeng'd: he whoſe praſtice's wit
Knew all the ſerpent mazes of deceit,
Eludes my ſearch. Pope's Odyſſey.
SERPENTINE. adj. [ſerpentinus, Lat. from ſerpens.]
1. Reſembling a ſerpent.
I craved of him to lead me to the top of this rock, with meaning to free him from ſo ſerpentine a companion as I am. Sidney.
This of ours is deſcribed with legs, wings, a ſerpentine and winding tail, and a creſt or comb ſomewhat like a cock. Brown.
Nothing wants, but that thy ſhape
Like his, and colour ſerpentine, may ſhew Thy inward fraud. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt.
The figures and their parts ought to have a ſerpentine and ſlaming form naturally: theſe ſorts of outlines have, I know not what of life and ſeeming motion in them, which very much reſembles the activity of the flame and ſerpent. Dryden.
2. Winding like a ſerpent; ſinuiſious.
Nor can the ſun
Perſect a circle, or maintain his way
One inch direct; but where he roſe to-day
He comes no more, but with a cozening line Steals by that point, and ſo is ſerpentine. Donne.
His hand the adorned firmament diſplay'd,
Thoſe ſerpentine, yet conſtant motions made.
How many ſpacious countries does the Rhine,
In winding banks, and mazes ſerpentine,
Traverse, before he ſplits in Belgia's plain,
And, loſt in ſand, creeps to the German main? Blackmore.
SERPENTINE. n. f. An herb. Ainſworth.
SERPENTINE STONE. n. f.
There were three ſpecies of this ſtone known among the ancients, all reſembling one another, and celebrated for the ſame virtues. They were all of the marble kind: the one was green, variegated with ſpots of black, thence called the black ophites; another, called the white ophites, was green alſo, but variegated with ſpots of white: the third was called tephria, and was of a grey colour, variegated with ſmall black ſpots. The firſt ſpecies was chiefly uſed in medicine, and found by the ancients only in Egypt; but it is frequent in the deſerts of Arabia, in the iſlands of the Archipelago, in Italy, and we have whole quarries of it in Wales. The ancients tell us, that it was a certain remedy againſt the poiſon of the bite of ſerpents; but it is now juſtly rejected. Hill's Mat. Med.
Accept in good part a bottle made of a ſerpentine ſtone, which hath the quality to give any wine or water, that ſhall be infuſed therein for four and twenty hours, the taſte and operation of the ſpaw-water, and is very medicinable for the cure of the ſpleen and gravel. Watt.
SERPENTS TONGUE. n. f. An herb. Ainſworth.
SERPET. n. f. A batket. Ainſworth.
SERPIGINOUS. adj. [from ſerpigo, Latin.] Diſeaſed with a ſerpigo.
The ſkin behind her ear downwards became ſerpiginous, and was covered with white ſcales. Wiſeman.
SERPIGO. n. f. [Latin.] A kind of tetter.
For thy own bowels, which do call thee fire,
Do curſe the gout, ſerpigo, and the rheum,
For ending thee no ſooner. Shakeſp. Lear.
She had a node with pains on her right leg, and a ſerpigo on her right hand. Wiſeman.

 Thus are poor servitors,
 When others sleep upon their quiet beds,
 Constrain'd to watch in darknels, rain and cold. Shaksp.
 Our Norman conqueror gave away to his servitors the lands and possessions of such as did oppose his invasion. Davies.
 Fearful commenting
 Is leaden servitor to dull delay;
 Delay leads impotent and fix'd beggary. Shaksp.
 My noble queen, let former grudges pass,
 And henceforth I am thy true servitor. Shaksp. Hen. VI.
 2. One of the lowest order in the university.
 His learning is much of a size with his birth and education; no more of either than what a poor hungry servitor can be expected to bring with him from his college. Swift.
SE'RVITUDE. n. f. [servitude, French; servitus, Latin.]
 1. Slavery; state of a slave; dependance.
 Aristotle speaketh of men, whom nature hath fram'd for the state of servitude, saying, they have reason so far forth as to conceive when others direct them. Hosker.
 You would have sold your king to slaughter,
 His princes and his peers to servitude,
 His subjects to oppression and contempt. Shaksp. Hen. V.
 Tho' it is necessary, that some persons in the world should be in love with a splendid servitude, yet certainly they must be much beholding to their own fancy, that they can be pleas'd at it; for he that rises up early, and goes to bed late, only to receive addresses, is really as much abridged in his freedom, as he that waits to present one. South Sermons.
 Unjustly thou deprav'st it with the name
 Of servitude, to serve whom God ordains,
 Or nature: God and nature bid the same,
 When he who rules is worthiest. Milton.
 2. Servants collectively.
 After him a cum'brous train
 Of herds, and flocks, and numerous servitude. Milton.
SE'RUN. n. f. [Latin.]
 1. The thin and watry part that separates from the rest in any liquor, as in milk from the cream.
 2. The part of the blood, which in coagulation separates from the grume.
 Blood is the most universal juice in an animal body: the red part of it differs from the serum, the serum from the lymph, the lymph from the nervous juice, and that from the several other humours separated in the glands. Arbutnot.
SESQUIALTER. adj. [sesquialter, Fr. sesquialter, Lat.]
 In geometry, is a ratio, where one quantity or number contains another once and half as much more, as 6 and 9. DiD.
 In all the revolutions of the planets about the sun, and of the secondary planets about the primary ones, the periodical times is in a sesquialter proportion to the mean distance. Chayne.
 As the six primary planets revolve about the sun, so the secondary ones are moved about them in the same sesquialter proportion of their periodical motions to their orbs. Bentley.
SE'SQUIPLICATE. adj. [In mathematics.] Is the proportion one quantity or number has to another, in the ratio of one half.
 The periodical times of the planets are in sesquuplicate proportion, and not a duplicate proportion of the distances from the center or the radii; and consequently the planets cannot be carried about by an harmonically circulating fluid. Chayne's Phil. Prin.
SE'SQUIPEDAL. adj. [sesquipedalis, Latin.] Containing SE'SQUIPEDALIAN. n. f. a foot and a half.
 As for my own part, I am but a sesquipedal, having only six foot and a half of stature. Addis. Guard.
 Half thou ever measured the gigantick Ethiopian, whose stature is above eight cubits high, or the sesquipedalian pigmy? Arbut. and Pope's Mart. Scrib.
SE'SQUITERTIAN. [In mathematics.] Having such a ratio, as that one quantity or number contains another once and one third part more; as between 6 and 8. DiD.

SESS. n. f. [for assess, cess, or cessus.] Rate; cess charged; tax.

His army was so ill paid and governed, as the English suffered more damage by the set of his soldiers than they gained profit or security by abating the pride of their enemies.

SESS. n. f. [from sessum, French; sessio, Latin.]

1. The act of sitting.

He hath as man, not as God only, a supreme dominion over quick and dead; for so much his ascension into heaven, and his session at the right-hand of God do import.

Many, tho' they concede a table-gesture, will hardly allow this usual way of session.

2. An assembly of magistrates or senators.

They are ready to appear

Where you shall hold your session.

Summon a session that we may arraign

Our most disloyal lady.

The old man mindful still of moan,

Weeping, thus bespoke the session.

Of their session ended they did cry

The great result.

Call'd to council all the Achaian states,

Nor herald sworn the session to proclaim.

3. The space for which an assembly sits, without intermission or recess.

It was contrary to the course of parliament, that any bill that had been rejected should be again preferred the same session.

The second Nicene council affords us plentiful assistance, in the first session, wherein the pope's vicar declares that Meletius was ordained by Arian bishops, and yet his ordination was never questioned.

Many decrees are enacted, which at the next session are repealed.

4. A meeting of justices: as the sessions of the peace.

SESTERCE. n. f. [from sesterces, French; sestertium, Latin.] Among the Romans, a sum of about 8 l. 1 s. 5 d. half-penny sterling.

Several of them would rather chuse a sum in sesterces, than in pounds sterling.

To SET. v. a. preterite I set; part. pass. I am set. [Sargan, or satyan, Gothic; setzen, Saxon; setten, Dutch.]

1. To place; to put in any situation or place; to put.

They that are younger have me in derision, whose fathers I would have disdained to have set with the dogs of my flock.

He that hath received his testimony, hath set to his seal, that God is true.

They have set her a bed in the midst of the slain.

God set them in the firmament, to give light upon the earth.

In their setting of their threshold by my thresholds, they have defiled my holy name.

I have set thee for a tower among my people.

By his aid aspiring

To set himself in glory above his peers.

She sets the bar that causes all my pain;

One gift refused, makes all their bounty vain.

The lives of the revealers may be justly enough set over against the revelation, to find whether they agree.

2. To put into any condition, state, or posture.

They thought the very disturbance of things established an hire sufficient to set them on work.

That man that sits within a monarch's heart,

Would he abuse the countenance of the king,

Alack! what mischiefs might he set abroad?

Our princely general,

That the wheels were but small, may be guessed from a custom they have of taking them off, and setting them on.

Be frequent in setting such causes at work, whose effects you desire to know.

3. To make motionless; to fix immovably.

Struck with the sight, inanimate she seems,

Set are her eyes, and motionless her limbs.

4. To fix; to state by some rule.

Hereon the prompter falls to flat railing in the bitterest terms; which the gentleman with a set gesture and countenance still soberly related, until the ordinary, driven at last into a mad rage, was fain to give over.

The town of Bern has handsome fountains planted, at set distances, from one end of the streets to the other.

5. To regulate; to adjust.

In court they determine the king's good by his desires, which is a kind of setting the fun by the dial.

God bears a different respect to places set apart and consecrated to his worship, to what he bears to places designed to common uses.

Our palates grow into a liking of the seasoning and cookery, which by custom they are set to.

He rules the church's best dominions,

And sets men's faith by his opinions.

Against experience he believes,

He argues against demonstration;

Plead's when his reason he deceives,

And sets his judgment by his passion.

6. To fix to music; to adapt with notes.

Set thy own songs, and sing them to thy lute.

SET

Grief he tames that fetters it in verse;

But when I have done so,

Some man, his art or voice to show,

Doth set and sing my pain;

And by delighting many, frees again

Grief, which verse did restrain.

I had one day set the hundredth psalm, and was fingering the first line, in order to put the congregation into the tune.

7. To plant, not sow.

Whatever fruit useth to be set upon a root or a slip, if it be sown, will degenerate.

I prostrate fell,

To shrubs and plants my wife devotion paid,

And set the bearded leek to which I pray'd.

8. To interperse or leek with any thing.

As with flars, their bodies all

And wings were set with eyes.

High on their heads, with jewels richly set,

Each lady wore a radiant coronet.

The body is smooth on that end, and on this 'tis set with ridges round the point.

9. To reduce from a fractured or dislocated state.

Can honour set to a leg? no: or an arm? no: honour hath no skill in surgery then?

Considering what an orderly life I had led, I only commanded that my arm and leg should be set, and my body anointed with oil.

The fracture was of both the foci of the left leg: he had been in great pain from the time of the setting.

Credit is gained by course of time, and seldom recovers a strain; but if broken, is never well set again.

10. To fix the affection; to determine the resolution.

Set your affection on things above, not on things on the earth.

They should set their hope in God, and not forget his works.

Because sentence against an evil work is not executed speedily, the heart of men is fully set in them to do evil.

Set to work millions of spinning worms,

That in their green shops weave the smooth hair'd silk

To deck her fons.

Set not thy heart

Thus overfond on that which is not thine.

When we are well, our hearts are set,

Which way we care not, to be rich or great.

Our hearts are so much set upon the value of the benefits received, that we never think of the bestower.

These bubbles of the shallowest, emptiest sorrow,

Which children vent for toys, and women rain

For any trifle their fond hearts are set on.

Should we set our hearts only upon these things, and be able to taste no pleasure but what is sensual, we must be extremely miserable when we come into the other world, because we should meet with nothing to entertain ourselves.

No sooner is one action dispatched, which we are set upon, but another uneasiness is ready to set us on work.

Minds, altogether set on trade and profit, often contract a certain narrowness of temper.

Men take an ill natured pleasure in disappointing us in what our hearts are most set upon.

An Englishman, who has any degree of reflection, cannot be better awakened to a sense of religion in general, than by observing how the minds of all mankind are set upon this important point, and how every nation is attentive to the great business of their being.

I am much concerned when I see young gentlemen of fortune so wholly set upon pleasures, that they neglect all improvements in wisdom and knowledge.

11. To predetermine; to settle.

We may still doubt whether the Lord, in such indifferent ceremonies as those wherewith we dispute, did frame his people of set purpose unto any utter dissimilitude with Egyptians, or with any other nation.

He remembers only the name of Conon, and forgets the other on set purpose, to shew his country swain was no great scholar.

12. To establish; to appoint; to fix.

Of all helps for due performance of this service, the greatest is that very set and standing order itself, which, framed with common advice, hath for matter and form prescribed whatsoever is herein publicly done.

It pleased the king to send me, and I set him a time.

Am I a sea, or a whale, that thou settest a watch over me?

He setteth an end to darkness, and searcheth out all perfection.

In studies, whatsoever a man commandeth upon himself, let him set hours for it; but whatsoever is agreeable to his nature, let him take no care for any set times: for his thoughts will fly to it of themselves, so as the spaces of other business or studies will suffice.

For using set and prescribed forms, there is no doubt but that wholesome words, being known, are aptest to excite judicious and fervent affections.

SET

His feed, when is not set, shall bruise my head.

Though set form of prayer be an abomination,

Set forms of petitions find great approbation.

Set places and set hours are but parts of that worship we owe.

That law cannot keep men from taking more use than you set, the want of money being that alone which regulates its price, will appear, if we consider how hard it is to set a price upon unnecessary commodities; but how impossible it is to set a rate upon victuals in a time of famine.

Set him such a task, to be done in such a time.

As in the subordinations of government the king is offended by any insults to an inferior magistrate, so the sovereign ruler of the universe is affronted by a breach of allegiance to those whom he has set over us.

Take set times of meditating on what is future.

Should a man go about, with never so set study and design, to describe such a natural form of the year as that which is at present established, he could scarcely ever do it in so few words that were so fit.

13. To exhibit; to display; to propose.

Through the variety of my reading, I set before me many examples both of ancient and lat r times.

Reject not then what offer'd means: who knows

But God hath set before us, to return thee

Home to thy country and his sacred house?

Long has my soul desir'd this time and place,

To set before your sight your glorious race.

All that can be done is to set the thing before men, and to offer it to their choice.

A spacious veil from his broad shoulders flew,

That set th' unhappy Phaeton to view:

The flaming chariot and the steeds it shew'd,

And the whole fable in the mantle glow'd.

When his fortune sets before him all

The pomps and pleasures that his soul can wish,

His rigid virtue will accept of none.

He supplies his not appearing in the present scene of action, by setting his character before us, and continually forcing his patience, prudence, and valour upon our observation.

14. To value; to estimate; to rate.

Be you contented

To have a son set your decrees at nought?

To pluck down justice from your awful bench,

To trip the course of law?

The backwardness parents shew in divulging their faults, will make them set a greater value on their credit themselves, and teach them to be the more careful to preserve the good opinion of others.

If we act by several broken views, and will not only be virtuous, but wealthy, popular, and every thing that has a value set upon it by the world, we shall live and die in misery.

Have I not set at nought my noble birth,

A spotless fame, and an unblemish'd race,

The peace of innocence, and pride of virtue?

My prodigality has giv'n thee all.

Though the same fun, with all diffusive rays,

Blush in the rose and in the diamond blaze,

We prize the stronger effort of his pow'r,

And always set the gem above the flow'r.

15. To stake at play.

What sad disorders play begets!

Desperate and mad, at length he sets

Those darts, whose points make gods adore.

16. To offer a wager at dice to another.

Who sets me else? I'll throw at all.

17. To fix in metal.

Think so vast a treasure as your son

Too great for any private man's possession;

And him too rich a jewel to be set

In vulgar metal, or vulgar use.

He may learn to cut, polish, and set precious stones.

18. To embarrass; to distress; to perplex. [This is used, I think, by mistake, for beset: as,

Adam, hard beset, replied.

Those who raise popular murmurs and discontents against his majesty's government, that they find so very few and so very improper occasions for them, shew how hard they are set in this particular, represent the bill as a grievance.

19. To fix in an artificial manner, so as to produce a particular effect.

The proud have laid a snare for me, they have set gins.

20. To apply to something.

Unto thy brother thou shalt not lend upon usury, that the Lord may bless thee in all that thou settest thine hand to.

With what'er gall thou settest thyself to write,

Thy inoffensive failures never bite.

21. To fix the eyes.

I will set mine eyes upon them for good, and bring them again to this land.

SET

- Joy salutes me when I set
My blest eyes on Amoret.
12. To offer for a price.
There is not a more wicked thing than a covetous man; for such an one setteth his own soul to sale. Eccius. x. 9.
23. To place in order; to frame.
After it was framed, and ready to be set together, he was,
with infinite labour and charge, carried by land with camels, through that hot and sandy country, from Caïre to Suetia.
Knolles's History of the Turks.
24. To station; to place.
Cæsus has betray'd
The bitter truths that our loose court upbraid:
Your friend was set upon you for a spy,
And on his witness you are doom'd to die. Dryden.
25. To oppose.
Will you set your wit to a fool's?
26. To bring to a fine edge: as, to set a razor.
27. To set about. To apply to.
They should make them play-games, or endeavour it, and set themselves about it. Locke.
28. To set against. To place in a state of enmity or opposition.
The terrors of God do set themselves in array against me.
The king of Babylon set himself against Jerusalem. Ezek.
The devil hath reason to set himself against it; for nothing is more destructive to him than a soul armed with prayer. Dupa.
There should be such a being as afflicts us against our worst enemies, and comforts us under our sharpest sufferings, when all other things set themselves against us. Tillotson.
29. To set against. To oppose; to place in rhetorical opposition.
This perishing of the world in a deluge is set against, or compared with, the perishing of the world in the conflagration. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
30. To set apart. To neglect for a season.
They highly commended his forwardness, and all other matters for that time set apart. Knolles.
31. To set aside. To omit for the present.
Set your knighthood and your soldiery aside, and give me leave to tell you that you lie in your throat. Shaksp. H. IV.
In 1585 followed the prosperous expedition of Drake and Carlike into the West Indies; in the which I set aside the taking of St. Jago and St. Domingo in Hispaniola, as surprizes rather than encounters. Bacon.
My highest interest is not to be deceived about these matters; therefore, setting aside all other considerations, I will endeavour to know the truth, and yield to that. Tillotson.
32. To set aside. To reject.
I'll look into the pretensions of each, and shew upon what ground 'tis that I embrace that of the deluge, and set aside all the rest. Woodward's Nat. History.
No longer now does my neglected mind
Its wonted stores and old ideas find:
Fix'd judgment there no longer does abide,
To taste the true, or set the false aside. Prior.
33. To set aside. To abrogate; to annul.
Several innovations, made to the detriment of the English merchant, are now intirely set aside. Addison.
There may be
Reasons of so much pow'r and cogent force,
As may ev'n set aside this right of birth;
If sons have rights, yet fathers have 'em too. Rue.
He shows what absurdities follow upon such a supposition, and the greater those absurdities are, the more strongly do they evince the falsity of that supposition from whence they flow, and consequently the truth of the doctrine set aside by that supposition. Atterbury.
34. To set by. To regard; to esteem.
David behaved himself more wisely than all, so that his name was much set by. 1 Sa. xviii. 30.
35. To set by. To reject or omit for the present.
You shall hardly edify me, that those nations might not, by the law of nature, have been subdued by any nation that had only policy and moral virtue; though the propagation of the faith, whereof we shall speak in the proper place, were set by,
and not made part of the case. Bacon.
36. To set down. To mention; to explain; to relate in writing.
They have set down, that a rose set by garlick is sweeter, because the more fetid juice goeth into the garlick. Bacon.
Some rules were to be set down for the government of the army. Clarendon.
I shall set down an account of a discourse I chanced to have with one of these rural statesmen. Addison.
37. To set down. To register or note in any book or paper;
to put in writing.
Let those that play your clowns speak no more than is set down for them. Shaksp. Hamlet.
Every man, careful of virtuous conversation, studious of scripture, and given unto any abstinence in diet, was set down in his calendar of suspected Prelatians. Hooker.

SET

- Take
One half of my commission, and set down
As best thou art experienc'd, since thou know'st
Thy country's strength and weakness. Shak. Coriolanus.
The reasons that led me into the meaning which prevail'd on my mind, are set down. Locke.
An eminent instance of this, to shew what use can do, I shall set down. Locke.
I cannot forbear setting down the beautiful description Claudian has made of a wild beast, newly brought from the woods, and making its first appearance in a full amphitheatre. Addison.
38. To set down. To fix on a resolve.
Finding him so resolutely set down, that he was neither by fair nor foul means, but only by force, to be removed out of his town, he inclosed the same round. Knolles.
39. To set down. To fix; to establish.
This law we may name eternal, being that order which God before all others hath set down with himself, for himself to do all things by. Hooker.
40. To set forth. To publish; to promulgate; to make appear.
My willing love,
The rather by these arguments of fear,
Set forth in your pursuit. Shaksp. Twelfth Night.
The poems, which have been to ill set forth under his name, are as he first writ them. Waller.
41. To set forth. To raise; to send out.
Our merchants, to their great charges, set forth fleets to defery the seas. Abbot.
The Venetian admiral had a fleet of sixty galleys, set forth by the Venetians. Knolles's Hist. of the Turks.
They agreed, all with one consent, at a prefixed day, to send unto Vienna such warlike forces, as they had in any time before set forth, for the defence of the Christian religion.
Knolles's History of the Turks.
When poor Rutilus spends all his worth,
In hopes of setting one good dinner forth,
'Tis downright madness. Dryden's Juvenal.
42. To set forth. To display; to explain.
As for words to set forth such lewdness, it is not hard for them to give a goodly and painted shew thereunto, borrowed even from the praises proper to virtue. Spenser.
So little have these false colours dishonoured painting, that they have only served to set forth her praise, and to make her merit further known. Dryden's Dufresny.
43. To set forth. To arrange; to place in order.
Up higher to the plain, where we'll set forth
In best appointment all our regiments. Shaksp. K. John.
44. To set forth. To shew; to exhibit.
To render our errors more monstrous, and what unto a miracle sets forth the patience of God, he hath endeavoured to make the world believe he was God himself. Brown.
Whereas it is commonly set forth green or yellow, it is inclining to white. Brown's Vulg. Err.
To set forth great things by small. Milton.
The two humours of a cheerful trust in providence, and a suspicious diffidence of it, are very well set forth here for our instruction. L'Estrange.
45. To set forward. To advance; to promote.
They yield that reading may set forward, but not begin the work of salvation. Hooker.
Amongst them there are not those helps which others have,
to set them forward in the way of life. Hooker.
In the external form of religion, such things as are apparently or can be sufficiently proved effectual, and generally fit to set forward godliness, either as betokening the greatness of God, or as becoming the dignity of religion, or as concurring with celestial impressions in the minds of men, may be reverently thought of. Hooker.
They mar my path, they set forward my calamity.
Dung or chalk, applied seasonably to the roots of trees, doth set them forward. Bacon's Nat. History.
46. To set in. To put in a way to begin.
If you please to assist and set me in, I will recollect myself. Calver.
47. To set off. To decorate; to recommend; to adorn; to embellish. It answers to the French relever.
Like bright metal on a fullen ground,
My reformation, glittering o'er my faults,
Shall shew more goodly, and attract more eyes,
Than that which hath no foil to set it off. Shak. H. IV.
The prince put thee into my service for no other reason than to set me off. Shaksp. Henry IV.
Neglect not the examples of those that have carried themselves ill in the same place; not to set off thyself by taxing their memory, but to direct thyself what to avoid. Bacon.
May you be happy, and your sorrows past
Set off those joys I wish may ever last. Waller.
The figures of the groupes must contrast each other by their several positions; thus in a play some characters must be raised to oppose others, and to set them off. Dryden.

SET

- The men, whose hearts are aimed at, are the occasion that one part of the face lies under a kind of disguise, while the other is so much set off, and adorned by the owner. Addison.
Their women are perfect mistresses in shewing themselves to the best advantage: they are always gay and sprightly, and set off the worst faces with the best airs. Addison.
The general good sense and worthiness of his character, makes his friends observe these little singularities as foils, that rather set off than blemish his good qualities. Addison.
The work will never take, if it is not set off with proper scenes. Addison.
Claudian sets off his description of the Eridanus with all the poetical stories. Addison on Italy.
48. To set on or upon. To animate; to instigate; to incite.
You had either never attempted this change, set on with hope, or never discovered it, stop with despair. Sidney.
He upbraids Iago, that he made him
Brave me upon the watch; whereon it came
That I was cast; and even now he spake Iago set him on. Shaksp. Othello.
Thou, traitor, hast set on thy wife to this. Shaksp. Othello.
Baruch set thee on against us, to deliver us unto the Chaldeans. Jer. xliii. 3.
He should be thought to be mad, or set on and employed by his own or the malice of other men to abuse the duke. Clarendon.
In opposition fits
Grim death, my son and foe, who sets them on. Milton.
The vengeance of God, and the indignation of men, will join forces against an insulting baseness, when backed with greatness and set on by misinformation. South's Sermon.
The skill used in dressing up power, will serve only to give a greater edge to man's natural ambition: what can this do but set men on the more eagerly to scramble? Locke.
A prince's court introduces a kind of luxury, that sets every particular person upon making a higher figure than is consistent with his revenue. Addison.
49. To set on or upon. To attack; to assault.
There you missing me, I was taken up by pyrates, who putting me under board prisoner, presently set upon another ship, and maintaining a long fight, in the end put them all to the sword. Sidney.
Cassio hath here been set on in the dark:
He's almost slain, and Rodorigo dead. Shaksp. Othello.
So other foes may set upon our back. Shaksp. H. VI.
Alphonus, captain of another of the galleys, suffering his men to straggle too far into the land, was set upon by a Turkish pyrate, and taken. Knolles.
Of one hundred ships there came scarce thirty to work: howbeit with them, and such as came daily in, we set upon them, and gave them the chase. Bacon's War with Spain.
If I had been set upon by villains, I would have redeemed that evil by this which I now suffer. Taylor.
When once I am set upon, 'twill be too late to be whetting when I should be fighting. L'Estrange.
When some rival power invades a right,
Flies set on flies, and turtles turtles fight. Garth's Dispens.
50. To set on. To employ as in a task.
Set on thy wife to observe. Shaksp. Othello.
51. To set on or upon. To fix the attention; to determine to any thing with settled and full resolution.
It becomes a true lover to have your heart more set upon her good than your own, and to bear a tenderer respect to her honour than your satisfaction. Sidney.
Some I found wond'rous harsh,
Contemptuous, proud, set on revenge and spite. Milton.
52. To set out. To assign; to allot.
The rest, unable to serve any longer, or willing to fall to thrill, should be placed in part of the lands by them won, at better rate than others, to whom the same shall be set out. Spens.
The quarrel of a man's thoughts to the lot that providence has set out for him is a blessing. L'Estrange.
53. To set out. To publish.
I will use no other authority than that excellent proclamation set out by the king in the first year of his reign, and an-nexed before the book of Common Prayer. Bacon.
If all should be set out to the world by an angry whip, the consequence must be a confinement of our friend for some months more to his garret. Swift.
54. To set out. To mark by boundaries or distinctions of space.
Time and place, taken thus for determinate portions of those infinite abysses of space and duration, set out, or supposed to be distinguished from the rest by known boundaries, have each a twofold acceptation. Locke.
55. To set out. To adorn; to embellish.
An ugly woman, in a rich habit set out with jewels, nothing can become. Dryden.
56. To set out. To raise; to equip.
The Venetians pretend they could set out, in case of great necessity, thirty men of war, a hundred galleys, and ten galasses. Addison on Italy.
57. To set out. To shew; to display; to recommend.

Africk, set him out as a most fit instrument for subduing the kingdom of Tunis. Knolles.
I could set out that best side of Luther, which our author, in the picture he has given us of him, has thrown into shade, that he might place a supposed deformity more in view. Atterb.
58. To set out. To shew; to prove.
Those very reasons set out how heinous his sin was. Atterb.
59. To set up. To erect; to establish newly.
There are many excellent institutions of charity lately set up, and which deserve all manner of encouragement, particularly those which relate to the careful and pious education of poor children. Atterbury's Sermons.
Who could not win the mistress, woo'd the maid,
Set up themselves, and drove a sep rate trade. Pope.
60. To set up. To build; to erect.
Their ancient habitations they neglect,
And set up new: then, if the echo like not
In such a room, they pluck down those. Ben. Johnson's Catil.
Jacob took the stone, that he had for his pillow, and set it up for a pillar. Gen. xxviii. 18.
Saul set him up a place, and is passed on, and gone down to Gulgath. 1 Sa. xv. 12.
Such delight hath God in men
Obedient to his will, that he vouchsafes
Among them to set up his tabernacle. Milton's Paradise Lost.
Images were not set up or worshipped among the heathens, because they supposed the gods to be like them. Stillingfleet.
Statues were set up to all those who had made themselves eminent for any noble action. Dryden.
I shall shew you how to set up a forge, and what tools you must use. Moxon's Mech. Exerc.
Patrons, who sneak from living worth to dead,
With-hold the pension, and set up the head. Pope.
61. To set up. To raise; to exalt; to put in power.
He was skilful enough to have lived full, if knowledge could be set up against mortality. Shaksp. Othello.
I'll translate the kingdom from the house of Saul, and set up the throne of David over Israel. 2 Sa. iii. 10.
Of those that lead these parties, if you could take off the major number, the lesser would govern; nay, if you could take off all, they would set up one, and follow him. Suckling.
Homer took all occasions of setting up his own countrymen the Grecians, and of undervaluing the Trojan chiefs. Dryd.
Whatever practical rule is generally broken, it cannot be supposed innate; it being impossible that men should, without shame or fear, serenely break a rule which they could not but evidently know that God had set up. Locke.
62. To set up. To place in view.
He hath taken me by my neck, shaken me to pieces, and set me up for his mark. Job xvi. 12.
Scarecrows are set up to keep birds from corn and fruits. Bac.
Thy father's merit sets thee up to view;
And shows thee in the fairest point of light,
To make thy virtues or thy faults conspicuous. Addison.
63. To set up. To place in repose; to fix; to rest.
Whilst we set up our hopes here, we do not so seriously, as we ought, consider that God has provided another and better place for us. Wake.
64. To set up. To raise by the voice.
My right eye itches, some good luck is near;
Perhaps my Amaryllis may appear;
I'll set up such a note as she shall hear. Dryden.
65. To set up. To advance; to propose to reception.
The authors that set up this opinion were not themselves satisfied with it. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
66. To set up. To raise to a sufficient fortune.
In a soldier's life there's honour to be got, and one lucky hit sets up a man for ever. L'Estrange.
To set. v. n.
1. To fall below the horizon, as the sun at evening.
The sun was set. Gen. xxviii. 11.
Whereas the setting of the pleiades and seven stars is designed the term of Autumn and the beginning of Winter, unto some latitudes these stars do never set. Brown's Vulg. Err.
That sun once set, a thousand meaner stars
Gave a dim light to violence and wars. Waller.
Now the latter watch of waiting night,
And setting stars, to kindly rest invite. Dryden's Æn.
Not thicker billows beat the Libyan main,
When pale Orion sets in wintry rain,
Than stand these troops. Dryden's Æn.
My eyes no object met,
But distant skies that in the ocean set. Dryden's Ind. Emp.
The Julian eagles here their wings display,
And there like setting stars the Decur lay. Garth's Ovid.
2. To be fixed hard.
A gathering and ferring of the spirits together to resist, maketh the teeth to set hard one against another. Bacon.
3. To be extinguished or darkened, as the sun at night.
Ahiyah could not see; for his eyes were set, by reason of his age. Kings. xiv. 4.

4. To fit music to words.
That I might sing it, madam, to a tune,
Give me a note: your ladyship can set.
—As little by such toys as may be possible. Shakespeare.
5. To become not fluid.
That fluid substance in a few minutes begins to set, as the tradenmen speak; that is, to exchange its fluidity for firmness. Boyle.
6. To begin a journey.
So let him land,
And solemnly see him set on to London. Shakespeare. H. V.
On Wednesday next, Harry, thou shalt set forward;
On Thursday we ourselves will march. Shakespeare.
The king is set from London, and the scene
Is now transported to Southampton. Shakespeare. Hen. V.
To go, or pass, or put one's self into any state or posture.
The faithless pirate soon will set to sea,
And bear the royal virgin far away. Dryden.
When sets he forward?
—He is near at hand. Dryden's Ind. Emp.
He with forty of his galleys, in most warlike manner appointed, set forward with Solymian's ambassador towards Constantinople. Kneller's History of the Turks.
8. To catch birds with a dog that sets them, that is, lies down and points them out; and with a large net.
When I go a hawking or setting, I think myself beholden to him that assures me, that in such a field there is a covey of partridges. Boyle.
9. To plant, not flow.
In gard'ning ne'er this rule forget,
To sow dry, and set wet. Old Proverb.
10. It is commonly used in conversation for sit, which, though undoubtedly barbarous, is sometimes found in authors.
If they set down before's, 'fore they remove;
Bring up your army. Shakespeare.
If he sets industriously and sincerely to perform the commands of Christ, he can have no ground of doubting but it shall prove successful to him. Hammond.
12. To set about. To fall to; to begin.
We find it most hard to convince them, that it is necessary now, at this very present, to set about it: we are thought a little too hot and hasty, when we press wicked men to leave their sins to-day, as long as they have so much time before them to do it in. Calamy's Sermons.
How preposterous is it, never to set about works of charity, whilst we ourselves can see them performed? Atterbury.
13. To set in. To fix in a particular state.
When the weather was set in to be very bad, I have taken a whole day's journey to see a gallery furnished by great masters. Addison's Spectator.
As November set in with keen frosts, so they continued through the whole of that month, without any other alteration than freezing with more or less severity, as the winds changed. Elphinstone's Voyage.
A storm accordingly happened the following day; for a southern monsoon began to set in. Gulliver's Travels.
14. To set on or upon. To begin a march, journey, or enterprize.
Be't your charge.
To see perform'd the tenor of our word:
Set on. Shakespeare's Henry IV.
He that would seriously set upon the search of truth, ought to prepare his mind with a love of it. Locke.
The understanding would presently obtain the knowledge
it is about, and then set upon some new inquiry. Locke.
15. To set on. To make an attack.
Hence every leader to his charge;
For on their answer we will set on them. Shakespeare. Hen. IV.
16. To set out. To have beginning.
If any invisible casualty there be, it is questionable whether its activity only set out at our nativity, and began not rather in the womb. Brown's Vulg. Errors.
The dazzling lustre to abate,
He set not out in all his pomp and state,
Clad in the mildest lightning. Addison.
17. To set out. To begin a journey.
At their setting out they must have their commission from the king. Bacon.
I shall put you in mind where you promised to set out, or begin your first stage. Hammond.
Me thou think'st not slow,
Who since the morning-hour set out from heav'n,
Where God resides, and ere mid-day arriv'd
In Eden. Milton's Parad. Lost.
My soul then mov'd the quicker pace;
Your first set out, mine reach'd her in the race. Dryden.
These doctrines, laid down for foundations of any science, were called principles, as the beginnings from which we must set out, and look no farther backwards. Locke.

SET

- He that sets out upon weak legs will not only go farther, but grow stronger too; than one who with firm limbs only fits himself. Locke.
- For these reasons I shall set out for London to-morrow. Add.
Look no more on man in the first stage of his existence, in his setting out for eternity. Addison.
If we slacken our arms, and drop our oars, we shall be hurried back to the place from whence we first set out. Addison.
18. To set out. To begin the world.
Eudoxus, at his first setting out, threw himself into court.
Addison's Spectator.
Eugenio set out from the same university, and about the same time with Coriolanus. Swift.
19. To set up. To apply himself to.
I may appeal to some, who have made this their business, whether it go not against the hair with them to set to anything else. Government of the Tongue.
20. To set up. To begin a trade openly.
We have stock enough to set up with, capable of infinite advancement, and yet no less capable of total decay. Decay of Piety.
A man of a clear reputation, though his bark be split, yet he saves his cargo; has something left towards setting up again, and so is in capacity of receiving benefit not only from his own industry, but the friendship of others. Gov. of the Tongue.
Those who have once made their court to those mistresses without portions, the muses, are never like to set up for fortunes. Pope.
This habit of writing and discoursing was acquired during my apprenticeship in London, and a long residence there after I had set up for myself. Swift.
21. To set up. To begin a project of advantage.
Eumenes, one of Alexander's captains, setting up for himself after the death of his master, persuaded his principal officers to lend him great sums; after which they were forced to follow him for their own security. Arbutnot.
A severe treatment might tempt them to set up for a republik. Addison on Italy.
22. To set up. To profess publicly.
Scowring the watch grows out of fashion wit;
Now we set up for tilting in the pit. Dryden.
Can Polyphemus, or Antiphates,
Who gorge themselves with man,
Set up to teach humanity, and give,
By their example, rules for us to live? Dryden's Fieschi.
It is found by experience, that those men who set up for morality, without regard to religion, are generally but vir-tuous in part. Swift.
- Set. part. adj. [from the verb.] Regular; not lax; made in consequence of some formal rule.
Rude am I in my speech,
And little blest with the set phrase of peace. Shakespeare. Othello.
Th' indictment of the good lord Hastings,
In a set hand fairly is ingross'd. Shakespeare. Richard III.
He would not perform that service by the hazard of one set battle, but by dallying off the time. Kneller.
Set speeches, and a formal tale,
With none but statemen and grave fools prevail. Dryden.
In ten set battles have we driv'n back
These heathen Saxons, and regain'd our earth. Dryden.
What we hear in conversation has this general advantage over set discourses, that in the latter we are apt to attend more to the beauty and elegance of the composition than to the matter delivered. Rogers.
- Set. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. A number of things suited to each other; a number of things of which one cannot conveniently be separated from the rest.
Sensations and passions seem to depend upon a particular set of motions. Celcius.
All corpuscles of the same set or kind agree in every thing. Woodward.
'Tis not a set of features or complexion,
The tincture of a skin, that I admire. Addison.
I shall here lay together a new set of remarks, and observe the artifices of our enemies to raise such prejudices. Addison.
Homer introduced that monstrous character to show the marvellous, and paint it in a new set of colours. Brown.
He must change his comrades;
In half the time he talks them round,
There must another set be found. Swift.
They refer to those critics who are partial to some particular set of writers to the prejudice of others. Pope.
Perhaps there is no man, nor set of men, upon earth, whose sentiments I intricely follow. Watts.
2. Any thing not down, but put in a state of some growth into the ground.
'Tis raised by sets or berries, like white thorn, and lies the same time in the ground. Mortimer's Husbandry.
3. The apparent fall of the sun, or other bodies of heaven, below the horizon. The

- The weary sun hath made a golden set;
And, by the bright track of his fiery car,
Gives signal of a goodly day to-morrow. Shakespeare. R. III.
When the battle's lost and won.
—That will be ere set of sun. Shakespeare. Macbeth.
Before set of sun that day, I hope to reach my Winter-quarters. Atterbury to Pope.
4. A wager at dice.
That was but civil war, an equal set,
Where piles with piles, and eagles eagles fight. Dryden.
5. A game.
Have I not here the best cards for the game,
To win this easy match plaid for a crown?
And shall I now give o'er the yielded set? Shakespeare.
When we have match'd our rackets to these balls,
We will, in France, play a set
Shall strike his father's crown into the hazard. Shakespeare. H. V.
- SET. n. f. [from seto, Latin.] Bristly; set with strong hairs; consisting of strong hairs.
The parent insect, with its stiff setaceous tail, torments the rib of the leaf when tender, and makes way for its egg into the very pith. Derham.
- SET. n. f. [from seto, Latin.]
A seton is made when the skin is taken up with a needle, and the wound kept open by a twist of silk or hair, that humours may vent themselves. Farriers call this operation in cattle rowelling. Wyn y.
I made a seton to give a vent to the humour. Wyn y.
If the sinus be of great length depending, make a perforation in the lower part by a seton-needle with a twisted silk. Wyn y.
- SETTER. n. f. A large long seat with a back to it.
- SETTER. n. f. [from set.]
1. One who sets.
When he was gone I cast this book away: I could not look upon it but with weeping eyes, in remembering him who was the only setter on to do it. Ascham.
Shameless Warwick, peace!
Proud setter up and puller down of kings! Shakespeare. H. VI.
He seemeth to be a setter forth of strange gods. Ascham.
2. A dog who beats the field, and points the bird for the sport-men.
3. A man who performs the office of a setting dog, or finds out persons to be plundered.
Another set of men are the devil's setters, who continually beat their brains how to draw in some innocent unguarded heir into their hellish net, learning his humour, prying into his circumstances, and observing his weak side. South.
- SETTERWORT. n. f. An herb; a species of hellebore.
- SETTING DOG. n. f. [from set, Ital. setting and dog.]
A dog taught to find game, and point it out to the sportsman.
Will obliges young heirs with a setting dog he has made himself. Addison.
- SETTLE. n. f. [from set, Sax.] A seat; a bench; something to sit on.
From the bottom to the lower settle shall be two cubits. Ezek. xliii. 14.
The man, their hearty welcome first express,
A common settle drew for either guest,
Inviting each his weary limbs to rest. Dryden.
- TO SETTLE. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To place in any certain state after a time of fluctuation or disturbance.
I will settle you after your old estates, and will do better unto you than at your beginnings. Ezek. xxxvi. 11.
In hope to find Better abode, and my afflicted powers
To settle here. Milton.
2. To fix in any way of life.
The father thought the time drew on
Of settling in the world his only son. Dryden.
3. To fix in any place.
Settled in his face I see Sad resolution. Milton.
4. To establish; to confirm.
Justice submitted to what Abra pleas'd:
Her will alone could settle or revoke,
And law was fix'd by what the latest spoke.
5. To determine; to affirm; to free from ambiguity.
This exactness will be judged troublesome, and therefore most men will think they may be excused from settling the complex ideas of mixed modes so precisely in their minds. Locke.
Medals give a very great light to history, in confirming such passages as are true in old authors, and settling such as are told after different manners. Addison.
6. To fix; to make certain or unchangeable.
His banish'd gods restor'd to rites divine,
And settl'd sure succession in his line. Dryden's En.
If you will not take some care to settle our language, and

- put it into a state of continuance, your memory shall not be preserved above an hundred years, further than by imperfect tradition. Swift.
7. To fix; not to suffer to continue doubtful in opinion, or desultory and wavering in conduct.
This, by a settled habit in things, whereof we have frequent experience, is performed so quick, that we take that for the perception of our sensation which is an idea formed by our judgment. Locke.
A pamphlet that talks of slavery, France, and the pre-tender; they desire no more: it will settle the wayings, and confirm the doubtful. Swift.
8. To make close or compact.
Cover ant-hills up, that the rain may settle the turf before the Spring. Mortimer's Husbandry.
9. To fix unalienably by legal sanctions.
I have given him the parsonage of the parish, and, because I know his value, have settled upon him a good annuity for life. Addison's Spectator.
10. To fix inseparably.
Exalt your passion by directing and settling it upon an object, the due contemplation of whose loveliness may cure perfectly all hurts received from mortal beauty. Boyle.
11. To affect so as that the dregs or impurities sink to the bottom.
So do the winds and thunders cleanse the air;
So working seas settle and purge the wine. Davies.
12. To compose; to put into a state of calmness.
When thou art settling thyself to thy devotions, imagine thou hearest thy Saviour calling to thee, as he did to Martha, Why art thou so careless? Duppa.
- TO SETTLE. v. n.
1. To subside; to sink to the bottom and repose there.
This is mere moral babble, and direct
Against the canon laws of our foundation:
I must not suffer this; yet 'tis the lees.
And settlings of a melancholy blood. Milton.
2. To lose motion or fermentation; to deposit faces at the bottom.
Your fury then boil'd upward to a foam;
But since this mintage came, you sink and settle,
As if cold water had been pour'd upon you. Dryden.
A government, upon such occasions, is always thick before it settles. Addison's Freeholder.
3. To fix one's self; to establish a residence.
The Spinetta, descended from the Pelegrin, settled at the mouth of the river Po. Arbutnot.
4. To chuse a method of life; to establish a domestick state.
As people marry now, and settle,
Fierce love abates his usual mettle;
Worldly desires, and household cares,
Disturb the godhead's soft affairs. Prior.
5. To become fixed so as not to change.
The wind came about and settled in the West, so as we could make no way. Bacon.
6. To quit an irregular and desultory for a methodical life.
7. To take any lasting state.
That country became a gained ground by the mud brought down by the Nilus, which settled by degrees into a firm land. Brown's Vulg. Errors.
According to laws established by the divine wisdom, it was wrought by degrees from one form into another, 'till it settled at length into an habitable earth. Burnet.
Chyle, before it circulates with the blood, is whitish; by the force of circulation it runs through all the intermediate colours, 'till it settles in an intense red. Arbutnot.
8. To rest; to repose.
When time hath worn out their natural vanity, and taught them discretion, their fondness settles on its proper object. Spekt.
Warm'd in the brain the brazen weapon lies,
And shades eternal settle o'er his eyes. Pope.

1. A week; the time from one day of the week to the next day of the same denomination preceding or following; a week, numbered according to the practice of the old northern nations, as in fortnight.
Rome was either more grateful to the beholders, or more noble in itself, than just with the sword and lance, maintained for a sevennight together. Sidney.
Iago's footing here anticipates our thoughts
A sevennight's speed. Shak. Othello.
Shining woods, laid in a dry room, within a sevennight lost their shining. Bacon's Natural History.
2. We use still the word sevennight or sevenight in computing time: as, it happened on Monday was sevennight, that is, on the Monday before last Monday; it will be done on Monday
sevennight, that is, on the Monday after next Monday.
This comes from one of those untucker'd ladies whom you were so sharp upon on Monday was sevennight. Aldis.

the first after the sixth.
The child born in the seventh month doth commonly well. Bacon.
So Pharaoh, or some greater king than he,
Provided for the seventh necessity:
Taught from above his magazines to frame;
That famine was prevented e'er it came. Dryd.
2. Containing one part in seven.
Thy air is like the first:
A third is like the former. Filthy hags!
Why do you shew me this? A fourth? Start, eye!
What! will the line stretch to the crack of doom?
Another yet? A seventh! I'll see no more. Shaksp.
- SEVENTHLY*. adv. [From seventh.] In the seventh place; an ordinal adverb.

Where pastures in several be,
Of one silly aker of ground
Than champion maketh of three. Tusser, Husband.
2. Each particular singly taken.
This by some severals
Of head piece extraordinary, lower messes
Perchance are to this business purblind. Shaksp.
There was not time enough to hear
The severals. Shaksp.
That will appear to be a methodical successive observation of these severals, as degrees and steps preparative the one to the other. Hammond's Fundamentals.
Severals of them neither rose from any conspicuous family, nor left any behind them. Addison's Freeholder.- 3. An' inclosed or separate place.
They had their several for heathen nations, their several for the people of their own nation, their several for men, their several for women, their several for their priests, and for the high priest alone their several. Hooker.
- 4. Inclosed ground.
There was a nobleman that was lean of visage, but immediately after his marriage he grew pretty plump and fat. One said to him, your lordship doth contrary to other married men; for they at first wax lean, and you wax fat. Sir Walter Raleigh flood by and said, there is no beast, that if you take him from the common, and put him into the severals, but will wax fat. Bacon.
- SE' VERALLY*. adv. [from several.] Distinctly; particularly;
separately; apart from others.
Consider angels each of them severally in himself, and their law is, all ye his angels praise him. Hooker.
Nature and scripture, both jointly and not severally, either of them, be so compleat, that unto everlasting felicity we need not the knowledge of any thing more than these two may easily furnish our minds with. Hooker.
Th' apostles could not be confin'd
To these or those, but severally design'd
Their large commission round the world to blow. Dryd.
We ought not so much to love likeness as beauty, and to chuse from the fairest bodies severally the fairest parts. Dryd.
Others were so very small and close together, that I could not keep my eye fixedly on them severally so as to number them. Newt. Opt.
- SE' VERALTY*. n. f. [from several.] State of separation from the rest.
The jointure or advancement of the lady was the third part of the principality of Wales, the dukedom of Cornwall, and earldom of Chester, to be set forth in severalty. Bacon.
Having considered the apertions in severalty, according to their particular requisites, I am now come to the casting and contexture of the whole work. Wotton.

More formidable Hydra stands within;
Whose jaws with iron teeth severely grin. Dryd.
- SEVERITY*. n. f. [severitas, Latin.]
1. Cruel treatment; sharpness of punishment.
I laugh to see your ladyship so fond,
To think that you have ought but Talbot's shadow
Whereon to practise your severity. Shaksp.
He shall be thrown down the Tarpeian rock
With rigorous hands; he hath resisted law,
And therefore law shall scorn him further trial
Than the severity of publick power,
Which he so sets at naught. Shaksp. Coriolanus.
Never were so great rebellions expiated with so little blood, as for the severity used upon those taken in Kent, it was but upon a scum of people. Bacon.
There is a difference between an ecclesiastical censure and severity: for under a censure we only include excommunication, suspension, and an interdict; but under an ecclesiastical severity, every other punishment of the church is intended; but according to some, a censure and a severity is the same. Aylmer.- 2. Hardness; power of distressing.
Though nature hath given insects sagacity to avoid the winter cold, yet its severity finds them out. Hale's Orig. of Man.

mine iniquity. Job. xiv. 17.
To SEW. v. a. To drain a pond for the fish. Ainsworth.
- SEWER*. v. n. [sewer trenchant, French; or assewer, old French; from assier, to set down; for those officers set the dishes on the table. Newton's Milton.]
1. An officer who serves up a feast.
Marshall'd feast,
Serv'd up in hall with sewers and feneshals:
The skill of artifice or office mean. Milt.
The cook and sewer, each his talent tries,
In various figures scenes of dishes rise:
2. [From issuer, issuer.] Cowel. A passage for water to run through, now corrupted to shore.
The fennmen hold that the sewers must be kept so, as the water may not stay too long in the spring till the weeds and sedge be grown up. Bacon.
Men fuller their private in judgment to be drawn into the common sewer, or stream of the present vogue. K. Charles.
As one who long in populous city pent,
Where houses thick, and sewers annoy the air,
Forth issuing on a summer's morn, to breathe
Among the pleasant villages and farms
Adjoin'd, from each thing met conceives delight. Milt.

 And to prevailing shades the murmuring world resign'd. Rofe.
 3. Coolness made by interception of the sun.
 Antigonus, when told that the enemy had such volleys of arrows that hid the sun, said, that falls out well; for this is hot weather, and so we shall fight in the shade. Bacon.
 That high mount of God whence light and shade
 Shine both. Milton.
 4. An obscure place, properly in a grove or close wood by which the light is excluded.
 Let us seek out some desolate shade, and there Weep our sad bosoms empty. Shake.
 Regions of sorrow, doleful shades. Milton.
 Then to the desert takes his flight;
 Where still from shade to shade the son of God,
 After forty days fasting, had remain'd.
 The pious prince then seeks the shade,
 Which hides from fight his venerable maid. Dryd.
 5. Screen causing an exclusion of light or heat; umbrage.
 Let the arch'd knife
 Well sharpen'd now assail the spreading shades
 Of vegetables, and their thirsty limbs dis sever.
 In Brazil are trees which kill those that sit under their shade in a few hours. Arbutnot.
 6. Protection; shelter.
 7. The parts of a picture not brightly coloured.
 'Tis ev'ry painter's art to hide from fight,
 And cast in shades what seen would not delight. Dryd.

8. A colour; gradation of light.
 White, red, yellow, blue, with their several degrees, or shades and mixtures, as green come in only by the eyes. Locke.
 9. The figure formed upon any surface corresponding to the body by which the light is intercepted.
 Envy will merit as its shade pursue. Pope.
 10. The soul separated from the body; so called as supposed by the ancients to be perceptible to the sight, not to the touch. A spirit; a ghost; manes.
 To Trachin swift as thought the sitting shade
 Thro' air his momentary journey made. Dryd.
 Ne'er to these chambers where the mighty rest,
 Since their foundation, came a nobler guest;
 Nor e'er was to the bow's of bliss convey'd
 A fairer spirit or more welcome shade. Tickell.
TO SHADE. v. a. [from the noun.]
 1. To overspread with opacity.
 Thou shad'st
 The full blaze of thy beams, and through a cloud Thy skirts appear. Milton.
 2. To cover from the light or heat; to overspread.
 A seraphic wings wore to shade
 His lineaments divine. Milton.
 And after these, came arm'd with spear and shield
 An host so great, as cover'd all the field:
 And all their foreheads like the knights before,
 With laurels ever-green were shaded o'er. Dryd.
 I went to crop the sylvan fences,
 And shade our altars with their leafy greens. Dryd.
 Sing, while beside the shaded tomb I mourn,
 And with fresh bays her rural shrine adorn. Pope's Writ.
 3. To shelter; to hide.
 Ere in our own house I do shade my head,
 The good patricians must be visited. Shake.
 4. To protect; to cover; to screen.
 Leave not the faithful side
 That gave thee being, still shades thee and protects. Mil.
 5. To mark with different gradations of colours.
 The portal stone, inimitable on earth
 By model, or by shading pencil drawn. Milton.
 6. To paint in obscure colours.
SHADINESS. n. f. [from shady.] The state of being shady, umbrageousness.
SHADOW. n. f. [reacu, Saxon; schadowe, Dutch.]
 1. The representation of a body by which the light is intercepted.
 Poor Tom! proud of heart, to ride over four inch'd bridges, to court his own shadow for a traitor. Shake.
 Life's but a walking shadow, a poor player,
 That struts and frets his hour upon the stage,
 And then is heard no more. Shake.
 Such a nature,
 Tick'd with good success, disdains the shadow
 Which he treads on at noon. Shake.
 The body, tho' it moves, yet not changing perceivable distance with some other bodies, the thing seems to stand still, as in the hands of clocks, and shadows of sun-dials. Locke.
 2. Opacity; darkness; shade.
 By the revolution of the skies
 Night's sable shadow from the ocean rise. Denham.
 His countenance probably lived within the shade of the earthquake and shadow of the eclipse. Addis.
 3. Shelter made by any thing that intercepts the light, heat, or influence of the air.
 In secret shadow from the sunny rays,
 On a sweet bed of lillies softly laid. Fa. Queen.
 Here father, take the shadow of this tree
 For your good host. Shake. K. Lear.
 4. Obscure place.
 To the secret shadows I retire,
 To pay my penance till my years expire. Dryd.
 5. Dark part of a picture.
 A shadow is a diminution of the first and second light. The first light is that which proceeds immediately from a lightened body, as the beams of the sun. The second is an accidental light spreading itself into the air or medium proceeding from the other. Shadows are threefold: the first is a single shadow, and the least of all; and is proper to the plain surface where it is not wholly possessed of the light. The second is the double shadow, and it is used when the surface begins once to forsake your eye, as in columns. The third shadow is made by crossing over your double shadow again, which darkness by a third part. It is used for the inmost shadow, and farthest from the light, as in gulfs, wells, and caves. Penham.
 After great lights there must be great shadows. Dryden.
 6. Any thing perceptible only to the sight; a ghost; a spirit, or shade.
 Hence, terrible shadow!
 Unreal mock'ry, hence! Shake.
 7. An imperfect and faint representation: opposed to substance.
 If substance might be call'd that shadow seem'd.
 In the glorious lights of heaven we perceive a shadow of his divine countenance. Raleigh.
 Without

S H A

Without the least impulse or shadow of fate. Milton.
 Amongst the creatures are particular excellencies scattered, which are some shadow of the divine perfections. Tillotson.
 8. Inseparable companion.
 Sin and her shadow, death. Milton.
 Thou my shadow
 Inseparable must with me be long. Milton.
 9. Type; mystical representation.
 Types and shadows of that destin'd feed. Milton.
 10. Protection; shelter; favour.
 Keep me under the shadow of thy wings. Psalms.
TO SHADOW. v. a. [from the noun.]
 1. To cover with opacity.
 The warlike elf much wondered at this tree,
 So fair and great, that shadowed all the ground. Fa. Q.
 The Assyrian was a cedar with fair branches, and with a shadowing throud. Ezek. xxxi. 3.
 2. To cloud; to darken.
 Mistrake me not for my complexion;
 The shadow'd livery of the burning sun
 To whom I am a neighbour. Shake.
 3. To make cool or gently gloomy by interception of the light or heat.
 A gentle south-west wind comes creeping over flowery fields and shadow'd waters in the extreme heat of summer. Sidney.
 4. To conceal under cover; to hide; to screen.
 Let every soldier hew him down a bough,
 And bear't before him; thereby shall we shadow
 The number of our host, and make discovery Shake.
 Err in report of us.
 5. To protect; to screen from danger; to shroud.
 God shall forgive you Cœur de Lion's death,
 The rather, that you give his offspring life,
Shadowing their right under your wings of war. Shake.
 6. To mark with various gradations of colour, or light.
 Turnsoil is made of old linen rags dried, and laid in a saucer of vinegar, and set over a chafing dish of coals till it boil; then wring it into a shell, and put it into a little gum arabick: it is good to shadow carnations, and all yellows. Peach.
 From a round globe of any uniform colour, the idea imprinted in our mind is of a flat circle, variously shadowed with different degrees of light coming to our eyes. Locke.
 More broken scene, made up of an infinite variety of inequalities and shadowings, that naturally arise from an agreeable mixture of hills, groves, and vallies. Addis.
 7. To paint in obscure colours.
 If the parts be too much distant, so that there be void spaces which are deeply shadowed, then place in those voids some fold to make a joining of the parts. Dryd. Dufresnoy.
 8. To represent imperfectly.
 Whereat I wak'd and found
 Before mine eyes all real, as the dream
 Had lively shadow'd. Milton Parad. Lost.
 Augustus is shadow'd in the person of Eneas. Dryd.
 I have shadowed some part of your virtues under another name. Dryd.
 9. To represent typically.
 Many times there are three things said to make up the substance of a sacrament; namely, the grace which is thereby offered, the element which shadoweth or signifieth grace, and the word which expresseth what is done by the element. Hook.
 The shield being to defend the body from weapons, aptly shadow out to us the continence of the emperor, which made him proof to all the attacks of pleasure. Addison.
SHADOWY. adj. [from shadow.]
 1. Full of shade; gloomy.
 This shadowy desert, unfrequented woods,
 I better brook than flourishing peopled towns. Shake.
 With shadowy verdure flourish'd high,
 A sudden youth the groves enjoy. Fenton.
 2. Not brightly luminous.
 More pleasant light
Shadowy sets off the face of things. Milton.
 3. Faintly representative; typical.
 When they see
 Law can discover sin, but not remove Save by those shadowy expiations weak,
 The blood of bulls and goats; they may conclude
 Some blood more precious must be paid for man. Milt.
 4. Unsubstantial; unreal.
 Milton has brought into his poems two actors of a shadowy and fictitious nature, in the persons of sin and death; by which he hath interwoven in his fable a very beautiful allegory. Addis.
 5. Dark; opaque.
 By command, e're yet dim night
 Her shadowy cloud withdraws, I am to haste Homeward. Milt. Parad. Lost.
SHADY. adj. [from shade.]
 1. Full of shade; mildly gloomy.
 The wakeful bird
 Sings dawning, and in shadiest covert hid Tunes her nocturnal note. Milt. Parad. Lost.
 Stretch'd at ease you sing your happy loves,
 And Amarillis fills the shady groves. Dryd.

S H A

2. Secure from the glare of light; or fulminence of heat.
 Cast it also that you may have rooms shady for summer, and warm for winter. Bacon.
SHAFT. n. f. [reacu, Saxon.]
 1. An arrow; a missile weapon.
 To pierce pursuing shield,
 By parents train'd, the Tartars wild are taught;
 With shafts shot out from their back-turn'd bow. Sidney.
 Who in the spring, from the new sun,
 Already has a fever got,
 Too late begins these shafts to shun,
 Which Phœbus th'ro' his veins has shot. Waller.
 They are both the archer and shaft taking aim afar off, and then shooting themselves directly upon the desired mark. Mare.
 So lofty was the pile, a Parthian bow
 With vigour drawn, must send the shaft below: Dryd.
 O'er thee the secret shaft
 That wafts at midnight, or th' undreaded hour
 Of noon, flies harmless. Thomson.
 2. [Shaft. Dutch.] A narrow, deep, perpendicular pit.
 They sink a shaft or pit of six foot in length. Crew.
 The fulminating damp, upon its accension, gives a crack like the report of a gun; and makes an explosion so forcible as to kill the miners, and force bodies of great weight from the bottom of the pit up through the shaft. Woodward.
 Suppose a tube, or as the miners call it, a shaft; were sunk from the surface of the earth to the center. Arbutnot.
 3. Any thing straight; the spire of a church.
 Præfite to draw small and easy things, as a cherry with the leaf, the shaft of a steeple. Peacham.
SHAG. n. f. [reacu, Saxon.]
 1. Rough woolly hair.
 Full often like a shag-hair'd crafty kern,
 Hath he con'erled with the enemy;
 And given me notice of their villanies. Shake.
 Where is your husband?
 He's a traitor. Shake.
 Thou lie'st thou shag-ear'd villain.
 From the shag of his body, the shape of his legs, his having little or no tail, the slowness of his gate, and his climbing up of trees, he seems to come near the bear kind. Grew.
 True Winney broad cloth, with its shag unthorn,
 Be this the horseman's fence. Gay.
 2. A kind of cloth.
SHAG. n. f. A sea bird.
 Among the first sort we reckon shags, duck, and mallard. Car.
SHAGGED. adj. [from shag.]
SHAGGY. adj.
 1. Ruggedly; hairy.
 They change their hue, with haggard eyes they stare;
 Lean are their looks, and shaggy are their hair. Dryd.
 A lion's hide he wears;
 About his shoulders hangs the shaggy skin,
 The teeth and gaping jaws severely grin. Dryd.
 From the frosty north
 The early valiant Swede draws forth his wings,
 In battalious array, while Volga's stream
 Sends opposite, in shaggy armour clad
 Her borderers; on mutual slaughter bent. Philips.
 2. Rough; rugged.
 They pluck'd the seated hills with all their load,
 Rocks, waters, woods, and by the shaggy tops Uplifting bore them in their hands. Milt. Parad. Lost.
 There, where very desolation dwells,
 By grotts and caverns shaggy'd with horrid shades,
 She may pass on with unblench'd majesty,
 Be it not done in pride. Milt.
 Through Eden went a river large,
 Nor chang'd his course, but through the shaggy hill
 Pass'd underneath ingulph'd. Milton.
 How would the old king smile
 To see you weigh the paws when tip'd with gold,
 And throw the shaggy spoils about your shoulders. Addis.
 Ye rugged rocks! which holy knees have worn,
 Ye grotts and caverns shaggy'd with horrid thorn. Pope.
SHAGREEN. n. f. [chagrin, French.] The skin of a kind of fish, or skin made rough in imitation of it.
TO SHAGREEN. v. a. [chagriner, French.] To irritate; to provoke. Both should be written chagrin.
TO SHAIL. v. n. To walk sideways; a low word.
 Child, you must walk strait, without skewing and shailing to every step you set. L'Estrange.
TO SHAKE. v. a. preterit, shook; part. pass. shaken, or shook.
 [reacu, Saxon; shacken, Dutch.]
 1. To put into a vibrating motion; to move with quick returns backwards and forwards; to agitate.
 Who honours not his father,
 Henry the fifth that made all France to quake,
 Shake he his weapon at us, and pass by. Shake.
 I will shake mine hand upon them, and they shall be a spoil to their servants. Zech. ii. 9.
 I shook my lap and said, so God shake out every man from his house, even thus be he shaken out and emptied. Neb. v.

The stars fell into the earth, even as a fig-tree casteth her untimely figs when she is shaken of a mighty wind. Rev. vi.
 He shook the sacred honours of his head: Rev. vi.
 With terror trembled heav'n's subsiding hill,
 And from his shaken curls ambrosial dews distill. Dryden.
 She first her husband on the poop espies,
 Shaking his hand at distance on the main;
 She took the sign, and shook her hand again. Dryden.
 2. To make to totter or tremble.
 The rapid wheels shake heav'n's basis. Milton.
 Let France acknowledge that her shaken throne
 Was once supported, sir, by you alone. Roscommon.
 3. To throw down by a violent motion.
 Macbeth is ripe for shaking, and the powers above
 Put on their instruments. Shakespeare.
 The tyrannous breathing of the North Shakes all our buds from blowing. Shakespeare.
 When ye depart, shake off the dust of your feet. Mat. x.
 He looked at his book, and, holding out his right leg, put it into such a quivering motion, that I thought he would have shaken it off. Tatler.
 4. To throw away; to drive off.
 'Tis our first intent
 To shake all cares and business from our age, Conferring them on younger strengths, whilst we Unburthen'd crawl towards death. Shakespeare.
 5. To weaken; to put in danger.
 When his doctrines grew too strong to be shook by his enemies, they persecuted his reputation. Atterbury.
 6. To drive from resolution; to depress; to make afraid.
 A fly and constant knave, not to be shook'd. Shakespeare.
 This respite shook
 The bosom of my conscience. Shakespeare.
 Be not soon shaken in mind, or troubled, as that the day of Christ is at hand. 2 Thes. ii. 2.
 Not my firm faith
 Can by his fraud be shaken or seduced. Milton.
 7. To SHAKE hands. This phrase, from the action used among friends at meeting and parting, sometimes signifies to join with, but commonly to take leave of.
 With the slave,
 He ne'er shook hands, nor bid farewell to him,
 'Till he unlearn'd him from the nape to th' chops. Shakespeare.
 Nor can it be safe to a king to tarry among them who are shaking hands with their allegiance, under pretence of laying faster hold of their religion. King Charles.
 8. To SHAKE off. To rid himself of; to free from; to divest of.
 Be pleas'd that I shake off these names you give me:
 Antonio never yet was thief or pirate. Shakespeare.
 If I could shake off but one seven years,
 From these old arms and legs,
 I'd with thee every foot. Shakespeare.
 Says, sacred bard! what could bestow
 Courage on thee, to soar so high?
 Tell me, brave friend! what help'd thee so
 To shake off all mortality? Waller.
 Him I referred to be answered by himself, after I had shaken off the lesser and more barking creatures.
 Can I want courage for so brave a deed?
 I've shook it off: my soul is free from fear. Dryden.
 Here we are free from the formalities of custom and respect: we may shake off the haughty impertinent. Cellier.
 How does thy beauty smooth
 The face of war, and make even horror smile!
 At sight of thee my heart shakes off its sorrows. Addison.
 To SHAKE. v. n.
 1. To be agitated with a vibratory motion.
 Darts are counted as stubble: he laugheth at the shaking of a spear. Job xli. 29.
 2. To totter.
 3. To tremble; to be unable to keep the body still.
 Thy fight, which should Make our eyes flow with joy, hearts dance with comforts, Constrains them weep, and shake with fear and sorrow. Shak.
 What said the wench, when he rose up again?
 — Trembled and shook; for why, he stamp'd,
 As if the vicar meant to cozen him. Shakespeare.
 A shaking through their limbs they find,
 Like leaves saluted by the wind. Waller.
 4. To be in terror; to be deprived of firmness.
 He shrank of succours, and in deep despair,
 Shook at the dismal prospect of the war. Dryden.
 SHAKE. n. f. [from the verb.]
 1. Concussion.
 If that thy fame with ev'ry toy be pos'd,
 'Tis a thin web, which poisonous fancies make;
 But the great soldier's honour was compos'd
 Of thicker stuff, which could endure a shake:
 Wisdom picks friends; civility plays the rest,
 A toy shunn'd cleanly passeth with thee best. Herbert.

substantial stock, without which they are no more than blasphemy that would fall away with every shake of wind. Addison.
 2. Vibratory motion.
 Several of his countrymen probably lived within the shake of the earthquake, and the shadow of the eclipse, which are recorded by this author. Addison.
 3. Motion given and received.
 Our salutations were very hearty on both sides, consisting of many kind shakes of the hand. Addison.
 SHA'KER. n. f. [from shake.] The person or thing that shakes.
 Go then, the guilty at thy will chastise,
 He said; the shaker of the earth replies. Pope's Odyssey.
 SHALE. n. f. [Corrupted, I think, for shell.] A hulk; the case of seeds in siliqueous plants.
 Behold you poor and starved band,
 And your fair flesh shall fuck away their souls,
 Leaving them but the scales and hulks of men. Shakespeare.
 SHALL. v. defective. [yeal, Sax. is originally Lowe, or Low.
 In Chaucer, the faith I shall to God, means the faith I owe to God: thence it became a sign of the future tense. The French use devoir, deit, deit, in the same manner, with a kind of future signification; and the Swedes have shall, and the Islanders skal, in the same sense. It has no tenses but shall future, and should imperfect.
 The explanation of shall, which foreigners and provincials confound with will, is not easy; and the difficulty is increased by the poets, who sometimes give to shall an emphatical sense of will: but I shall endeavour, crassa Minerva, to show the meaning of shall in the future tense.
 1. I SHALL love. It will so happen that I must love; I am resolved to love.
 2. SHALL I love? Will it be permitted me to love? Will you permit me to love? Will it happen that I must love?
 3. THOU SHALT love. I command thee to love; it is permitted thee to love; [in poetry or solemn diction] it will happen that thou must love.
 4. SHALT thou love? Will it happen that thou must love?
 Will it be permitted to thee to love?
 5. HE SHALL love. It will happen that he must love; it is commanded him that he love.
 It is a mind, that shall remain a poison where it is.
 — Shall remain!
 Hear you this triton of the minnows? Mark you
 His absolute shall? Shakespeare.
 See Romulus the great:
 This prince a priestess of your blood shall bear,
 And like his fire in arms he shall appear. Dryden's En.
 That he shall receive no benefit from Christ, is the affirmation whereon all his despair is founded; and the one way of removing this dismal apprehension, is to convince him that Christ's death, and the benefits thereof, either do, or, if he perform the condition required of him, shall certainly belong to him.
 6. SHALL he love? Is it permitted him to love? In solemn language, Will it happen that he must love?
 7. The plural persons follow the signification of the singular.
 SHA'LLOON. n. f. A slight woollen stuff.
 In blue shalloon shall Hannibal be clad,
 And Scipio trail an Irish purple plaid. Swift.
 SHA'LLOP. n. f. [chaloupe, French.] A small boat.
 You were resolved, after your arrival into Oronoque, to pass to the mine; and, to that end, you desired to have Sir John Feame's shallop: I do not allow of that course, because ye cannot land so secretly but that some Indians on the river side may discover you, who giving knowledge of your passage to the Spaniards, you may be cut off before you can recover your boat. Raleigh.
 There with your shallop stay:
 The game's not lost; I have one card to play. Waller.
 Our hero set
 In a small shallop, fortune in his debt;
 So near a hope of crowns and scepters, more Than ever Priam, when he flourish'd, wore. Waller.
 SHA'LLOW. adj. [This word is probably compounded of shale and low.]
 1. Not deep; having the bottom at no great distance from the surface or edge.
 I had been drowned, but that the shore was shelvy and shallow; a death that I abhor. Shakespeare.
 That inundation, though it were shallow, had a long continuance, whereby they of the vale, that were not drowned, perished for want of food. Bacon.
 The like opinion he held of Meotis Palus, that by the floods of Tanais, and earth brought down thereby, it grew observably shallow in his days, and would in process of time become a firm land. Dryden's Purgatory.
 I am made a shallow forded stream,
 Seen to the bottom: all my clearness scorn'd,
 And all my faults expos'd. Dryden's All for Love.
Shallow brooks, that flow'd so clear,
 The bottom did the top appear. Dryden.
 In shallow furrows vines securely grow. Dryden.

2. Not intellectually deep; not profound; not very knowing or wise; empty; trifling; futile; silly.
 I'll shew my mind,
 According to my shallow simple skill. Shakespeare.
 This is a very shallow monster:
 Afraid of him? A very shallow monster.
 The man 't' moon! A most poor credulous monster. Shak.
 The king was neither so shallow nor so ill advertised as not to perceive the intention of the French king, for the investing himself of Britaigne. Bacon's Henry VII.
 Uncertain and unsettled he remains,
 Deep vest in books, and shallow in himself. Milton.
 One would no more wonder to see the most shallow nation of Europe the most vain, than to find the most empty fellows in every nation more conceited than the rest. Addison.
 3. Not deep of sound.
 If a virginal were made with a double concave, the one all the length of the virginal, and the other at the end of the strings, as the harp hath, it must make the found perfecter, and not so shallow and jarring. Bacon.
 SHA'LLOW. n. f. [from the adjective.] A shelf; a land; a flat; a shoal; a place where the water is not deep.
 I should not see the sandy hour-glass run,
 But I should think of shallows and of flats;
 And see my wealthy Andrew dock'd in sand,
 Veiling his high top lower than her ribs,
 To kiss her burial. Shakespeare.
 A swift stream is not heard in the channel, but upon shallows of gravel. Bacon's Nat. History.
 Having but newly left those grammatical flats and shallows, where they stuck unreasonably, to learn a few words with lamentable confusion, and now on the sudden transported, to be tost with their unballasted wits inathomless and unquiet depths of controversy, they do grow into hatred of learning. Milt.
 You that so oft have founded
 And fathom'd all his thoughts, that know the deeps
 And shallows of his heart, should need no instruments
 To advance your ends. Denham.
 In arms of the sea, and among islands, there is no great depth, and some places are plain shallows. Burnet.
 He founds and fathoms him, to find
 The shallows of his soul. Dryden.
 The wary Dutch
 Behind their teach'rous shallows now withdraw,
 And there lay snares to catch the British host. Dryden.
 Three more fierce Eurus in his angry mood
 Dash'd on the shallows of the moving sand,
 And in mid ocean left them moor'd a-land. Dryden.
 Their spawn being lighter than the water, there it would not sink to the bottom, but be buoyed up by it, and carried away to the shallows. Ray on the Creation.
 With the use of diligence, and prudent conduct, he may decline both rocks and shallows. Norris.
 The sea could not be much narrower than it is, without a great loss to the world; and must we now have an ocean of mere flats and shallows, to the utter ruin of navigation? Bentley.
 SHALLOWBRAINED. adj. [shallow and brain.] Foolish; futile; trifling; empty.
 It cannot but be matter of just indignation to all good men to see a company of lewd shallowbrained buffs making atheism, and contempt of religion, the sole badge of wit. South.
 SHA'LLOWLY. adv. [from shallow.]
 1. With no great depth.
 The load lieth open on the grass, or but shallowly covered. Carew.
 2. Simply; foolishly.
 Most shallowly did you these arms commence,
 Fondly brought here, and foolishly sent hence:
 Strike up our drums, pursue the scatter'd fray. Shakespeare.
 SHALLOWNESS. n. f. [from shallow.]
 1. Want of depth.
 2. Want of thought; want of understanding; futility; illiness; emptiness.
 By it do all things live their measur'd hour:
 We cannot ask the thing which is not there,
 Blaming the shallowness of our request. Herbert.
 I cannot wonder enough at the shallowness and impertinent zeal of the vulgar sort in Druid, who were carried away with such an ignorant devotion for his successes, when it little concerned their religion or security. Hewel.
 SHALM. n. f. [German.] A kind of musical pipe.
 Every captain was commanded to have his soldiers in readinesses to set forward upon the sign given, which was by the sound of a shalm or hoboy. Knolles's Hist. of the Turks.
 SHALT. Second person of shall.
 To SHAM. v. n. [shoemi, Welsh, to cheat.]
 1. To trick; to cheat; to fool with a fraud; to delude with false pretences. A low word.
 Men tender in point of honour, and yet with little regard to truth, are sooner wrought upon by shame than by conscience, when they find themselves fooled and shammed into a conviction. L'Estrange.

SHA

2. To obtrude by fraud or folly.
 We must have a care that we do not, for want of laying things and things together, sham fallacies upon the world for current reason. L'Estrange.
 Then all your wits that fear and sham,
 Down from Don Quixote to Tom Tram,
 From whom I jests and puns purloin,
 And slyly put them off for mine, Prior.
 Fond to be thought a country wit.
 SHAM. n. f. [from the verb.] Fraud; trick; delusion; false pretence; imposture. A low word.
 No sham to gross but it will pass upon a weak man, that is pragmatical and inquisitive. L'Estrange.
 It goes a great way when natural curiosity and vulgar prejudice shall be assisted with the shams of astrological judgments. L'Estrange.
 He that first brought the sham, wheedle, or banter in use, put together, as he thought fit, those ideas he made it stand for. Locke.
 That in the sacred temple needs would try
 Without a fire th' unheated gums to fry,
 Believe who will the solemn sham, not I. Addison.
 SHAM. adj. False; counterfeit; fictitious; pretended.
 Never join the fray,
 Where the sham quarrel interrupts the way. Gay.
 SHAMBLE. n. f. [Of uncertain etymology. Scammalia, Ital.]
 1. The place where butchers kill or sell their meat; a butchery.
 Far be the thoughts of this from Henry's heart,
 To make a shamble of the parliament-house. Shak. H. VI.
 I hope my noble lord esteems me honest.
 — Oh, ay, as summer-flies are in the shambles,
 That quicken ev'n with blowing. Shakespeare.
 He warned a flock of sheep, that were driving to the shambles, of their danger; and, upon uttering some sounds, they all fled. Arbutnot.
 2. It is here improperly used.
 When the person is made the jest of the mob, or his back the shambles of the executioner, there is no more conviction in the one than in the other. Watts.
 SHAMBLING. adj. [See SCAMBLING.] Moving awkwardly and irregularly. A low bad word.
 By that shambling in his walk, it should be my rich banker, Gomez, whom I knew at Barcelona. Dryden.
 So when nurse Nokes to act young Ammon tries,
 With shambling legs, long chin, and foolish eyes,
 With dangling hands he strokes th' imperial robe,
 And with a cuckold's air commands the globe. Smith.
 SHAME. n. f. [reame, Saxon; schamte, Dutch.]
 1. The passion felt when reputation is supposed to be lost; the passion expressed sometimes by blushes.
 Lamenting sorrow did in darkness lye,
 And shame his ugly face did hide from living eye. Fa. Qu.
 Peace, peace, for shame, if not for charity.
 — Urge neither charity nor shame to me:
 Uncharitably with me have you dealt,
 And shamefully my hopes by you are butcher'd:
 My charity is outrage, life my shame;
 And in my shame still lives my sorrow's rage. Shak. R. III.
 Hide, for shame,
 Romans, your grandfires images,
 That blush at their degenerate progeny. Dryden.
 In the schools men are allowed, without shame, to deny the agreement of ideas; or out of the schools, from thence have learned, without shame, to deny the connection of ideas. Locke.
 2. The cause or reason of shame; disgrace; ignominy.
 The more shame for him that he sends it me;
 For I have heard him say a thousand times,
 His Julia gave it him at his departure. Shakespeare.
 Aaron had made them naked unto their shame amongst their enemies. Ex. xxxii. 25.
 God deliver the world from such guides, who are the shame
 of religion. South.
 This jest was first of the other house's making,
 And, five times try'd, has never fail'd of taking;
 For 'twere a shame a poet should be kill'd,
 Under the shelter of so broad a shield. Dryden.
 O shame to manhood! shall one daring boy
 The scheme of all our happiness destroy? Pope's Odyssey.
 3. Reproach.
 A foul shame is upon the thief. Ecclus. v. 14.
 Applause
 Turn'd to exploding hiss, triumph to shame,
 Cast on themselves from their own mouths. Milton.
 To SHAME. v. a. [from the noun.]
 1. To make ashamed; to fill with shame.
 To tell thee of whom deriv'd,
 Were shame enough to shame thee, wert thou not shameless. Sh.
 If thou hast power to raise him, bring him hither,
 And I've power to shame him hence:
 Oh, while you live tell truth and shame the devil. Shakespeare.
 Hyperbolus by suffering did traduce
 The ostracism, and sham'd it out of use, Cleaveland.
 23 T Despoil'd

Despoil'd
Of all our good, sham'd, naked, miserable. Milton.
What hurt can there be in all the slanders and disgraces of this world, if they are but the arts and methods of providence to shame us into the glories of the next. South.
Were there but one righteous man in the world, he would hold up his head with confidence and honour; he would shame
the world, and not the world him. South.
He in a loathsome dungeon doom'd to lie,
In bonds retain'd his birthright liberty,
And sham'd oppression, till it set him free. Dryden.
The coward bore the man immortal spite,
Who sham'd him out of madness into flight. Dryden.
Who shames a scribbler, breaks a cobweb through;
He spins the slight self-pleasing thread a-new. Pope.
2. To disgrace.
Ceres, fir knight, ye been too much to blame;
Thus for to blot the honour of the dead,
And with foul cowardice his carcass shame. Fairy Queen.
So bent, the more shall shame him his repulse. Milton.
To SHAME. v. n. To be ashamed.
Great shame it is, thing so divine in view,
Made for to be the world's most ornament,
To make the bait her gazers to embrew;
Good shames to be to ill an instrument. Spenser.
Sham'st thou not, knowing whence thou art exalted,
To let thy tongue detect thy base-born heart? Shakespeare.
To the trunk of it authors give such a magnitude, as shame to repeat. Raleigh's History of the World.
Aulter spy'd him,
Cruel Aulter thither hy'd him;
And with the ruff of one rude blast,
Sham'd not spitefully to waste
All his leaves, so fresh, so sweet,
And lay them trembling at his feet. Crashaw.
SHAMEFACED. adj. [shame and face.] Modest; bashful; easily put out of countenance.
Philoclea, who blushing and withal smiling, making shame-facedness pleasing, and pleasure shamefaced, tenderly moved her feet, unwonted to feel the naked ground. Sidney.
Conscience is a blushing shamefaced spirit, that mutinies in a man's bosom: it fills one full of obstacles. Shak. R. III.
A man may be shamefaced, and a woman modest, to the degree of scandalous. L'Estrange.
Your shamefaced virtue flunn'd the people's praise,
And senate's honours. Dryden.
From this time we may date that remarkable turn in the behaviour of our fashionable Englishmen, that makes them shamefaced in the exercise of those duties which they were wont into the world to perform. Addison's Freeholder.
SHAMEFACEDLY. adv. [from shamefaced.] Modestly; bashfully.
SHAMEFACEDNESS. n. f. [from shamefaced.] Modesty; bashfulness; timidity.
Dorus, when he had sung this, having had all the while a free beholding of the fair Pamela, could well have spared such horror, and defended the assault he gave unto her face with bringing a fair stain of shamefacedness into it. Sidney.
Why wonder ye,
Fair fir, at that which ye so much embrace?
She is the fountain of your modesty;
You shamefaced are, but shamefacedness itself is she. Fa. Qu.
None but fools, out of shamefacedness, hide their ulcers, which, if shown, might be healed. Dryden's Dufresnoy.
SHAMEFUL. adj. [shame and full.] Disgraceful; ignominious; infamous; reproachful.
Phœbus flying so most shameful light,
His blushing face in foggy cloud implies,
And hides for shame. Fairy Queen.
This all through that great prince's pride did fall,
And came to shameful end. Fairy Queen.
For this he shall live hated, be blasphem'd,
Seiz'd on by force, judg'd, and to death condemn'd,
A shameful and accurs'd! Milton.
His naval preparations were not more surprising than his quick and shameful retreat; for he returned to Carthage with only one ship, having fled without striking one stroke. Arbuth.
The knave of diamonds tries his wily arts,
And wins, O shameful chance! the queen of hearts. Pope.
SHAMEFULLY. adv. [from shameful.] Disgracefully; ignominiously; infamously; reproachfully.
None but that faw, quoth he, would ween for truth,
How shamefully that maid he did torment. Fairy Queen.
But I his holy secret
Presumptuously have publish'd, impiously,
Weakly at least, and shamefully. Milton's Agonistes.
Would the shamefully fail in the last act in this contrivance of the nature of man? More.
Those who are ready enough to confess him, both in judgment and profession, are, for the most part, very prone to deny him shamefully in their doings. South's Sermons.

SHAMELESS. adj. [from shame.] Wanting shame; wanting modesty; impudent; frontless; immodest; audacious.
To tell thee whence thou cam'st, of whom deriv'd,
Were shame enough to shame thee, wert thou not shameless.
Shakespeare's Henry VI.
Beyond imagination is the wrong
That she this day hath, shameless, thrown on me. Shaksp.
The shameless denial hereof by some of their flatterers, and the more shameless justification by some of their flatterers, makes it needful to exemplify, which I had rather forbear. Ral.
God deliver the world from such hucksters of souls, the very shame of religion, and the shameless subverters of morality. South's Sermons.
Such shameless bards we have; and yet 'tis true,
There are as mad abandon'd criticks too. Pope.
SHAMELESSLY. adv. [from shameless.] Impudently; auda-ciously; without shame.
The king to-day, as one of the vain fellows, shamelessly un-covereth himself.
He must needs be shamelessly wicked that abhors not this licentiousness. Hale.
SHAMELESSNESS. n. f. [from shameless.] Impudence; want of shame; immodesty.
Being most impudent in her heart, she could, when she would, teach her cheeks blushing, and make shamefulness
the cloak of shamelessness. Sidney.
He that blushes not at his crime, but adds shamelessness to his shame, hath nothing left to restore him to virtue. Taylor.
SHAMMER. n. f. [from sham.] A cheat; an impostor. A low word.
SHAMOIS. n. f. [Chamois, French.] See CHAMOIS. A kind of wild goat.
I'll bring thee
To clustring fiberds, and sometimes I'll get thee
Young shamois from the rocks. Shakespeare.
SHAMROCK. n. f. The Irish name for three leaved grass.
If they found a plot of watercresses, or shamrocks, there they flocked as to a feast for the time. Spenser on Ireland.
SHANK. n. f. [Greecian, Saxon; schenkel, Dutch.]
1. The middle joint of the leg; that part which reaches from the ankle to the knee.
Elfskins her white strait legs were altered
To crooked crawling shanks, of narrow emptied;
And her fair face to foul and loathsome hue,
And her fine corps to a bag of venom grew. Spenser.
The sixth age shifts
Into the lean and slipper'd pantaloons,
With spectacles on nose, and pouch on side;
His youthful hose, well stay'd, a world too wide
For his shrunk shanks. Shak. As you like it.
A flag says, if these pitiful shanks of mine were but answerable to this branching head, I can't but think how I should defy all my enemies. L'Estrange.
2. The bone of the leg.
Shut me nightly in a charnel-house,
O'er cover'd quite with dead men's rattling bones,
With reeky shanks, and yellow chaplets skulls. Shakespeare.
3. The long part of any instrument.
The shank of a key, or some such long hole, the punch cannot strike, because the shank is not forged with substance sufficient. Moxon.
SHANKED. adj. [from shank.] Having a shank.
SHANKER. n. f. [chancre, French.] A venereal excrescence.
To SHAKE. v. a. preter. shaped; part. pass. shaped and shaken.
[scyppan, Saxon; schepfen, Dutch.]
1. To form; to mould with respect to external dimensions.
I that am not shap'd for sportive tricks,
Nor made to court an am'rous looking-glass;
I, that am rudely stamp'd, and want love's majesty,
To strut before a wanton ambling nymph. Shaksp. R. III.
Those nature hath shaped with a great head, narrow breast, and shoulders sticking out, seem much inclined to a consumption. Harvey.
Mature the virgin was, of Egypt's race;
Grace shap'd her limbs, and beauty deck'd her face. Prior.
The faultless form,
Shap'd by the hand of harmony. Thomson.
2. To mould; to cast; to regulate; to adjust.
Drag the villain hither by the hair,
Nor age nor honour shall shape privilege. Shaksp. Tit. And.
Mr. Candish, when without hope, and ready to shape his course by the East homewards, met a ship which came from the Philippines. Raleigh.
To the stream, when neither friends nor force,
Nor speed nor art avail, he shapes his course.
Charm'd by their eyes, their manners I acquire,
And shape my foolishness to their desire. Prior.
3. To image; to conceive.
Lovers and madmen have their feeling brains,
Such shaping fantasies that apprehend
More than cool reason ever apprehends. Shaksp.

It is my nature's plague
To spy into abuse, and oft my jealousy
Shakes faults that are not. Shaksp. Othello.
When fancy hath formed and shaped the perfectest ideas of blestness, our own more happy experiences of greater must disabuse us. Boyle.
To make; to create. Obsolete.
I was shapen in iniquity, and in sin did my mother conceive me. Pf. li. 5.
SHAPE. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. Form; external appearance.
He beat me grievously in the shape of a woman; for in the shape of a man, master Brook, I fear not Goliath with a weaver's beam. Shakespeare.
The shapes of the locusts were like unto horses prepared for battle. Rev. ix. 7.
The other shape,
If shape it may be call'd that shape had none,
Distinguishable in member, joint, or limb. Milton.
In vegetables and animals the shape we most fix on, and are most led by. Locke.
2. Make of the trunk of the body.
First a charming shape enflam'd me,
An eye then gave the fatal stroke;
Till by her wit Corinna fav'd me,
And all my former fetters broke. Addison.
3. Being, as moulded into shape.
Before the gates there sat
On either side a formidable shape. Milton's Paradise Lost.
4. Idea; pattern.
Thy heart
Contains of good, wife, just, the perfect shape. Milton.
5. It is now used in low conversation for manner.
SHAPELESS. adj. [from shape.] Wanting regularity of form; wanting symmetry of dimensions.
You are born
To set a form upon that indigelt,
Which he hath left so shapeless and so rude. Shakespeare.
He is deformed, crooked, old and fere;
Ill-fac'd, worse-bodied, shapeless ev'ry where. Shakespeare.
What fools were here,
Disguis'd like Mufcovites in shapeless gear? Shakespeare.
Thrice had I lov'd thee,
Before I knew thy face or name;
So in a voice, so in a shapeless flame,
Angels affect us oft, and worshipping'd be. Donne.
Now the victor stretch'd his eager hand,
Where the tall nothing stood, or seem'd to stand;
A shapeless shade, it melted from his sight,
Like forms in clouds, or visions of the night! Pope.
Some objects please our eyes,
Which out of nature's common order rise,
The shapeless rock, or hanging precipice. Pope.
SHAPESMITH. n. f. [shape and smith.] One who undertakes to improve the form of the body. A butlerque word.
No shapessmith yet set up and drove a trade,
To mend the work that providence had made. Garth.
SHAPELINESS. n. f. [from shapeless.] Beauty or proportion of form.
SHAPELY. adv. [from shape.] Symmetrical; well formed.
SHARD. n. f. [schærde, Trifick.]
1. A fragment of an earthen vessel.
For charitable prayers,
Shards, flints, and pebbles should be thrown on her;
Yet here she is allow'd her virgin chants,
Her maiden strewments. Shak. Hamlet.
2. [Chard.] A plant.
Shards or mallows for the pot,
Keep the loosen'd body found. Dryden's Horace.
3. It seems in Spenser to signify a frith or strait.
Upon that shore he spied Atin stand,
There by his master left, when late he far'd
In Phœdia's fleet bark, over that per'ous shard. Fa. Queen.
4. A sort of fish.
SHARDBORN. adj. [shard and born.] Born or produced among broken stones or pots. Perhaps shard in Shakespeare may signify the sheaths of the wings of insects.
Ere to black Hecat's summons
The shardborn beetle with his drowsy hums
Hath rung night's yawning peal, there shall be done
A deed of dreadful note. Shakespeare.
SHARDED. adj. [from shard.] Inhabiting shards.
Often shall we find
The sharded beetle in a safer hold,
Than is the full-wing'd eagle. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.
To SHARE. v. n. [scæpan, scypan, Saxon.]
1. To divide; to part among many.
Good fellows all,
The latest of my wealth I'll share amongst you. Shakespeare.
Any man may make trial of his fortune, provided he acknowledge the lord's right, by sharing out unto him a toll. Carew.
Well may he then to you his cares impart,
And share his burden where he shares his heart. Dryden.

In the primitive times the advantage of priesthood was equally shared among all the order, and none of that character had any superiority. Collier.
Though the weight of a falsehood would be too heavy for one to bear, it grows light in their imaginations when it is shared among many. Addison's Spectator.
Suppose I share my fortune equally between my children and a stranger, will that unite them? Swift.
2. To partake with others.
The captain, half of whose soldiers are dead, and the other quarter never mustered or seen, comes shortly to demand payment of his whole account; where, by good means of some great ones, and privy sharings with the officers of other some, he receiveth his debt. Spenser on Ireland.
In vain does valour bleed,
While avarice and rapine share the land. Milton.
Go, silently enjoy your part of grief,
And share the sad inheritance with me. Dryden.
Way'd by the wanton winds his banner flies,
All maiden white, and shares the people's eyes. Dryden.
This was the prince decreed
To share his sceptre. Dryden's Æn.
Not a love of liberty, nor thirst of honour,
Drew you thus far, but hopes to share the spoil
Of conquer'd towns and plunder'd provinces. Addison's Cato.
All might it rains, the shews return with day;
Great Jove with Cæsar shares his sov'reign sway. Logie.
3. To cut; to separate; to sever. [From sceap, Saxon.]
With swift wheel reverse deep ent'ring shar'd
All his right side. Milton.
Scalp, face, and shoulders the keen steel divides,
And the shar'd visage hangs on equal sides. Dryden.
To SHARE. v. n. To have part; to have a dividend.
I am the prince of Wales; and think not, Percy,
To share with me in glory any more. Shakespeare's Henry IV.
Had greater haste these sacred rites prepar'd,
Some guilty mouths had in your triumphs shar'd;
But this untainted year is all your own. Dryden.
A right of inheritance gave every one a title to share in the goods of his father. L'Estrange.
This is Dutch partnership, to share in all our beneficial bargains, and exclude us wholly from theirs. Swift.
SHARE. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. Part; allotment; divid-nd.
If every just man, that now pines with want,
Had but a moderate and befitting share,
Of that which lowly-pamper'd luxury
Now heaps upon some with vast excels. Milton.
They went a hunting, and every one to go share and share like in what they took. L'Estrange.
The subdued territory was divided into greater and smaller shares, besides that reserved to the prince. Temple.
I'll give you arms; burn, ravish, and destroy;
For my own share one beauty I design;
Engage your honours that she shall be mine. Dryden.
While fortune favour'd,
I made some figure; nor was my name
Obscure, nor I without my share of fame. Dryden's Æn.
The youths have equal share
In Marcia's wishes, and divide their sister. Addison's Cato.
In poets, as true genius is but rare,
True taste as seldom is the critick's share. Pope.
He who doth not perform that part assigned him, is a very mischiefous member of the public; because he takes his share of the profits, and yet leaves his share of the burden to be born by others. Swift.
2. A part.
These, although they bear a share in the discharge, yet have different offices in the composition. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
3. [Scæp, Saxon.] The blade of the plow that cuts the ground.
Nor laws they knew, nor manners, nor the care
Of lab'ring oxen, nor the shining share. Dryden.
Then let him mark the sheep, or whet the shining share.
Dryden's Virgil's Georg.
Great cities shall with walls be compass'd round,
And sharpen'd shares shall vex the fruitful ground. Dryden.
Incumbent o'er the shining share
The master leans, removes th' obstructive clay. Thomson.
For clay the coulter is long and bendings, and the share narrow. Mortimer.

An overgrown estate falling into the hands of one that has many children, it is broken into so many portions as render the sharers rich enough.

You must have known it.

—Indeed I did, then favour'd by the king,
And by that means a sharer in the secret.
If, by taking on himself human nature at large, he hath a compassionate and tender sense of the infirmities of mankind in general, he must needs, in a peculiar manner, feel and commiserate the infirmities of the poor, in which he himself was so eminent a sharer.

I suffer many things as an author militant, whereof in your days of probation you have been a sharer.

SHARK. n. f. [canis charcharias, Latin.]
1. A voracious sea-fish.

His jaws horrid arm'd with threefold fate,
The direful shark.

2. A greedy artful fellow; one who fills his pockets by fly tricks. David's messengers are sent back to him, like so many sharks and runnagates, only for endeavouring to compliment an ill-nature out of itself, and seeking that by petition which they might have commanded by their sword.

3. Trick; fraud; petty rapine. Wretches who live upon the shark, and other mens sins, the common poisoners of youth, equally desperate in their fortunes and their manners, and getting their very bread by the damnation of souls.

To SHARK. v. a. To pick up hastily or slyly. Of unimproved mettle, hot and full, Hath in the skirts of Norway, here and there, Shark'd up a list of landless resolute.

1. To play the petty thief. The fly leads a lazy, voluptuous, scandalous, sharking life, hateful wherever he comes.

2. To cheat; to trick. There are cheats by natural inclination as well as by corruption: nature taught this boy to shark, not discipline. The old generous English spirit, which heretofore made this nation so great in the eyes of all the world, seems utterly extinct; and we are degenerated into a mean, sharking, fallacious, undermining converse, there being a snare and a trap almost in every word we hear, and every action we see.

SHARP. adj. [crearp, Saxon; scherpe, Dutch.]
1. Keen; piercing; having a keen edge; having an acute point; not blunt.

She hath tied
Sharp tooth'd unkindness like a vulture here.

In Ireland have I seen this stubborn Cade
Oppose himself against a troop of kerns;
And fought so long, 'till that his thighs with darts
Were almost like a sharp quill'd porcupine.

2. With edged grooving tools they cut down and smoothen away the extuberances left by the sharp pointed grooving tools, and bring the work into a perfect shape.

3. Terminating in a point or edge; not obtuse. The form of their heads is narrow and sharp, that they may the better cut the air in their swift flight.

4. Keen; piercing; having a keen edge; having an acute point; not blunt.

Light arm'd or heavy, sharp, smooth, light or slow.

It is so much the firmer by how much broader the bottom and sharper the top.

In shipping such as this, the Irish kern,
And untaught Indian, on the stream did glide,
Ere sharp keel'd boats to stem the flood did learn,
Or fin-like oars did spread from either side.

5. Acute of mind; witty; ingenious; inventive. Now as fine in his apparel as if he would make me in love with a cloak, and verse for verse with the sharpest witted lover in Arcadia.

6. If we had nought but sense, each living wight,
Which we call brute, would be more sharp than we.

7. Sharp to the world, but thoughtless of renown,
They plot not on the stage, but on the town.

8. Many other things belong to the material world, wherein the sharpest philosophers have never yet arrived at clear and distinct ideas.

9. Quick, as of light or hearing. As the sharpest eye discerneth nought, Except the fun-beams in the air do shine;
So the best soul, with her reflecting thought,
Sees not herself, without some light divine.

10. To sharpen. To sharpen eye'd reason this would seem untrue;
But reason I through love's false optics view.

11. So we, if children young diseased we find,
Anoint with sweets the vessel's foremost parts,
To make them taste the potions sharp we give;
They drink deceiv'd, and so deceiv'd they live.

12. Sharp tasted citrons Median climes produce;
Bitter the rind, but generous is the juice.
Different simple ideas are sometimes expressed by the same word, as sweet and sharp are applied to the objects of hearing and tasting.

13. Shrill; piercing the ear with a quick noise; not flat. In whistling you contract the mouth, and, to make it more sharp, men use their finger.

14. Let one whistle at the one end of a trunk, and hold your ear at the other, and the sound strikes so sharp as you can scarce endure it.

15. For the various modulation of the voice, the upper end of the windpipe is endued with several cartilages to contract or dilate it, as we would have our voice flat or sharp.

16. Severe; harsh; biting; sarcastic. If he should intend his voyage towards my wife, I would turn her loose to him; and what he gets more of her than sharp words, let it lie on my head.

17. How often may we meet with those who are one while courteous, but within a small time after are so supercilious, sharp, troublesome, fierce and exception, that they are not only short of the true character of friendship, but become the very foes and burdens of society!

18. Cease contention: be thy words severe, Sharp as he merits; but the sword forbear.

19. Severe; quick to punish; cruel; severely rigid. There, gentle Hernia, may I marry thee;
And to that place the sharp Athenian law
Cannot pursue us.

20. Eager; hungry; keen upon a quest. My faulcon now is sharp mens desires and quicken their endeavours for obtaining a lesser good, ought to inspire men with more vigour in pursuit of what is greater.

21. To make fierce or angry. Mine enemy sharpeneth his eyes upon me.

22. To make biting, or sarcastic. My haughty soul would swell;
Sharpen each word, and threaten in my eyes.

23. To make less flat; more piercing to the ears. Enclosures not only preserve sound, but encrease and sharpen it.

24. To make four. SHARPER. n. f. [from sharp.] A tricking fellow; a petty thief; a rascal.

25. Sharper, as pikes, prey upon their own kind. He should retrench what he lost to sharpeners, and spent upon puppet-plays, to apply it to that use.

26. Only wear it in a land of Hector's, Thieves, supercargo's, sharpeners, and directors.

27. With keenness; with good edge or point. 1. Severely; rigorously; roughly. They are more sharply to be chastised and reformed than the rude Irish, which being very wild at the first, are now become more civil.

2. Keenly; acutely; vigorously. The mind and memory are more sharply exercised in comprehending another man's things than our own.

3. Afflictively; painfully. At the arrival of the English ambassadors the soldiers were sharply assailed with wants.

4. With quickness. You contract your eye when you would see sharply; and erect your ear when you would hear attentively.

5. Judiciously; acutely; wittily. SHARPNESS. n. f. [from sharp.] 1. Keenness of edge or point.

2. Palladius neither suffering us nor himself to take in hand the party till the afternoon; when we were to fight in troops, not differing otherwise from earnest, but that the sharpness of the weapons was taken away.

3. A second glance came gliding like the first; And he who saw the sharpness of the dart, Without defence receiv'd it in his heart.

4. Not obtuseness. Force consisteth in the roundings and raisings of the work, according as the limbs do more or less require it; so as the beholder shall spy no sharpness in the bordering lines.

5. Sourness without austereness. There is a sharpness in vinegar, and there is a sharpness in pain, in sorrows, and in reproach; there is a sharp eye, a sharp wit, and a sharp sword: but there is not one of these severe sharpnesses the same as another of them; and a sharp east wind is different from them all.

6. To sharpen. To sharpen eye'd reason this would seem untrue; But reason I through love's false optics view.

7. So we, if children young diseased we find, Anoint with sweets the vessel's foremost parts, To make them taste the potions sharp we give; They drink deceiv'd, and so deceiv'd they live.

 knavish shavelings so feigned. Spenser.
 SHAVER. n. f. [from shave.]
 1. A man that practices the art of shaving.
 2. A man closely attentive to his own interest.
 My lord
 Was now dispos'd to crack a jest,
 And bid friend Lewis go in quest;
 This Lewis is a cunning shaver. Swift.
 3. A robber; a plunderer.
 They fell all into the hands of the cruel mountain people, living for the most part by theft, and waiting for wrecks, as hawks for their prey: by these shavers the Turks were strip'd of all they had. Kneller.
 SHAVING. n. f. [from shave.] Any thin slice pared off from any body.
 Take lignum aloes in gross shavings, steep them in sack, changed twice, till the bitterness be drawn forth; then take the shavings forth and dry them in the shade, and beat them to powder. Bacon.
 By electrick bodies I do not conceive only such as take up shavings, straws, and light bodies, but such as attract all bodies palpable whatsoever. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
 The shavings are good for the fining of wine. Mart.
 SHAW. n. f. [reua, Saxon; shawe, Dutch; skugga, Islandick.]
 A thicket; a small wood. A tuft of trees near Lichfield is called Gentle shaw.
 SHABANDER. n. f. [among the Persians.] A great officer; a viceroy. Bailey.
 SHAWFOWL. n. f. [shaw and fowl.] An artificial fowl made by fowlers on purpose to shoot at.
 SHAWM. n. f. [from schawme, Teutonic.] A hautboy; a cornet.
 With trumpets also and shawms. Psalms Common Prayer.
 SHE. pronoun. In oblique cases her. [si, Gothick; reo, Sax.
she, old English.]
 1. The female pronoun demonstrative: the woman; the woman before mentioned.
 She, of whom the ancients seem'd to prophesy,
 When they call'd virtues by the name of she;
 She, in whom virtue was so much refin'd,
 That for allay unto so pure a mind
 She took the weaker sex. Donne.
 This once disclos'd,
 The ladies did change favours, and then we Following the signs, wou'd but the sign of she.
 What, at any time, have you heard her say?
 The most upright of mortal men was he;
 The most sincere, and holy woman, she. Dryden.
 2. It is sometimes used for a woman absolutely, with some degree of contempt.
 The she of Italy shall not betray Mine interest, and his honour. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.
 Lady, you are the cruellest she alive,
 If you will lead these graces to the grave,
 And leave the world no copy. Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.

SHE

I was wont
 To load my she with knacks, I wou'd have ranack'd
 The pedlar's silken treasury, and have pour'd it
 To her acceptance. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.
 3. The female; not the male.
 I would outface the sternest eyes that look,
 Pluck the young sucking cubs from the she bear
 To win thee, lady. Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.
 Let us do it with no shew of fear;
 No, with no more, than if we heard that England
 Were busied with a Whitson morris-dance;
 For my good liege, she is so idly king'd,
 That fear attends her not. Shakespeare's Hen. V.
 The nightingale, if she would sing by day,
 When every goose is cackling, wou'd be thought
 No better a musician than the wren. Shakespeare's He lions are hirsute, and have great manes, the she are smooth like cats. Bacon.
 Stand it in Judah's chronicles confest,
 That David's son, by impious passion mov'd,
 Smote a she-slave, and murder'd what he lov'd. Prior.
 SHEAF. n. f. sheaves plural. [reap, Saxon; schaf, Dutch.]
 1. A bundle of stalks of corn bound together, that the ears may dry.
 These be the sheaves that honour's harvest bears,
 The seed thy valiant acts, the world the field. Fairfax.
 He beheld a field,
 Part arable and tith; whereon were sheaves
 New-reap'd: the other part sheep-walks and folds. Milt.
 The reaper fills his greedy hands,
 And binds the golden sheaves in brittle bands. Dryden.
 I pitch'd the sheaves (oh could I do so now)
 Which lie in rows pil'd. Gay's Fagstaff.
 2. Any bundle or collection held together.
 She vanish'd;
 The sheaf of arrows shook and rattled in the case. Dryden.
 In the knowledge of bodies, we must glean what we can;
 since we cannot, from a discovery of their real essences, grasp at a time whole sheaves; and in bundles comprehend the nature of whole species. Locke.
 To SHEAL. v. a. To shell. See SHALE.
 Thou art a shealed peacock. Shakespeare's K. Lear.
 To SHEAR. preter. shore, or sheared; part. pass. shorn. [reapen,
 Saxon.]
 1. To clip or cut by interception between two blades moving on a rivet.
 So many days, my ewe have been with young;
 So many weeks, e're the poor fools will yean;
 So many months, e're I shall shear the fleece. Shakespeare.
 I am shepherd to another man,
 And do not shear the fleeces that I graze. Shakespeare.
 Laban went to shear his sheep. Gen. xxxi. 19.
 When wool is new shorn, they set pails of water by in the same room to increase its weight. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
 To lay my head and hollow pledge
 Of all my strength, in the lascivious lap
 Of a deceitful concubine, who shore me,
 Like a tame weather, all my precious fleece. Milton.
 The same ill taste of sense wou'd serve to join Dog foxes in the yoke, and shear the swine. Dryden.
 May'st thou henceforth sweetly sleep,
Sheep, swains, oh shear your softest sheep
 To swell his couch.
 O'er the congenial dust injoin'd to shear
 The graceful curl, and drop the tender tear. Pope.
 2. To cut.
 The sharp and toothed edge of the nether chap strikes into a canal cut into the bone of the upper; and the toothed protuberance of the upper into a canal in the nether: by which means he easily shears the grass whereon he feeds. Grew.
 SHEAR. } n. f. [from the verb. It is seldom used in the SHEARS. } singular, but is found once in Dryden.
 1. An instrument to cut, consisting of two blades moving on a pin, between which the thing cut is intercepted. Shears are large, and scissors a smaller instrument of the same kind.
 Alas, thought Philoclea to herself, your shears come too late to clip the bird's wings that already is flown away. Siddons.
 Why do you bend such solemn brows on me?
 Think you I bear the shears of destiny?
 Have I commandment on the pulse of life? Shakespeare's
 The fates prepar'd their sharpen'd shears. Dryden.
 When the fleece is shorn,
 Then their defenceless limbs the brambles tear;
 Short of their wool, and naked from the shears. Dryden.
 That people live and die, I knew,
 An hour ago, as well as you;
 And if fate spins us longer years,
 Or is in haste to take the shears,
 I know, we must both fortunes try,
 And bear our evils, wet or dry. Prior.
 How happy should we be if we had the privilege of employing the shears for want of a mint, upon foreign gold, by clipping it into half crowns. Swift.
 Fate

SHE

Fate urg'd the shears and cut the sylph in twain,
 But airy substance soon unites again. Pope.
 Beneath the shears they felt no lasting smart,
 They lost but fleeces, while I lost a heart. Gay.
 2. The denomination of the age of sheep.
 When sheep is one shear, they will have two broad teeth before; when two shear, four; when three, six; when four, eight; and after that, their mouths break. Mortimer.
 3. Any thing in the form of the blades of shears.
 4. Wings, in Spenser.
 Two sharp-wing'd shears
 Deck'd with divers plumes, like painted jays,
 Were fix'd at his back to cut his airy ways. Spenser.
 SHEARD. n. f. [reapen, Sax.] A fragment. It is now commonly written shard, and applied only to fragments of earthen ware.
 In the bursting of it, not a sheard to take fire from the hearth, or to take water out of the pit. Isa. xxx. 14.
 SHEARER. n. f. [from shear.] One that clips with shears;
 particularly one that fleeces sheep.
 Of other care they little reck'ning make,
 Than how to scramble at the shearers feast,
 And shove away the worthy bidden guest. Milton.
 Was he to be led as, a lamb to the slaughter, patient and resigned as a sheep before her shearers? Rogers.
 SHEARMAN. n. f. [shear and man.] He that shears.
 Thy father was a plaiterier,
 And thou thyself a shear man. Shakespeare's SHEARWATER. n. f. A fowl. Swift.
 SHEATH. n. f. [reath, Saxon.] The case of any thing;
 the scabbard of a weapon.
 The dead knight's sword out of his sheath he drew,
 With which he cut a lock off all their hair. Fa. Queen.
 Dost not each look a shaft of lightning feel,
 Which spares the body's sheath, yet melts the steel? Cleau.
 Swords, by the lightning's subtle force diffus'd,
 And the cold sheath with running metal fill'd. Addison.
 To SHEATH. } v. a. [from the noun.]
 To SHEATHE. }
 1. To inclose in a sheath or scabbard; to inclose in any case.
 This drawn but now against my sovereign's breast,
 Before 'tis sheath'd, shall give him peace and rest. Waller.
 Those active parts of a body are of differing natures when sheath'd up, or wedged in amongst others in the texture of a concrete; and when extricated from these impediments. Boyle.
 In his hair one hand he wreaths,
 His sword, the other, in his bosom sheaths. Denham.
 Is this her hate to him, his love to me!
 'Tis in my breast the sheaths her dagger now. Dryden.
 The left foot naked, when they march to fight, Dryden.
 But in a bull's raw hide they sheath the right.
 The leopard, and all of this kind as goes, keeps the claws of his forefeet turned up from the ground and sheath'd in the skin of his toes, whereby he preserves them sharp for rapine, extending them only when he leaps at the prey. Grew.
 Other substances opposite to acrimony are called demulcent or mild; because they blunt or sheath those sharp fal-sae as pease, and beans. Arbuthnot.
 2. To fit with a sheath.
 There was no ink to colour Peter's hat,
 Walter's dagger was not come from sheathing. Shak.
 3. To defend the main body by an outward covering.
 It were to be wished that the whole navy throughout were sheathed as some are. Raleigh.
 SHEATHINGED. adj. [sheath and wing.] Having hard cases which are folded over the wings.
 Some insects fly with four wings, as all vaginipennis, or sheathwinged insects, as beetles and dorts. Brown's Vulg. Er.
 SHEATHING. adj. [from sheath.] Forming a sheath.
 With a needle put aside the short and sheathy cases on earwigs backs, and you may draw forth two wings. Brown.
 SHECKLATON. n. f.
 He went to fight against the giant in his robe of sheckla- ton, which is that kind of gilded leather with which they use to embroider the Irish jackets. Spenser.
 To SHED. v. a. [recean, Saxon.]
 1. To effuse; to pour out; to spill.
 The painful service, and the drops of blood
 Shed for my thankless country are requited
 But with that surname of Coriolanus. Shakespeare's Cromwell, I did not think to shed a tear
 In all my miseries. Shakespeare's Without shedding of blood is no remission. Heb. ix. 22.
 For this is my blood which is shed for many, for the remission of sins. Malith. xxvi. 28.
 Some think one gen'ral soul fills ev'ry brain,
 As the bright sun sheds light in ev'ry star.
 Around its entry nodding poppies grow,
 And all cool simples that sweet rest bestow;
 Night from the plants their sleepy virtue drains,
 And passing, sheds it on the silent plains. Dryden.
 You seem'd to mourn another lover dead,
 My sighs you gave him, and my tears you shed. Dryden.

SHE

Unhappy man! to break the pious laws
 Of nature, pleading in his children's cause:
 'Tis love of honour, and his country's good;
 The consul, not the father, sheds the blood. Dryden.
 In these lone walls, their days eternal bound,
 These moss-grown domes with spiry turrets crown'd,
 Where awful arches make a noon-day night,
 And the dim windows shed a solemn light;
 Thy eyes diffus'd a reconciling ray,
 And gleams of glory brighten'd all the day. Pope.
 2. To scatter; to let fall.
 Trees that bring forth their leaves late, and cast them late, are more lasting than those that sprout their leaves early, or shed them betimes. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
 So the returning year be blest,
 As his infant months bestow,
 Springing wreaths for William's brow;
 As his summer's youth shall shed
 Eternal sweets around Maria's head. Prior.
 To SHED. v. n. To let fall its parts.
 White oats are apt to shed most as they lie, and black as they stand. Mortimer's Husbandry.
 SHED. n. f. [supposed by Skinner to be corrupted from shade.]
 1. A slight temporary covering.
 The first Aletes born in lowly shed,
 Of parents base, a rose sprung from a bride. Fairfax.
 Though he his house of polish'd marble build,
 With Jasper floor'd, and carved cedar ceil'd;
 Yet shall it ruin like the moth's frail cell.
 Or sheds of reeds, which summer's heat repel.
 So all our minds with his conspire to grace
 The Gentiles great apostle, and deface
 Those state-obscuring sheds, that like a chain
 Seem'd to confine and fetter him again. Walker.
 In such a season born, when scarce a shed
 Could be obtain'd to shelter him or me
 From the bleak air. Parad. Regain'd.
 Those houses then were caves, or homely sheds,
 With twining osiers fence'd, and moss their beds. Dryden.
 An hospitable house they found,
 A homely shed; the roof, not far from ground
 Was thatch'd with reeds and straw together bound. Dryden.
 Then out he steals, and finds where by the head,
 Their horse hung fasten'd underneath a shed. Betertont.
 Her various kinds by various fortunes led,
 Commence acquaintance, underneath a shed. Swift.
 2. In composition. Effusion; as blood-shed.
 SHEDDER. n. f. [from shed.] A spiller; one who sheds.
 A shedder of blood shall surely die. Ezek. xviii. 10.
 SHEEN. } adj. [This was probably only the old pronunciation SHEENY. } of shine.] Bright; glittering; shewy. A word now not in use.
 That lewd ribbald, with vile lust advanc'd,
 Laid first his filthy hands on virgin clean,
 To spoil her dainty corse so fair and sheen. Fa. Queen.
 When he was all dight, he took his way
 Into the forest, that he might be seen
 Of the wild beasts, in his new glory sheen. Hallberg's Tale.
 Now they never meet in grove or green,
 By fountain clear, or spangled star-light sheen. Shakespeare's
 Up arose each warrior bold and brave,
 Glittering in filed steel and armour sheen. Fairfax.
 Out of the hierarchies of angels sheen,
 The gentle Gabriel call'd he from the rest. Fairfax.
 By the rufhy fringed bank,
 Where grows the willow and the osier dank,
 My sliding chariot stays,
 Which set with agat, or the azure sheen,
 Of turcois blue, and emerald green. Milton.
 Or did of late earth's fons besiege the wall
 Of sheeny heav'n. Milton.
 SHEEN. n. f. [from the adjective.] Brightness; splendour.
 Mercy will fit between,
 Thron'd in celestial sheen. Milton.
 Far above, in spangled sheen,
 Celestial Cupid, her fam'd son advanc'd,
 Holds his dear Psyche sweet entranc'd. Milton.
 SHEEP. n. f. plural likewise sheep. [reapen, Saxon; of which the plural was reep; schape, Dutch.]
 1. The animal that bears wool: remarkable for its usefulness and innocence.
 Fire the brambles, scare the birds, and keep
 In wholesome water-falls the fleecy sheep. Dryden.
 Of substances there are two sorts of ideas; one of single substances, as they exist separately, as a man or sheep. Locke.
 2. In contempt. A foolish silly fellow.
 To SHEEPY. v. n. [sheep and bit.] To use petty thefts.
 Shew your knave's visage, with a pox to you; shew your sheepbiting face, and be hang'd. Shakespeare's SHEEPBITER. n. f. [from sheepbite.] A petty thief.
 His gate like a sheepbiter fleeing aside. Tuffer.
 Wouldst

SHE

Wouldst thou not be glad to have the niggardly rascally
sheepbiter come to some notable flame. Shakespeare.
 There are political sheepbiters as well as pastoral: betrayers of public trusts, as well as of private. L'Estrange.
SHEEP'PORT. n. f. [sheep and port.] A little inclosure for sheep.
 Bedlam beggars, with roaring voices,
 From low farms, sheepcots and mills
 Inforce their charity. Shakespeare. K. Lear.
 Up to a hill anon his steps he rear'd,
 From whose high top to ken the prospect round,
 If cottage were in view, sheepcot or herd;
 But cottage, herd, or sheepcot none he saw. Milton.
SHEEPFOLD. n. f. [sheep and fold.] The place where sheep are inclosed.
 The bear, the lion, terrors of the plain,
 The sheepfold scatter'd and the shepherd slain. Prior.
SHEEPHOOK. n. f. [sheep and hook.] A hook fastened to a pole by which sheep are lay hold on the legs of their sheep.
 The one carried a crozier of balm-wood, the other a pastoral staff of cedar like a sheep-hook. Bacon's New Atlantis.
 If you dare think of deservng our charms,
 Away with your sheephook, and take to your arms. Dryden.
SHEEPISH. adj. [from sheep.] Bashful; over-modest; timor-ously and meanly diffident.
 Wanting change of company, he will, when he comes abroad, be a sheepish or conceited creature. Locke.
SHEEPISHNESS. n. f. [from sheepish.] Bashfulness; mean and timorous diffidence.
 Thy gentry bleats, as if thy native cloth
 Transfus'd a sheepishness into thy story. Herbert.
Sheepishness and ignorance of the world, are not consequences of being bred at home. Locke.
 Without success, let a man be never so hardy, he will have some degree of sheepishness. Grew.
SHEEPMASTER. n. f. [sheep and master.] An owner of sheep.
 A nobleman was a great graier, and a great sheepmaster.
Bacon.
SHEEPSHEARING. n. f. [sheep and shear.] The time of shearing sheep; the feast made when sheep are shorn.
 There happening a solemn festivity, such as the sheepshear- ings used to be, David begs some small repast. South.
SHEEPS EYE. n. f. [sheep and eye.] A modest diffident look, such as lovers cast at their mistresses.
 Cast a sheep's eye behind you: in before me. Dryden.
SHEEPWALK. n. f. [sheep and walk.] Pasture for sheep.
 He beheld a field,
 Part arable and tith; whereon were sheaves
 New reap'd; the other part sheepwalks and folds. Milt.
SHEER. adj. [sheer, Saxon;] Pure; clear; unmingled.
 If the say, I am not fourteen pence on the score for sheer ale, score me up for the lying it rogue in Christendom. Shak.
Sheer argument is not the talent of the man; little wrestled sentences are the bladders which bear him up, and he sinks downright, when he once pretends to swim without them. Atterbury.
SHEER. adv. [from the adjective.] Clean; quick; at once.
 Thrown by angry Jove
Sheer o'er the crystal battlements; from morn
 To noon he fell, from noon to dewy eve,
 A summer's day; and with the setting sun,
 Drop'd from the zenith, like a falling star,
 On Lemnos. Milton.
 The sword of Satan, with steep force to smite Descending, and in half cut sheer. Milton.
 Due entrance he disdain'd, and in contempt
 At one slight bound high overleap'd all bound
 Of hill or highest wall, and sheer within Lights on his feet. Milton.
 To SHEER. v. a. [See SHEAR.]
 I keep my birth-day; send my Phillis home
 At shearing time. Dryden.

 Some unequal bride in nobler sheets
 Receives her lord. Dryden.
 3. Ecoutes, French; echoten, Dutch.] In a ship are ropes bent to the clews of the sails, which serve in all the lower fails to hale or round off the clew of the fail; but in topfails they draw the fail close to the yard arms. Diſt.—Dryden seems to understand it otherwise.
 The little word behind the back, and undoing whisper, like pulling off a sheet-rope at sea, slackens the fail. Suckling.
 Fierce Boreas drove against his flying fails,
 And rent the sheets. Dryden.

SHE

4. As much paper as is made in one body.
 As much love in rhyme,
 As could be cramm'd up in a sheet of paper,
 Writ on both sides the leaf, margin and all. Shakespeare.
 When I first put pen to paper, I thought all I should have to say would have been contained in one sheet of paper. Locke.
 I let the refracted light fall perpendicularly upon a sheet of white paper upon the opposite wall. Newton's Opticks.
 5. A single complication or fold of paper in a book.
 6. Any thing expanded.
 Such sheets of fire, such bursts of horrid thunder
 I never remember to have heard. Shakespeare's K. Lear.
 Rowling thunder roars,
 And sheets of lightning blast the standing field. Dryden.
 An azure sheet it rushes broad,
 And from the loud rebounding rocks below,
 Dash'd in a cloud of foam. Thomson.
SHEET-ANCHOR. n. f. [sheet and anchor.] In a ship is the largest anchor; which, in stress of weather, is the mariners last refuge, when an extraordinary stiff gale of wind happens. Bailey.

 their shekel on one side the golden pot which had the manna,
 and on the other Aaron's rod. Camden.
 The huge iron head fix hundred shekels weighed,
 And of whole bodies but one wound it made,
 Able death's worst command to overdoe
 Destroying life at once and carcase too. Cowley.
 This coat of mail weighed five thousand shekels of brass. Brown.
SHELDRAPE. n. f. A chaffinch.
SHELDRAPE. n. f. A bird that preys upon fishes.
SHELF. n. f. [shelf, Saxon; scelf, Dutch.] A board fixed against a supporter, so that any thing may be placed upon it.
 About his shelves
 A beggarly account of empty boxes. Shakespeare.
 Bind fast, or from their shelves
 Your books will come and right themselves. Swift.
 You have the pleasure of the prospect whenever you take it from your shelf, and the solid cash you fold it for. Blount.
 2. A land bank in the sea; a rock under shallow water.
 Our transported souls shall congratulate each other their having now fully elap'd the numerous rocks, shelves, and quick-sands. Boyle.
 Near the shelves of Circe's shores they run,
 A dang'rous coast. Dryden.
 He call'd his money in;
 But the prevailing love of pelf
 Soon split him on the former shelf,
 He put it out again. Dryden.
 3. The plural is analogically shelves; Dryden has shelves, probably by negligence.
 He seiz'd the helm, his fellows cheer'd,
 Turn'd short upon the shelves and madly steer'd. Dryden.
SHELF. adj. [from shelf.]
 1. Full of hidden rocks or banks; full of dangerous shallows.
 Glides by the fycen's cliffs a shelly coast,
 Long infamous for ships and sailors lost,
 And white with bones. Dryden.
 2. I know not well the meaning in this passage, perhaps rocky.
 The tillable fields are in some places so tough, that the plough will scarcely cut them; and in some so shelly that the corn hath much ado to fasten its root. Carew.
SHELL. n. f. [shell, Saxon; schale, schelle, Dutch.
 1. The hard covering of any thing; the external crust.
 The fun is as the fire, and the exterior earth is as the shell of the colipile, and the abyss as the water within it; now when the heat of the sun had pierc'd thro' the shell and reach'd the waters, it rarefy'd them. Burn. Theor. of the Earth.
 Whatever we fetch from under ground is only what is lodged in the shell of the earth. Locke.
 2. The covering of a testaceous or crustaceous animal.
 Her women wear
 The spoils of nations in an ear;
 Chang'd for the treasure of a shell,
 And in their loose attires do swell. Ben. Jonſon. Catilina.
 Albion
 Was to Neptune recommended;
 Peace and civil spread the sails:
 Venus, in her shell before him,
 From the fands in safety bore him.
 The shells served as moulds to this land, which, when consolidated, and afterwards freed from its investient shell, is of the same shape as the cavity of the shell. Woodward.
 He,

SHE

He, whom ungrateful Athens could expel,
 At all times just, but when he sign'd the shell. Pope.
 3. The covering of the seeds of filiquous plants.
 Some fruits are contained within a hard shell, being the seeds of the plants. Abbot.
 4. The covering of kernels.
 Chang'd loves are but chang'd sorts of meat;
 And when he hath the kernel eat,
 Who doth not throw away the shell? Donne.
 5. The covering of an egg.
 Think him as a serpent's egg,
 Which, hatch'd, would, as his kind, grow mischievous,
 And kill him in the shell. Shakespeare. Julius Caesar.
 6. The outer part of an house.
 The marquis of Medina Sidonia made the shell of a house, that would have been a very noble building, had he brought it to perfection. Addison on Italy.
 7. It is used for a musical instrument in poetry, from testudo, Latin; the first lyre being said to have been made by straining strings over the shell of a tortoise.
 Less than a god they thought there could not dwell
 Within the hollow of that shell,
 That spoke so sweetly. Dryden.
 8. The superficial part.
 So devout are the Romanists about this outward shell of religion, that if an altar be moved, or a stone of it broken, it ought to be reconsecrated. Ayliffe's Pavegon.
 To SHELL. v. a. [from the noun.] To take out of the shell;
 to strip of the shell.
 To SHELL. v. n.
 1. To fall off as broken shells.
 The ulcers were cured, and the scabs shelled off. Wise.
 2. To cast the shell.
SHELL-DUCK. n. f. A kind of wild duck.
 To preserve wild ducks, and shell-ducks, have a place walled in with a pond. Mortimer's Husbandry.
SHELL-FISH. n. f. [shell and fish.] Fifth insect with a hard covering, either testaceous, as oysters, or crustaceous, as lobsters.
 The shells, being found, were so like those they saw upon their shores, that they never questioned but that they were the exuvie of shellfish, and once belonged to the sea. Woodward.
SHELLY. adj. [from shell.]
 1. Abounding with shells.
 The ocean rolling, and the shelly shore,
 Beautiful objects, shall delight no more. Prior.
 2. Consisting of shells.
 The conceit of Anaximander was, that the first men and all animals were bred in some warm moisture, inclosed in crustaceous skins, as lobsters; and so continued 'till their shelly prisons, growing dry and breaking, made way for them. Hentley.
SHELTER. n. f. [Of this word the etymology is unknown:
Stimmer deduces it from shell, Davies from scyls, a shield,
 Saxon.]
 1. A cover from any external injury or violence.
 We hear this fearful tempest sing,
 Yet seek no shelter to avoid the storm. Shakespeare. R. II.
 They wish'd the mountains now might be again
 Thrown on them, as a shelter from his ire. Milton.
 Heroes of old, when wounded, shelter sought;
 But he who meets all dangers with disdain,
 Ev'n in their face his ship to anchor brought,
 And steeple high stood proud upon the main. Dryden.
 They may learn experience, and avoid a cave as the worst shelter from rain, when they have a lover in company. Dryd.
 The healing plant shall aid,
 From storms a shelter, and from heat a shade. Pope.
 2. A protector; a defender; one that gives security.
 Thou hast been a shelter for me, and a strong tower from the enemy. Ps. lxi. 3.
 3. The state of being covered; protection; security.
 Low at his foot a spacious plain is plac'd,
 Between the mountain and the stream embrac'd;
 Which shade and shelter from the hill derives,
 While the kind river wealth and beauty gives. Denham.
 To SHELTER. v. a. [from the noun.]
 1. To cover from external violence.
 We befo'g the deep to shelter us. Milton.
 Those ruins shelter'd once his sacred head,
 When he from Wroster's fatal battle fled,
 Watch'd by the genius of this royal place. Dryden.
 2. To defend; to protect; to succour with refuge; to harbour.
 What endless honour shall you gain,
 To save and shelter Troy's unhappy train. Dryden's Æn.
 3. To betake to cover.
 They sheltered themselves under a rock.
 Comfort thyself with such thoughts, chiefly when all earthly comforts fail thee: then do thou particularly retreat to those considerations, and shelter thyself under them. Atterbury.
 4. To cover from notice.
 In vain I strove to check my growing flame,
 Or shelter passion under friendship's name;
 You saw my heart. Prior.

SHE

To SHELTER. v. n.
 1. To take shelter.
 There the Indian herdman, shunning heat,
Shelters in cool. Milton.
 2. To give shelter.
 Then seeks the farthest ooze, the shell-ring weed,
 The cavern'd bank, his old secure abode. Thomson.
SHELTERLESS. adj. [from shelter.] Harbourless; without home or refuge.
 Now sad and shelterless, perhaps, she lies,
 Where piercing winds blow sharp. Keats's Jane Shore.
SHEL'VING. adj. [from shelf.] Sloping; inclining; having de-clivity.
 Her chamber is aloft, far from the ground;
 And built so shel'ving, that one cannot climb it,
 Without apparent hazard of his life. Shakespeare.
 Amidst the brake a hollow den was found,
 With rocks and shel'ving arches vaulted round. Addison.
SHELVY. adj. [from shelf.] Shallow; rocky; full of banks.
 I had been drown'd, but that the shore was shelvy and shallow. Shakespeare. Merry Wives of Windsor.
 To SHEND. v. a. preter. and part. pass. shant. [ſchenan, Saxon;
shenden, Dutch.]
 1. To ruin; to spoil; to mischief.
 Provide for thy wife, or else look to be shent,
 Good milchcow for Winter, another for Lent. Tupper.
 Shepherds, should it not shent
 Your roundels fresh, to hear a doleful verse
 Of Rosalind, that Colin made? Spenser.
 Such a dream I had of dire portent,
 That much I fear my body will be shent;
 It bodes I shall have wars. Dryden.
 2. To disgrace; to degrade; to blame.
 Debateful strife, and cruel enmity,
 The famous name of knighthood foully shend. Fa. Queen.
 Sore bruil'd with the fall, he slow uprore,
 And all enraged thus, thus him loudly shent,
 Dislent knight, whose coward courage chose
 To wreak itself on beast. Fairy Queen.
 My tongue and soul in this be hypocrites,
 How in my words soever she be shent,
 To give them seals never my foul consent. Shakespeare. Hamlet.
 3. To overpower; to crush; to surpass.
 She pass'd the rest as Cynthia doth shend
 The lesser stars. Spenser.
 4. It is, though used by Dryden, wholly obsolete.
SHEPHERD. n. f. [ſceap, sheep, and ſhepa, a keeper, Saxon;
ſceapshyrd.]
 1. One who tends sheep in the pasture.
 I am shepherd to another man,
 And do not shear the fleeces that I graze. Shakespeare.
 A shepherd next
 More meek came with the firrlings of his flock. Milton.
 2. A swain; a rural lover.
 If that the world and love were young,
 And truth in ev'ry shepherd's tongue,
 These pretty pleasures might me move
 To live with thee, and be thy love. Raleigh.
 3. One who tends the congregation; a pastor.
 Lead up all those who heard thee, and believ'd;
 'Midst thy own flock, great shepherd, be receiv'd,
 And glad all heav'n with millions thou hast sav'd. Prior.
SHEPHERDESS. n. f. [from shepherd.] A woman that tends sheep; a rural lass.
 She put herself into the garb of a shepherdess, and in that disguise lived many years; but discovering herself a little before her death, did profess herself the happiest person alive, not for her condition, but in enjoying him the first loved; and that she would rather, ten thousand times, live a shepherdess in contentment and satisfaction. Sidney.
 These your unusual weeds, to each part of you
 Do give a life: no shepherdess, but Flora Peering in April's front. Shakespeare. Winter's Tale.
 She like some shepherdess did shew,
 Who sat to bathe her by a river's side. Dryden.
 His doric dialect has an incomparable sweetness in its clownishness, like a fair shepherdess in her country rust. Dryden.
SHEPHERDS Needle. n. f. [ſcandix, Lat.] Venus comb. An herb.
SHEPHERDS Purse, or Pouch. n. f. [burſa paſtoris, Latin.] A common weed.
SHEPHERDS RAIL. n. f. Teasel, of which plant it is a species.
SHEPHERDISH. adj. [from shepherd.] Resembling a shepherd; tending a shepherd; pastoral; rustick. Not in use.
 He would have drawn her eldest sister, esteem'd her match for beauty, in her shepherdish attire. Sidney.
 She saw walking from her-ward a man in shepherdish apparel. Sidney.
SHEPHERT. n. f. [ſharbat, Arabick.] The juice of lemons or oranges mixed with water and sugar. Diſt.

They prefer our beer above all other drinks; and considering that water is with the rarest, especially in this climate, the dearest of sherbets, and plenty of barley, it would prove infinitely profitable to such as should bring in the use thereof. Sand.
SHERD. n. f. [ шербет, Saxon. ] The fragment of broken earthen ware.

The trivet-table of a foot was lame;
 She thrusts beneath the limping leg a sherd. Dryden.
SHERIFF. n. f. [ шербет, Saxon, from шербет, a shire, and veve, a steward. It is sometimes pronounced shrieve, which some poets have injudiciously adopted. ] An officer to whom is intrusted in each county the execution of the laws.

A great power of English and of Scots
 Are by the sheriff of Yorkshire overthrown. Shakespeare.
 Concerning ministers of justice, the high sheriffs of the counties have been very ancient in this kingdom. Bacon.
 Now may's and shrieves all hush'd and satiate lay. Pope.

SHERIFFALTY. n. f. [ from sheriff. ] The office or jurisdiction of a sheriff.
SHERIFFSHIP. n. f. [ from sheriff. ] The office or jurisdiction of a sheriff.
SHERIFFWICK. n. f. [ from sheriff. ] The office or jurisdiction of a sheriff.

There was a resumption of patents of gaols, and reannexing of them to the sheriff; privileged officers being no less an interruption of justice than privileged places. Bacon.

SHERIS. n. f. [ from Xeres, a town of Andalusia in Spain. ] A kind of sweet Spanish wine.

Your sherris warms the blood, which before, cold and fetid, left the liver white, which is the badge of pusillanimity; but the sherris makes it course from the inwards to the parts extreme. Shakespeare.

Good sherris lack ascends me into the brain, dries me there all the foolish dull vapours, and makes it apprehensive. Shak.
SHERRIS. See SHERRIS.

SHIDE. n. f. [ from шиде, to divide, Saxon. ] A board; a cutting. Skinner.

SHIELD. n. f. [ шield, Saxon. ]
 1. A buckler; a broad piece of defensive armour held on the left arm to ward off blows.

Now put your shields before your hearts, and fight
 With hearts more proof than shields. Shakespeare. Coriolanus.

2. Defence; protection.

3. One that gives protection or security.

The Grecian honour, ornaments, and shield,
 High on a pile th' unconquer'd chief is plac'd. Dryden.

TO SHIELD. v. a. [ from the noun. ]

1. To cover with a shield.

2. To defend; to protect; to secure.

Were't my fates to let these hands obey my boiling blood,
 They're apt enough to dislocate and tear
 Thy flesh and bones: how'er
 A woman's shape doth shield thee. Shakespeare. King Lear.

Shouts of applause ran ringing through the field,
 To see the son the vanquish'd father shield. Dryden.

Hear one that comes to shield his injur'd honour,
 And guard his life with hazard of her own. Smith.

3. To keep off; to defend against.

Out of their cold caves and frozen habitations, into the sweet soil of Europe, they brought with them their usual weeds, fit to shield the cold, to which they had been inured. Spenser.

My lord, I must intreat the time alone.
 —God shield I should disturb devotion. Shakespeare.

TO SHIFT. v. n. [ Of this word the original is obscure: shipta, Runick, is to change. ]

1. To change place.

Vegetables being fixed to the same place, and so not able to shift and seek out after proper matter for their increment, it was necessary that it should be brought to them. Woodward.

2. To change; to give place to other things.

If the ideas of our minds constantly change and shift, in a continual succession, it would be impossible for a man to think long of any one thing. Locke.

3. To change cloaths, particularly the linen.

She begs you just would turn you while the shifts. Young.

4. To find some expedient; to act or live though with difficulty.

We cannot shift: being in, we must go on. Daniel.

Men in distress will look to themselves, and leave their companions to shift as well as they can. L'Estrange.

Since we desire no recompence nor thanks, we ought to be dismissed, and have leave to shift for ourselves. Swift.

5. To practise indirect methods.

All those schoolmen, though they were exceeding witty, yet better teach all their followers to shift than to resolve by their distinctions. Raleigh.

6. To take some method for safety.

Nature instructs every creature how to shift for itself in cases of danger. L'Estrange.

TO SHIFT. v. a.

1. To change; to alter.

It was, not levity, but absolute necessity, that made the fish shift their condition. L'Estrange.

2. To transfer from place to place.

Pare fassion between the two St. Mary's days,
 Or let or go shift it that knowest the ways. Tupper.

3. To put by some expedient out of the way.

And laid good 'scuses on your ecstasy. Shakespeare. Othello.

The wisdom of all these latter times, in princes affairs, is rather fine deliveries, and shifts of dangers and mischiefs, when they are near, than solid and grounded courses to keep them aloof. Bacon.

4. To change in position.

Neither use they sails, nor place their oars in order upon the sides; but carrying the oar loose, shift it hither and thither at pleasure. Raleigh.

Where the wind
 Veers off, as oft the shifts her sail. Milton.

We strive in vain against the seas and wind;
 Now shift your sails. Dryden's Æn.

5. To change, as cloaths.

I would advise you to shift a shirt: the violence of action hath made you reek as a sacrifice. Shakespeare. Cymbeline.

6. To dress in fresh cloaths.

As it were to ride day and night, and not to have patience to shift me. Shakespeare. Henry IV.

7. TO SHIFT off. To defer; to put away by some expedient.

The most beautiful parts must be the most finished, the colours and words most chosen: many things in both, which are not deserv'g of this care, must be shifted off, content with vulgar expressions. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

Struggle and contrive as you will, and lay your taxes as you please, the traders will shift it off from their own gain. Locke.

By various illusions of the devil they are prevailed on to shift off the duties, and neglect the conditions, on which salvation is promised. Rogers's Sermon.

SHIFT. n. f. [ from the verb. ]

1. Expedient found or used with difficulty; difficult means.

She redoubling her blows, drove the stranger to no other shift than to ward and go back; at that time seeming the image of innocence against violence. Sidney.

If I get down, and do not break my limbs,
 I'll find a thousand shifts to get away. Shakespeare. K. John.

This perfect artifice and accuracy might have been omitted, and yet they have made shift to move up and down in the water. More's Antidote against Atheism.

Come, assist me, muse obedient;
 Let us try some new expedient;
Shift the scene for half an hour,
 Time and place are in thy power. Swift.

2. To transfer from place to place.

Pare fassion between the two St. Mary's days,
 Or let or go shift it that knowest the ways. Tupper.

3. To put by some expedient out of the way.

And laid good 'scuses on your ecstasy. Shakespeare. Othello.

The wisdom of all these latter times, in princes affairs, is rather fine deliveries, and shifts of dangers and mischiefs, when they are near, than solid and grounded courses to keep them aloof. Bacon.

4. To change in position.

Neither use they sails, nor place their oars in order upon the sides; but carrying the oar loose, shift it hither and thither at pleasure. Raleigh.

Where the wind
 Veers off, as oft the shifts her sail. Milton.

We strive in vain against the seas and wind;
 Now shift your sails. Dryden's Æn.

5. To change, as cloaths.

I would advise you to shift a shirt: the violence of action
 hath made you reek as a sacrifice. Shakespeare. Cymbeline.

6. To dress in fresh cloaths.

As it were to ride day and night, and not to have patience
 to shift me. Shakespeare. Henry IV.

7. TO SHIFT off. To defer; to put away by some expedient.

The most beautiful parts must be the most finished, the colours and words most chosen: many things in both, which are not deserv'g of this care, must be shifted off, content with vulgar expressions. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

Struggle and contrive as you will, and lay your taxes as you please, the traders will shift it off from their own gain. Locke.

By various illusions of the devil they are prevailed on to shift off the duties, and neglect the conditions, on which salvation is promised. Rogers's Sermon.

SHIFT. n. f. [ from the verb. ]

1. Expedient found or used with difficulty; difficult means.

She redoubling her blows, drove the stranger to no other
shift than to ward and go back; at that time seeming the image of innocence against violence. Sidney.

If I get down, and do not break my limbs,
 I'll find a thousand shifts to get away. Shakespeare. K. John.

This perfect artifice and accuracy might have been omitted,
 and yet they have made shift to move up and down in the water. More's Antidote against Atheism.

Not any boast of skill, but extreme shift

How to regain my sever'd company,
 Compell'd me to awake the courteous echo,
 To give me answer from her mossy couch. Milton.

A fashionable hypocrisy shall be called good manners, so we make a shift somewhat to legitimate the abuse. L'Estrange.

Those little animals provide themselves with wheat; but they can make shift without it. Addison.

Our herbage are sufficiently stored with plants, and we have made a tolerable shift to reduce them to classes. Baker.

2. Indirect expedient; mean refuge; last resource.

The very custom of seeking for particular aid and relief at the hands of God, doth, by a secret contradiction, withdraw them from endeavouring to help themselves, even by those wicked shifts, which they know can never have his allowance whose assistance their prayers seek. Hooker.

To say, where the notions cannot fitly be reconciled, that there wanteth a term, is but a shift of ignorance. Bacon.

Slow to resolve, but in performance quick;
 So true, that he was awkward at a trick;
 For little souls on little shifts rely. Dryden.

3. Fraud; artifice; stratagem.

Know ye not Ulysses' shifts?

Their swords less danger carry than their gifts. Denham.

4. Evasion; elusory practice.

As long as wit, by whetting itself, is able to find out any shifts, be it never so slight, whereby to escape out of the hands of present contradiction, they are never at a stand. Hooker.

Of themselves, for the most part, they are so cautious and wily-headed, especially being men of so small experience and practice in law matters, that you would wonder whence they borrow such subtilties and shifts. Spenser.

Here you see your commission; this is your duty, these are your discouragements: never seek for shifts and evasions from worldly afflictions: this is your reward, if you perform it;
 this your doom, if you decline it. Saunders.

5. A woman's linen.

SHIFTER. n. f. [ from shift. ] One who plays tricks; a man of artifice.

'I was such a shifter, that, if truth were known,
 Death was half glad when he had got him down. Milton.

SHIFTLESS. adj. [ from shift. ] Wanting expedients; wanting means to act or live.

For

For the poor shiftless irrationals, it is a prodigious act of the great Creator's indulgence, that they are all ready furnished with such clothing. Derham's Physico-Theology.

SHILLING. n. f. [ scilling, Sax. and Erle; schelling, Dut. ] A coin of various value in different times. It is now twelve pence.

Five of these pence made their shilling, which they called scilling, probably from scillingus, which the Romans used for the fourth part of an ounce; and forty-eight of these scillings made their pound, and four hundred of these pounds were a legacy for a king's daughter, as appeareth by the last will of King Alfred. Camden's Remains.

The very same shilling may at one time pay twenty men in twenty days, and at another rest in the same hands one hundred days. Locke.

SHILL-I-SHALL-I. A corrupt reduplication of shall I? The question of a man hesitating. To stand shill-I-shall-I, is to continue hesitating and procrastinating.

I am somewhat dainty in making a resolution, because when I make it, I keep it: I don't stand shill-I-shall-I then; if I say't, I'll do it. Congreve's Way of the World.

SHIN. n. f. [ scina, Saxon; schien, German. ] The forepart of the leg.

I bruised my shin the other day with playing at fword and dagger. Shakespeare. Merry Wives of Windsor.

The shin bone, from the knee to the instep, is made by tha-dowing one half of the leg with a single shadow. Peacocks.

His leg, then broke,

Had got a deputy of oak;

For when a shin in fight is cropt,
 The knee with one of timber's propt. Hudibras.

As when to an house we come,
 To know if any one's at home,
 We knock; so one must kick your shin,
 Ere he can find your foul's within. Anonymous.

TO SHINE. v. n. preterite I shone, I have shone; sometimes I shined, I have shined. [ scinan, Saxon; schijnen, Dutch. ]

1. To have bright splendence; to glitter; to gladden; to gleam.

To-day the French,
 All cluquant, all in gold, like heathen gods,
 Shone down the English; and to-morrow
 Made Britain India: ev'ry man that stood, Shew'd like a mine. Shakespeare.

True paradise inclos'd with shining rock.

We can dismiss thee ere the morning shines. Milton.

Fair daughter, blow away these mists and clouds,
 And let thy eyes shine forth in their full lustre. Denham.

The sun shines when he sees it. Locke.

2. To be without clouds.

The moon shines bright: in such a night as this,
 When the sweet wind did gently kiss the trees,
 And they did make no noise. Shakespeare. Merchant of Venice.

How bright and goodly shines the moon!

The moon! the sun: it is not moonlight now. Shakespeare.

Two men stood by them in shining garments. Lu. xxiv. 4.

Clear pools greatly comfort the eyes when the sun is overcast, or when the moon shineth. Bacon.

3. To be glossy.

They are waxen fat, they shine. Jer. v. 28.

Fish with their fins and shining scales. Milton.

The colour and shining of bodies is nothing but the different arrangement and refraction of their minute parts. Locke.

4. To be gay; to be splendid.

So proud the shined in her princely state,
 Looking to heaven; for earth she did disdain,
 And sitting high. Fairy Queen.

5. To be beautiful.

Of all th' enamel'd race, whose silv'ry wing
 Waves to the tepid zephyrs of the Spring,
 Or swims along the fluid atmosphere,
 Once brightest shin'd this child of heat and air. Dunciad.

6. To be eminent or conspicuous.

If there come truth from them,
 As upon thee, Macbeth, their speeches shine,
 Why, by the verities on thee made good,
 May they not be my oracles as well? Shakespeare.

Her face was veil'd; yet to my fancied sight
 Love, sweetness, goodness, in her person shin'd
 So clear, as in no face with more delight. Milton.

Cato's soul

Shines out in every thing she acts or speaks;

While winning mildness and attractive smiles
 Dwell in her looks, and, with becoming grace,
 Soften the rigour of her father's virtues. Addison.

The reformation, in its first establishment, produced its proper fruits, and distinguished the whole age with shining instances of virtue and morality. Addison's Freeholder.

The courtier smooth, who forty years had shin'd,
 A humble servant to all human kind. Pope.

Few are qualified to shine in company; but it is in most mens power to be agreeable. Swift.

7. To be propitious.
 The Lord make his face shine upon thee, and be gracious. Num. vi. 25.

8. To enlighten corporeally and externally.

The light of righteousness hath not shined unto us, and the sun of righteousness rose not upon us. Wisd. v. 6.

Celestial light

Shine inward, and the mind through all her powers Irradiate. Milton.

SHINE. n. f. [ from the verb. ]

1. Fair weather.

Be it fair or foul, or rain or shine. Dryden.

He will accustom himself to heat and cold, and shine and rain; all which if a man's body will not endure, it will serve him to very little purpose. Locke.

2. Brightness; splendour; lustre. It is a word, though not un-analogical, yet ungraceful, and little used.

He that has inured his eyes to that divine splendour, which results from the beauty of holiness, is not dazzled with the glittering shine of gold, and considers it as a vein of the same earth he treads on. Decay of Piety.

Say, in what mortal soil thou deign'st to grow?

Fair op'ning to some court's propitious shine,
 Or deep with diamonds in the flaming mine? Pope.

SHINNESS. n. f. [ from shy. ] Unwillingness to be tractable or familiar.

An incurable shinness is the vice of Irish horses, and is hardly ever seen in Flanders, because the Winter forces the breeders there to house and handle their colts. Temple.

They were famous for their justice in commerce, but extreme shinness to strangers: they exposed their goods with the price marked upon them, and then retired. Arbutnot.

SHINGLE

SHI

The sun no sooner shall the mountains touch,
But we will ship him hence. Shakefp. Hamlet.
In Portugal men spent with age, so as they cannot hope for above a year of life, ship themselves away in a Brazil fleet.

Temple.

A single leaf can waft an army o'er,
Or ship off ferates to some distant shore. Pope.
The canal that runs from the sea into the Arno gives a convenient carriage to all goods that are to be shipped off. Addif.

SHIPBOARD. n. f. [ship and board. See BOARD.]
1. This word is seldom used but in adverbial phrases: a ship- board, on shipboard, in a ship.

Let him go on shipboard, and the mariners will not leave their starboard and larboard. Brankall.

Friend,

What do'st thou make a shipboard? To what end? Dryden.
Ovid, writing from on shipboard to his friends, excused the faults of his poetry by his misfortunes. Dryden.

2. The plank of a ship.
They have made all thy shipboards of fir-trees, and brought cedars from Lebanon to make masts. Ezek. xxvii. 5.

SHIPBOY. n. f. [ship and boy.] Boy that serves in a ship.

Few or none know me: if they did,
This shipboy's semblance hath disguis'd me quite. Shakefp.

SHIPMAN. n. f. [ship and man.] Sailor; seaman.

I myself have the very points they blow,
All the quarters that they know

I 'th' shipman's card. Shakefp. Macbeth.

Hiram sent in the navy shipmen that had knowledge of the sea. 1 Kings ix. 27.

SHIPMASTER. n. f. Master of the ship.

The shipmaster came to him, and said unto him, what meanest thou, O sleeper! arise, call upon thy God. Jon. i. 6.

SHIPPING. n. f. [from ship.]

1. Vessels of navigation.

Before Caesar's invasion of this land, the Britons had not any shipping at all, other than their boats of twigs covered with hides. Raleigh.

The numbers and courage of our men, with the strength of our shipping, have for many ages past made us a match for the greatest of our neighbours at land, and an overmatch for the strongest at sea. Temple.

Fishes first to shipping did impart;
Their tail the rudder, and their head the prow. Dryden.

2. Passage in a ship.

They took shipping and came to Capernaum, seeking for Jesus. Jo. vi. 24.

SHIPWRECK. n. f. [ship and wreck.]

1. The destruction of ships by rocks or shelves.

Bold were the men, which on the ocean first Spread their new sails, when shipwreck was the worst. Waller.

We are not to quarrel with the water for inundations and shipwrecks. L'Estrange.

This sea war cost the Carthaginians five hundred quinquiremes, and the Romans seven hundred, including their ship- wrecks. Arbutnot.

2. The parts of a shattered ship.

They might have it in their own country, and that by gathering up the shipwrecks of the Athenian and Roman theatres. Dryden.

3. Destruction; miscarriage.

Holding faith and a good conscience, which some having put away, concerning faith, have made shipwreck. 1 Tim. i.

To SHIPWRECK. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To destroy by dashing on rocks or shallows.

Whence the sun 'gins his reflection,
Shipwrecking storms and direful thunders break. Shakefp.

2. To make to suffer the dangers of a wreck.

Thou that can'st still the raging of the seas,
Chain up the winds, and bid the tempests cease,
Redeem my shipwreck'd soul from raging gulls
Of cruel passion and deceitful lusts. Prior.

A square piece of marble shews itself to have been a little pagan monument of two persons who were shipwrecked. Addif.

3. To throw by loss of the vessel.

Shipwreck'd upon a kingdom, where no pity,
No friends, no hope! no kindred weep for me. Shakefp.

SHIPWRIGHT. n. f. [ship and wright.] A builder of ships.

Why such impels of shipwrights, whose fore talk
Does not divide the Sunday from the week. Shakefp.

A miserable frame it were for our shipwrights, if they did not exceed all others in the setting up of our royal ships. Ral.

Vast numbers of ships in our harbours, and shipwrights in our sea-port towns. Swift.

The Roman fleet, although built by shipwrights, and conducted by pilots, both without experience, defeated that of the Carthaginians. Arbutnot.

As when a shipwright stands his workmen o'er,
Who ply the wimble some huge beam to bore,
Urg'd on all hands it nimbly spins about,
The grain deep piercing, 'till it scoops it out. Pope.

SHIRE. n. f. [scyr, from scyrman, to divide, Sax. skyre, Eric.]

SHI

A division of the kingdom; a county; so much of the kingdom as is under one sheriff.

His blazing eyes, like two bright shining shields,
Did burn with wrath, and sparkled living fire;
As two broad beacons, set in open fields.

Send forth their flames far off to every shire. Fa. Queen.

The noble youths from distant shires resort. Prior.

SHIRT. n. f. [shert, Danish; scyrre, scyrre, Saxon.] The under linen garment of a man.

Shift a shirt: the violence of action hath made you reek as a sacrifice. Shakefp. Cymbeline.

I take but two shirts out with me, and I mean not to sweat extraordinarily. Shakefp. Henry IV.

When we lay next us what we hold most dear,
Like Hercules, envenom'd shirts we wear,
And cleaving mischiefs. Dryden.

Several persons in December had nothing over their shoulders but their shirts. Addif. on Italy.

To SHIRT. v. a. [from the noun] To cover; to clothe as in a shirt.

Ah! for so many souls, as but this morn
Were cloth'd with flesh, and warm'd with vital blood,
But naked now, or shirted but with air. Dryden.

SHIRTLESS. adj. [from shirt.] Wanting a shirt.

Linley-woolley brothers,
Grave mimmers! sleeveless some, and shirtless others. Pope.

SHITTAN. n. f. A sort of precious wood, of which Adia- shittim made the greatest part of the tables, altar, and planks belonging to the tabernacle. The wood is hard, tough, smooth, without knots, and extremely beautiful. It grows in Arabia. Caban.

I will plant in the wilderness the shittan-tree. Is. xli. 19.

Bring me an offering of badgers skins and shittim-wood. Ex.

SHITTLECOCK. n. f. [Commonly and perhaps as properly shut- tlecock.] Of shuttle or shuttle the etymology is doubtful: Shit- ler derives it from shutle, German, to shake; or scetzer, Saxon, to throw. He thinks it is called a cock from its feathers. Perhaps it is properly shuttlecock, a cork driven to and fro, as the instrument in weaving, and softened by frequent and rapid utterance from cock to cock. A cork stuck with feathers, and driven by players from one to another with bat-tledors.

You need not discharge a cannon to break the chain of his thoughts: the pat of a shuttlecock, or the creaking of a jack, will do his business. Caban.

SHIVE. n. f. [shyve, Dutch.]

1. A slice of bread.

Easy it is
Of a cut loaf to steal a shive. Shakefp. Titus Andronicus.

2. A thick splinter, or lamina cut off from the main substance.

Shavings made by the plane are in some things differing from those shives, or thin and flexible pieces of wood, that are obtained by borers. Boyle.

To SHIVER. v. n. [shawren, German.] To quake; to tremble; to shudder, as with cold or fear.

Any very harsh noise will set the teeth on edge, and make all the body shiver. Bacon.

What religious palsy's this,
Which makes the boughs divert their blifs?
And that they might her footsteps strow,
Drop their leaves with shivering awe. Cleaveland.

Why stand we longer shivering under fear? Milton.

The man that shiver'd on the brink of sin,
Thus steel'd and harden'd, ventures boldly in. Dryden.

He described this march to the temple with so much horror, that he shivered every joint. Addif.

Give up Laisus to the realms of day,
Whole ghosts, yet shivering on Cocytus' sand, Expects its passage to the farther strand. Pope.

Prometheus is laid
On icy Caucasus to shiver,
While vultures eat his growing liver. Swift.

To SHIVER. v. n. [from shive.] To fall at once into many parts or shives.

Had'st thou been aught but gossamer, feathers, air,
So many fathom down precipitating, Thou'd'st shiver'd like an egg. Shakefp. King John.

Upon the breaking and shivering of a great state, you may be sure to have wars. Bacon.

The natural world, should gravity once cease, or be withdrawn, would instantly shiver into millions of atoms. Waller.

To SHIVER. v. a. To break by one act into many parts; to shatter.

The ground with shiver'd armour strown.
Show's of granado's rain, by sudden burst
Disploding murderous bowels; fragments of steel
A thousand ways at once, the shiver'd orbs
Fly diverse, working torment. Philips.

SHIVER. n. f. [from the verb.] One fragment of many into which any thing is broken.

He would pound thee into shivers with his fist, as a sailor breaks a biscuit. Shakefp. Troilus and Cressida.

SHO

As brittle as the glory is the face;
For there it is crack'd in an hundred shivers. Shakefp.
If you strike a solid body that is brittle, it breaketh not only where the immediate force is, but breaketh all about into shiv- ers and fritters. Bacon's Nat. History.

Surging waves against a solid rock,
Though all to shivers dash'd, th' assault renew,
Vain batt'ry, and in froth or bubbles end. Milton.

SHIVERY. adj. [from shiver.] Loose of coherence; incompact; easily falling into many fragments.

There were observed incredible numbers of these shells
thus flatted, and extremely tender, in shivery stone. Woodward.

SHOARDSTONE. n. f.

Shoardstone is a small stone, smooth without, of a dark liver colour, and of the same colour within, only with the addition of a faint purple. It is a fragment broke of an iron vein. Woodward on Fossils.

Certain tin-stones ly on the face of the ground which they call shoads, as shed from the main load, and made somewhat round by the water. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

The loads or veins of metal were by this action of the departing water made easy to be found out by the shoads, or trains of metallic fragments born off from them, and lying in trains from those veins towards the sea, in the same course that water falling thence would take. Woodward.

SHOAL. n. f. [scrole, Saxon.]

1. A crowd; a great multitude; a throng.

When there be great shoads of people, which go on to populate, without foreseeing means of sustentation: once in an age they discharge a portion of their people upon other nations. Bacon.

A league is made against such routs and shoads of people as have utterly degenerated from nature. Bacon.

The vices of a prince draw shoads of followers, when his virtue leaves him the more eminent, because single. Decay of Piety.

A shoad of silver fishes glides
And plays about the barges. Waller.

God had the command of famine, whereby he could have carried them off by shoads. Woodward.

Around the goddess roll
Broad hats, and hoods, and caps, a fable shoad, Thick, and more thick the black blockade extends. Pope.

2. A shallow; a sand bank.

The haven's mouth they durst not enter, for the dangerous
shoads. Abbot's Description of the World.

He heaves them off the shoad. Dryden.

The depth of your pond should be six foot; and on the sides some shoads for the fish to lay their spawn. Martimer.

To SHOAL. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To crowd; to throng.

The wave-sprung entrails, about which saufsens and fish did shoad. Chopman.

2. To be shallow; to grow shallow.

What they met
Solid, or slimy, as in raging sea,
Toft up and down, together crouded drove,
From each side *shoad*ing towards the mouth of hell. Milton.

SHOAL. adj. Shallow; obstructed or incumbered with banks.

SHOALNESS. n. f. [from shoal.] Shallowness; frequency of shallow places.

SHOALY. adj. [from shoal.] Full of shoals; full of shallow places.

Those who live
Where, with his shoaly foords Vulturinus roars. Dryden.

The watchful heroe felt the knocks, and found
The toiling vessel fail'd on shoaly ground. Dryden.

SHOCK. n. f. [shoc, French; shocken, Dutch.]

1. Conflict; mutual impression of violence; violent concourse.

Thro' the shock
Of fighting elements on all sides round
Environ'd, wins his way. Milton.

2. Concussion; external violence.

It is inconceivable how any such man that hath stood the shock of an eternal duration, without corruption or alteration, should after be corrupted or altered. Judge Hale.

These strong unshaken moulds resist the shocks
Of tides and seas tempestuous, while the rocks,
That secret in a long continu'd vein
Pass through the earth, the pond'rous pile sustain.
Such is the haughty man, his tow'ring soul,
Rises superior and looks down on Caesar.
Long at the head of his few faithful friends,
He stood the shock of a whole host of foes.
The tender apples from their parents rent,
By stormy shocks must not neglected lye,
The prey of worms. Philips.

3. The conflict of enemies.

The adverse legions, not less hideous join'd
The horrid shock. Milton.

Those that run away are in more danger than the others that stand the shock. L'Estrange.

SHO

The mighty force

Of Edward twice o'turn'd their desp'rate king:
Twice he arose, and join'd the horrid shock. Philips.

4. Offence; impression of disgust.

Fewer shocks a statesman gives his friend. Young.

5. [Shock, old Dutch.] A pile of sheaves of corn.

Corn tithed, for parson, together to get,
And cause it on shocks to be by and by set. Tuiss.

In a full age, like as a shock of corn cometh in, in his season. Job.

Thou, full of days, like weighty shocks of corn,
In season reap'd, shall to thy grave be born. Samuels.

Behind the master walks, builds up the shocks,
Feels his heart heave with joy. Thomson.

6. [from shag.] A rough dog.

I would fain know why a shock and a hound are not di-

To SHOCK. v. a. [shocken, Dutch.]

1. To shake by violence.

These her princes are come home again:
Come the three corners of the world in arms,
And we will shock them. Shakefp. K. John.

2. To offend; to disgust.

Supposing verses are never so beautiful, yet if they contain any thing that shocks religion or good manners, they are verjus inopes rerum nequeque canore. Dryden.

Those who in reading Homer are shock'd that 'tis always a lion, may as well be angry that 'tis always a man. Pope.

My son,
I bade him love, and bid him now forbear:
If you have any kindness for him, still Advise him not to shock a father's will. Dryden.

To SHOCK. v. n. To be offensive.

The French humour, in regard of the liberties they take in female conversations, is very shocking to the Italians, who are naturally jealous. Addif. on Italy.

To SHOCK. v. n. [from the noun.] To build up piles of heaves.

Reap well, scatter not, gather clean that is shorn,
Bind fast, shock apace, have an eye to thy corn. Tuiss.

SHOD. for shoed, the preterit and participle passive of to shoe.

Strong exalted cart that is clouted and shod. Tuiss.

SHOE. n. f. plural shoes, anciently shoon. [scoco, scoco, Saxon;
shoe, Dutch.] the cover of the foot.

Your hose should be ungarter'd, your shoe untied, and every thing about you demonstrating a careless desolation. Shakefp.

Spare none but such as so in clouted shoon,
For they are thrifty honest men. Shakefp. Hen. VI.

This hollow cylinder is fitted with a sucker, upon which is nailed a good thick piece of tanned shoe-leather. Boyle.

Unknown and like elcem'd, and the dull swain
Treads on it daily with his clouted shoon,
And yet more medic'nal than that moly
That Hermes once to wife Ulysses gave;
He call'd it hamony. Milton.

I was in pain, pulled off my shoe, and some ease that gave me. Temple.

To SHOE. v. a. preterit, I shoed; participle passive shod. [from the noun.]

1. To fit the foot with a shoe.

The smith's note for shoeing and plough irons. Shakefp.

great appropriation to his own good parts, that he can shoe him himself. Shakefp.

Tell your master that the horses want shoeing. Swift.

2. To cover at the bottom.

The wheel compos'd of crickets bones,
And daintily made for the nonce,
For fear of rattling on the stones,
With thistle down they shod it. Dray.

SHOEBOY. n. f. [shoe and boy.] A boy that cleans shoes.

If I employ a shoeboy, is it in view to his advantage

S H O

A cobbler or shoemaker may find some little fault with the patchet of a shoe that an Appelles had painted, when the whole figure is such, as none but an Appelles could paint. Watts.
 SHOE-TYE. n. f. [from shoe and tye.] The ribband with which women tie their shoes.

Madam, I do as is my duty,
 Honour the shadow of your shoetye. Hudibras.

SHOG. n. f. [from shock.] Violent concussion.
 Another's diving bow he did adore,

Which, with a shog, casts all the hair before. Dryden.

He will rather have the primitive man to be produced, in a kind of digesting balneum, where all the heavier lees may subside, and a due equilibrium be maintained, not disturbed by any such rude and violent shogs that would ruffle and break all the little stamina of the embryo. Bentley.

To SHOG. v. a. To shake; to agitate by sudden interrupted impulses.

After it is washed, they put the remnant into a wooden dish, the which they softly shog to and fro in the water, until the earthy substance be flitted away. Carew.

SHONE. The preterite of shine.
 All his father in him shone. Milton.

SHOOK. The preterite and in poetry participle passive of shake.
 Taxallan shook by Montezuma's pow'rs,

Has, to resist his forces, call'd in ours. Dryden.

To SHOOT. v. a. preterite, I shot; participle, shot or shotten. [recreant, Saxon.]

1. To discharge any thing so as to make it fly with speed or violence.

Light
 Shoots far into the bosom of dim night
 A glimmering dawn. Milton.

2. To discharge from a bow or gun.
 I owe you much, and like a witless youth,
 That which I owe is lost; but if you please
 To shoot an arrow that self way
 Which you did shoot the first, I do not doubt
 To find both. Shakespeare.

This murderous shaft that's shot
 Hath not yet lighted; and our safest way
 Is to avoid the aim. Shakespeare.

3. To let off.
 The men shoot strong shoots with their bows. Abbot.

The two ends of a bow shot off, fly from one another. Boyle.

Men who know not hearts, should make examples;
 Which like a warning-piece, must be shot off, Dryden.

4. To strike with any thing shot.
 Not an hand shall touch the mount, but he shall be stoned or shot thro'. Exod. xix. 13.

The liquid air his moving pinions wound,
 And, in the moment, shot him on the ground. Dryden.

5. To emit new parts, as a vegetable.
 None of the trees exalt themselves, neither shoot up their top among the thick boughs. Ezek. xxxi. 14.

A grain of mustard groweth up and shooteth out great branches. Mark. iv. 32.

Tell like a tall old oak, how learning shoots,
 To heaven her branches, and to hell her roots. Denham.

6. To emit; to dart or thrust forth.
 Ye bucks, who pluck the flow'rs,
 Beware the secret snake that shoots a sting, Dryden.

 You cannot think he would deny
 To lend the other friendly aid,
 Or wink, as coward and afraid. Prior.

2. To germinate; to increase in vegetable growth.
 Such trees as love the sun do not willingly descend far into the earth; and therefore they are commonly trees that shoot up much. Bacon.

S H O

Onions, as they hang, will shoot forth. Bacon.

The tree at once both upward shoots,
 And just as much grows downward to the roots. Cleav.

The monarch oak, the patriarch of the trees,
Shoots rising up, and spreads by slow degrees. Dryden.

Nor will the wither'd stock be green again,
 But the wild olive shoots and shades the ungrateful plain. Dr.

New creatures rise,
 A moving mass at first, and short of thighs;

 And we for fear compell'd to shut our shops. Shakespeare.

Your most grave belly thus answer'd;
 True is it, my incorporate friends,

That I receive the general food at first,
 Which you do live upon; and fit it is,

Because I am the store-house and the shop
 Of the whole body. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

In his needy shop a tortoise hung,
 An alligator stuffed, and other skins

Of ill-tap'd fithes; and about his shelves
 A beggarly account of empty boxes.

Scarcely any fold in shops could be relied on as faithfully prepared. Boyle.

To SHOVEL. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To throw or heap with a shovel.

I thought

To die upon the bed my father dy'd,
To lie close by his honest bones; but now
Some hangman must put on my throw, and lay me
Where no priest shovels in dust. Shaksp. Winter's Tale.

2. To gather in great quantities.

Ducks shovel them up as they swim along the waters; but divers insects also devour them. Darham.

SHOVELBOARD. n. f. [shovel and board.] A long board on which they play by sliding metal pieces at a mark.

So have I seen, in hall of lord,

A weak arm throw on a long shovelboard;

He barely lays his piece. Dryden.

SHOVELLER, or SHOVELARD. n. f. [from shovel.] A bird.

Shoveller, or spoonbill: the former name the more proper, the end of the bill being broad like a shovel, but not concave like a spoon, but perfectly flat. Grew's Museum.

Pewees, gulls, and shovellers feed upon flesh, and yet are good meat. Bacon.

This formation of the wizzard is not peculiar to the swan, but common unto the plate, or shovellard, a bird of no multi-cal throat. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

SHOUGH. n. f. [for shock.] A species of shaggy dog; a shock.

In the catalogue ye be for men,

As bound and greyhounds, mungrels, spaniels, curs,

Shoughs, water-rugs, and demi-wolves are cleped

All by the name of dogs. Shak. Macbeth.

SHOULD. v. n. [scende, Dutch; sceolban, Saxon.]

1. This is a kind of auxiliary verb used in the conjunctive mood, of which the signification is not easily fixed.

2. I SHOULD go. It is my business or duty to go.

3. If I SHOULD go. If it happens that I go.

4. Thou SHOULD'ST go. Thou oughtest to go.

5. If thou SHOULD'ST go. If it happens that thou goest.

6. The same significations are found in all the other persons singular and plural.

Let not a desperate action more engage you

Than safety should. Ben. Johnson's Catiline.

Some praises come of good wishes and respects, when by telling men what they are, they represent to them what they should be. Bacon.

To do thee honour I will shed their blood,

Which the just laws, if I were faultless, should. Waller.

So subjects love just kings, or so they should. Dryden.

I conclude, that things are not as they should be. Swift.

7. SHOULD be. A proverbial phrase of slight contempt or irony.

The girls look upon their father as a clown, and the boys think their mother no better than she should be. Addison.

8. There is another signification now little in use, in which should has scarcely any distinct or explicable meaning. It should be differs in this sense very little from it is.

There is a fabulous narration, that in the northern countries there should be an herb that groweth in the likeness of a lamb, and feedeth upon the grass. Bacon's Nat. History.

SHOULDER. n. f. [sculbre, Saxon; scholder, Dutch.]

1. The joint which connects the arm to the body.

I have seen better faces in my time,

Than stand on any shoulder that I see

Before me. Shakespeare.

If I have lifted up my hand against the fatherless, when I saw my help in the gate, then let mine arm fall from my shoulderblade, and mine arm be broken from the bone. Job xxxi. 22.

It is a fine thing to be carried on mens shoulders; but give

God thanks that thou art not forced to carry a rich fool upon thy shoulders, as those poor men do. Taylor.

The head of the shoulder-bone being round, is inserted into so shallow a cavity in the scapula, that were there no other guards for it, it would be thrust out upon every occasion. Wise.

2. The upper joint of the foreleg.

We must have a shoulder of mutton for a property. Shaksp.

He took occasion, from a shoulder of mutton, to cry up the plenty of England. Addison's Freeholder.

3. The upper part of the back.

Emily dress'd herself in rich array;

Fresh as the month, and as the morning fair,

Adown her shoulders fell her length of hair. Dryden.

4. The shoulders are used as emblems of strength, or the act of supporting.

Ev'n as thou wilt, sweet Warwick, let it be;

For on thy shoulders do I build my seat. Shaksp. H. VI.

The king has cur'd me; and from these shoulders,

These ruin'd pillars, out of pity taken

A load would link a navy. Shaksp. Henry VIII.

5. A rising part; a prominence.

When you rivet a pin into a hole, your pin must have a shoulder to it thicker than the hole is wide, that the shoulder slip not through the hole as well as the shank. Mason.

To SHOULDER. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To push with insolence and violence.

The rolling billows beat the ragged shore,

As they the earth would shoulder from her seat. Fairy Queen.

SHO

Dudman, a well-known foreland to most sailors, here shoulders out the ocean, to shape the same a large bottom between itself. Carew's Survey of Carara.

You debate yourself,

To think of mixing with th' ignoble herd:

What, shall the people know their god-like prince

Headed a rabble, and profan'd his person,

Shoulder'd with filth? Dryden.

So vast the navy now at anchor rides,

That underneath it the press'd waters fail,

And, with its weight, it shoulders off the tides. Dryden.

Around her numberless the rabble flow'd,

Shouldering each other, crowding for a view. Rouse's 7. Share.

When Hopkins dies, a thousand lights attend

The wretch, who living lay'd a candle's end;

Shouldering God's altar a vile image stands,

Belies his features, nay extends his hands. Pope.

2. To put upon the shoulder.

Archimedes's lifting up Marcellus's ships finds little more credit than that of the giants shouldering mountains. Gloss.

SHOULDERBELT. n. f. [shoulder and belt.] A belt that comes across the shoulder.

Thou hast an ulcer, which no leech can heal,

Though thy broad shoulder belt the wound conceal. Dryden.

SHOULDERCLAPPER. n. f. [shoulder and clap.] One who affects familiarity, or one that mischiefs privily.

A fiend, a fury, pitiless and rough;

A back friend, a shoulderclapper, one that commands

The passages of alleys. Shak. Comedy of Errors.

SHOULDERSHOTTEN. adj. [shoulder and shot.] Strained in the shoulder.

His horse waid in the back, and shouldershotten. Shaksp.

SHOULDERSLIP. n. f. [shoulder and slip.] Dislocation of the shoulder.

The horse will take so much care of himself as to come off with only a strain or a shoulderslip. Swift.

To SHOUT. v. n. [A word of which no etymology is known.]

To cry in triumph or exhortation.

They shouted thrice: what was the last cry for? Shaksp.

Shout unto God with the voice of triumph. Pf. xlviii. 1.

It is not the voice of them that shout for mastery. Ec. xxxii.

The shouting for thy summer fruits and harvest is fallen. Is.

He storms and shouts; but flying bullets now

To execute his rage appear too slow:

They miss, or sweep but common souls away;

For such a loss Opdam his life must pay. Waller.

There had been nothing but howlings and screechings of poor naked men, belabouring one another with flagged sticks. Merr.

All clad in skins of beasts the jav'lin bear,

And shrieks and shouting rend the suff'ring air. Dryden.

What hinders you to take the man you love?

The people will be glad, the soldier shout;

And Betran, though repining, will be aw'd. Dryden.

SHOUT. n. f. [from the verb.] A loud and vehement cry of triumph or exhortation.

Thanks, gentle citizens:

This general applause, and cheerful shout,

Argues your wisdom and your love to Richard. Shakespeare.

The Rhodians, seeing the enemy turn their backs, gave a great shout in derision. Kroll's History of the Turks.

Then he might have dy'd of all admir'd,

And his triumphant soul with shouts expir'd. Dryden.

SHOUTER. n. f. [from shout.] He who shouts.

A peal of loud applause rang out,

And thinn'd the air, 'till even the birds fell down

Upon the shouters heads. Dryden's Cleopatra.

To SHOW. v. a. pret. showed and shown; part. pass. shown.

[scapan, Saxon; schauen, Dutch.] This word is frequently written shew; but since it is always pronounced and often written show, which is favoured likewise by the Dutch schouwen,

I have adjusted the orthography to the pronunciation.]

1. To exhibit to view.

If I do feign,

O let me in my present wildness die,

And never live to shew th' incredulous word. Shaksp. H. IV.

The noble change that I have purposed.

Shew me a token for good, that they which hate me may see

it. Pf. lxxvii. 17.

Wilt thou shew wonders to the dead? Shall the dead arise and praise thee? Pf. lxxviii. 10.

Men should not take a charge upon them that they are not fit for, as if fingering, dancing, and shewing of tricks, were qualifications for a governor. L'Estrange.

2. To give proof of; to prove.

This I urge to show

Invalid that which thee to doubt it mov'd. Milton.

I'll to the citadel repair,

And show my duty by my timely care. Dryden.

3. To publish; to make public; to proclaim.

Ye are a chosen generation, that ye should show forth the praises of him who hath called you out of darkness. 1 Pet. ii.

4. To

4. To make known.

I raised thee up to shew in thee my power. Ex. ix. 16.

I shall no more speak in proverbs, but shew you plainly of the Father. Jo. xvi. 25.

Nothing wants but that thy shape may show

Thy inward fraud. Milton.

5. To point the way; to direct.

She taking him for some cautious city patient, that came for privacy, shews him into the dining-room. Swift.

6. To offer; to afford.

To him that is afflicted, pity should be shewed from his friend. Job. vi. 14.

Felix, willing to shew the Jews a pleasure, left Paul bound.

Thou shalt utterly destroy them; make no covenant with them, nor shew mercy unto them. Deutr. vii. 2.

7. To explain; to expound.

Forasmuch as knowledge and shewing of hard sentences, and dissolving of doubts, were found in the same, Daniel let him be called. Dan. v. 12.

8. To teach; to tell.

I'm fent to show thee what shall come. Milton.

To Show. v. n.

1. To appear; to look; to be in appearance.

She shews a body rather than a life,

A statue than a brother. Shaksp. Ant. and Cleopatra.

Just such the shews before a rising storm.

Still on we press; and here renew the carnage,

So great, that, in the stream, the moon shew'd purple. Dryden.

2. To have appearance.

My lord of York, it better shew'd with you,

When that your flock assembled by the bell,

Encircled you to hear with reverence

Your exposition on the holy text,

Than now to see you here an iron man,

Cheering a rout of rebels with your drum. Shak. Henry IV.

Show. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A spectacle; something publicly exposed to view for money.

I do not know what the may produce me; but, provided it be a show, I shall be very well satisfied. Addison.

The dwarf kept the gates of the show room. Arbutnot.

2. Superficial appearance.

Mild heav'n

Disapproves that care, though wise in show,

That with superfluous burden loads the day. Milton.

3. Offentatious display.

Nor doth his grandeur and majestic show

Of luxury, though call'd magnificence,

Allure mine eye. Milton's Par. Regain'd.

Stand before her in a golden dream;

Set all the pleasures of the world to show,

And in vain joys let her loose spirits flow. Dryden.

The radiant sun

Sends from above ten thousand blessings down,

Nor is he set so high for show alone. Granville.

Never was a charge, maintained with such a show of gravity, which had a lighter foundation. Atterbury.

4. Object attracting notice.

The city itself makes the noblest show of any in the world:

the houses are most of them painted on the outside, so that they look extremely gay and lively. Addison.

5. Splendid appearance.

Jesus, rising from his grave,

Spoil'd principalities and pow'rs, triumph'd

In open show, and with ascension bright

Captivity led captive. Milton.

6. Semblance; likeness.

When devils will their blackest sins put on,

They do suggest at first with heav'nly shows. Shak. Othello.

He through pass'd the midst unmark'd,

SHR

His panegyrick is made up of half a dozen shreds, like a schoolboy's theme, beaten general topics.
A beggar might patch up a garment with such shreds as the world throws away.
2. A fragment.
They said they were an hungry; sigh'd forth proverbs,
That hunger broke stone walls; that dogs must eat:
And with these shreds they vented their complainings. Shak.
Shreds of wit and fenceless rhymes
Blunder'd out a thousand times. Swift.
SHREW. n. f. [schrezen, German, to clamour.] A peevish, malignant, clamorous, spiteful, vexatious, turbulent woman. [It appears in Robert of Gloucester, that this word signified anciently any one perverse or obstinate of either sex.]
There dede of hem vor hunger a thousand and mo,
And yat nolde the shrewen to none pes go. Robert of Gloucester.
Be merry, my wife has all;
For women are shrews both short and tall. Shak. H. IV.
By this reckoning he is more shrew than she. Shakespeare.
A man had got a shrew to his wife, and there could be no quiet in the house for her. L'Estrange.
Her fallow cheeks her envious mind did shew,
And ev'ry feature spoke aloud the shrew. Dryden.
Every one of them, who is a shrew in domestic life, is now become a scold in politics. Addis. Freeholder.
SHREWD. adj. [Contracted from shrewd.]
1. Having the qualities of a shrew; malicious; troublesome; mischievous.
Her eldest sister is so curst and shrewd,
That till the father ride his hands of her,
Your love must live a maid. Shakespeare.
2. Maliciously sly; cunning; more artful than good.
It was a shrewd saying of the old monk, that two kind of prisons would serve for all offenders, an inquisition and a bedlam: if any man should deny the being of a God, and the immortality of the soul, such a one should be put into the first, as being a desperate heretic; but if any man should profess to believe these things, and yet allow himself in any known wickedness, such a one should be put into bedlam. Tillotson.
A spiteful saying gratifies so many little passions, that it meets with a good reception; and the man who utters it is looked upon as a shrewd satirist. Addison.
Corruption proceeds from employing those who have the character of shrewd worldly men, instead of such as have had a liberal education, and trained up in virtue. Addison.
3. Bad; ill-betokening.
Scarce any man passes to a liking of sin in others, but by first practising it himself; and consequently we may take it for a shrewd indication, and sign, whereby to judge of those who have sinned with too much caution, to suffer the world to charge sins directly upon their conversation. South's Sermon.
4. Painful; pinching; dangerous; mischievous.
Every of this number,
That have endur'd shrewd nights and days with us,
Shall share the good of our returned fortune. Shakespeare.
When a man thinks he has a servant, he finds a traitor that eats his bread, and is readier to do him a mischief, and a shrewd turn, than an open adversary. South's Sermon.
No enemy is so despicable but he may do a body a shrewd turn. L'Estrange.
SHREWDLY. adv. [from shrewd.]
1. Mischievously; destructively.
This practice hath most shrewdly past upon thee. Shakespeare.
At Oxford, his youth and want of experience in maritime service, had somewhat been shrewdly touched, even before the sluices of popular liberty were set open. Watson.
2. Vexatiously. It is used commonly of slight mischief, or in ironical expression.
The obstinate and schismatical are like to think themselves shrewdly hurt, forsooth, by being cut off from that body which they choose not to be of. South's Sermon.
This last allusion rubb'd upon the fore;
Yet seem'd the not to winch, tho' shrewdly pain'd. Dryden.
3. With strong suspicion.
Four per cent. encreases not the number of lenders; as any man at first hearing will shrewdly suspect it. Locke.
SHREWDSNESS. n. f. [from shrewd.]
1. Sly cunning; archness.
Her garboiles, which not wanted shrewdsness of policy too, did you too much disquiet. Shakespeare.
The neighbours round admire his shrewdsness,
For songs of loyalty and lewdness. Swift.
2. Mischievousness; petulance.
SHREWISH. adj. [from shrew.] Having the qualities of a shrew; froward; petulantly clamorous.
Angelo, you must excuse us;
My wife is shrewish when I keep not hours. Shakespeare.
SHREWISHLY. adv. [from shrewish.] Petulantly; peevishly; clamorously; frowardly.
He speaks very shrewishly; one would think his mother's milk were scarce out of him. Shakespeare.

SHR

SHREWISNESS. n. f. [from shrewish.] The qualities of a shrew; frowardness; petulance; clamorousness.
I have no gift in shrewisness,
I am a right maid for my cowardice;
Let her not strike me. Shakespeare.
SHREWMOUSE. n. f. [schreap, Saxon.] A mouse of which the bite is generally supposed venomous, and to which vulgar tradition assigns such malignity, that she is said to lame the foot over which she runs. I am informed that all these reports are calumnious, and that her feet and teeth are equally harmless with those of any other little mouse. Our ancestors however looked on her with such terror, that they are supposed to have given her name to a scolding woman, whom for her venom they call a shrew.
To SHRIEK. v. n. [schrieger, Danish; sericciare, Italian.] To cry out inarticulately with anguish or horror; to scream.
On top whereof ay dwelt the ghastly owl,
Shrieking his baleful note. Fa. Queen.
It was the owl that shriek'd, the fatal belman
Which gives the sternest good-night.
Were I the ghost that walk'd,
I'd shriek, that even your ears should rift to hear me. Shak.
In a dreadful dream
I saw my lord to near destruction,
Then shriek'd myself awake. Denham.
Hark! Peace!
At this the shriek'd aloud; the mournful train Echo'd her grief. Dryden's Knight's Tale.
Why did you shriek out?
Shriek. n. f. [serieg, Danish; sericciare, Italian.] An inarticulate cry of anguish or horror.
Una hearing evermore
His rueful shrieks and groanings, often tore
Her guiltless garments, and her golden hair,
For pity of his pain. Fa. Queen.
Time has been my senses would have cool'd,
To hear a night shriek, and my fell of hair
Would at a dismal treatise rouse and stir
As life were in't. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
The corps of Almon, and the rest are shown,
Shrieks, clamours, murmurs, fill the frighted town. Dryd.
SHRIFT. n. f. [schift, Saxon.] Confession made to a priest.
A word out of use.
Off with
Bernardine's head: I will give a present shrift,
And will advise him for a better place. Shakespeare.
My lord shall never rest;
I'll watch him tame, and talk him out:
His bed shall seem a school, his board a shrift. Shakespeare.
The duke's commands were absolute,
Therefore my lord, address you to your shrift,
And be yourself; for you must die this instant. Rome.
SHRIGHT, for shrieked. Spenser.
SHRILL. [A word supposed to be made per onomatopoeiam, in imitation of the thing expressed, which indeed it images very happily.] Sounding with a piercing, tremulous, or vibratory sound.
Thy hounds shall make the welkin answer them,
And fetch shrill echoes from the hollow earth. Shakespeare.
I have heard
The cock that is the trumpet to the morn,
Doth with his lofty and shrill founding throat
Awake the god of day. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
Have I fall'n,
From the dread summit of this chalky bourn!
Look up a height, the shrill gorg'd lark so far Cannot be seen or heard. Shakespeare's K. Lear.
Upsprings the lark,
Shrill voice'd and loud, the messenger of morn. Thomson.
To SHRILL. v. n. [from the adjective.] To pierce the ear with sharp and quick vibrations of sound.
The fun of all the world is dim and dark;
O heavy herse,
Break we our pipes that shrill'd as loud as larks,
O careful verie. Spenser.
Hark how the minstrels 'gin to shrill aloud
Their merry music that rebounds from far,
The pipe, the tabor, and the trembling crowd
That well agree withouten breach or jar.
A shrilling trumpet founded from on high,
And unto battle bade themselves address. Shakespeare.
Here, no clarion's shrilling note
The mule's green retreat can pierce;
The grove, from noisy camps remote,
Is only vocal with my verse. Fenton's Ode to Lord Gower.
The females round,
Maids, wives, and matrons mix a shrilling found. Pope.
SHRILLY. adv. [from shrill.] With a shrill noise.
SHRILLNESS. n. f. [from shrill.] The quality of being shrill.

SHRIMP. n. f. [schrimp, a wrinkle, German; serympe, Danish.]
1. A small crustaceous vermiculated fish.
Of shell-fish there are wrinkles, shrumps, crabs. Carew.
Hawks and gulls can at a great height see mice on the earth, and shrumps in the waters. Darham.
2. A little wrinkled man; a dwarf. In contempt.
It cannot be, this weak and writhled shrimp
Should strike such terror in his enemies. Shakespeare.
He hath found,
Within the ground,
At last, no shrimp,
Whereon to imp
His jolly club. Ben. Jonson.
SHRINE. n. f. [rcin, Saxon; serinium, Latin.] A case in which something sacred is deposited.
You living powers enclos'd in stately shrine
Of growing trees; you rural gods that wield
Your feepters here, if to your cars divine
A voice may come, which troubled foul doth yield, Sidney.
All the world come
To kiss this shrine, this mortal breathing faint. Shakespeare.
Come offer at my shrine and I will help thee. Shakespeare.
They often plac'd
Within his sanctu'ry itself their shrines,
Abominations! and with cursed things
His holy rites profan'd. Milton.
Falling on his knees before her shrine,
He thus implor'd her pow'r. Dryden.
Lovers are in rapture at the name of their fair idol; they have out all their incense upon that shrine, and cannot bear the thought of admitting a blemish therein. Watts.
To SHRINK. v. n. pretitive, I shrink, or shrank; participle, shrank. [scincan, Saxon.]
1. To contract itself into less room; to shrivel; to be drawn together by some internal power.
But to be still hot summer's tanlings, and
The shrinking slaves of winter. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.
I am a scribbled form, drawn with a pen
Upon a parchment, and against this fire
Do I shrink up. Shakespeare's K. John.
I have not found that water, by mixture of ashes, will shrink or draw into less room. Bacon's Nat. History.
Ill-weav'd ambition how much art thou shrank!
When that this body did contain a spirit,
A kingdom for it was too small a bound;
But now two paces of the vilest earth
Is room enough. Shakespeare.
2. To withdraw as from danger.
The noise encreases,
She comes, and feeble nature now I find
Shrinks back in danger, and forsakes my mind. Dryden.
Am I become so monstrous, so disfigur'd,
That nature stands aghast;
And the fair light which gilds this new made orb,
Shorn of his beams, shrinks in. Dryden.
Love is a plant of the most tender kind,
That shrinks and shakes with ev'ry ruffling wind. Grav.
All fibres have a contractile power, whereby they shorten; as appears if a fibre be cut transversely, the ends shrink, and make the wound gape. Arbutnot.

Each shudd'ring owns the genius of the schools. Daniel.
- TO SHUFFLE. v. a. [syppeling, Saxon, a tumble.]
1. To throw into disorder; to agitate tumultuously, so as that one thing takes the place of another; to confuse; to throw together tumultuously.
When the heavens shuffle all in one,
The torrid, with the frozen zone,
Then, sybil, thou and I will greet. Cleveland.
From a new shuffling and disposition of the component particles of a body, might not nature compose a body dissoluble in water. Boyle.
In most things good and evil lie shuffled, and thrust up together in a confused heap; and it is study which must draw them forth and range them. South's Sermon.
When lots are shuffled together in a lap or pitcher, what reason can a man have to presume, that he shall draw a white stone rather than a black. South's Sermon.
A glimpse of moonshine sheath'd with red,
A shuffle-d, fullen and uncertain light Dryden.
That dances thro' the clouds and shuts again.
Children should not lose the consideration of human nature in the shufflings of outward conditions. The more they have, the better humoured they should be taught to be. Locke.
We shall in vain, shuffling the little money we have from one another's hands, endeavour to prevent our wants; decay of trade will quickly waste all the remainder. Locke.
These vapours soon, miraculous event,
Shuffl'd by chance, and mix'd by accident. Blackmore.
Shuffl'd and entangl'd in their race,
They clasp each other. Blackmore.
He has shuffled the two ends of the sentence together, and by taking out the middle, makes it speak just as he would have it. Atterbury.
'Tis in no wise strange that such a one should believe, that things were blindly shuffled and hurled about in the world;
that the elements were at constant strife with each other. Wood.

If any thing hits, we take it to ourselves; if it miscarries, we shuffle it off to our neighbours. L'Estrange.
It was contrived by your enemies, and shuffled into the papers that were seiz'd. Dryden.
If, when a child is questioned for any thing, he persists to shuffle it off with a falsehood, he must be chastised. Locke.
3. To shake; to divert.
In that sleep of death, what dreams may come,
When we have shuffled off this mortal coil,
Must give us pause. Shakspeare.
To change the position of cards with respect to each other.
The motions of shuffling of cards or casting of dice, are very light. Bacon.
We sure in vain the cards condemn,
Ourselves both cut and shuffl'd them. Prior.
5. To form tumultuously, or fraudulently.
They sent forth their precepts to convert them before a court of commission, and there us'd to shuffle up a summary proceeding by examination, without trial or jury. Bacon.
He shuffled up a peace with the cedar, in which the Bunelians were excluded. Howell.
- TO SHUFFLE. v. n.
1. To throw the cards into a new order.
A sharper both shuffles and cuts. L'Estrange.
Cards we play
A round or two, when us'd, we throw away,
Take a fresh pack, nor is it worth our grieving
Who cuts or shuffles with our dirty leaving. Graunt.
2. To play mean tricks; to practise fraud; to evade fair questions.
I myself, leaving the fear of heaven on the left hand, and hiding mine honour in my necessity, am fain to shuffle. Shelk.

'Tis like the forc'd gait of a shuffling nag. Shakspeare.
- SHUFFLE. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. The act of disordering things, or making them take confusedly the place of each other.
Is it not a firmer foundation for contentment, to believe that all things were at first created, and are continually dispo-s'd for the best, than that the whole universe is more bungling, nothing effect'd for any purpose, but all ill-favour'dly cobled and jumbled together, by the unguided agitation and rude shuffle of matter. Bentley's Sermons.
2. A trick; an artifice.
'The gifts of nature are beyond all shams and shuffles. L'Estr.
SHUFFLECAP. n. f. [shuffle and cap.] A play at which money is shaken in a hat.
He lost his money at chuck farthing, shufflecap, and all fours. Arbutnot's Hist. of John Bull.
- SHUFFLER. n. f. [from shuffle.] He who plays tricks or shuffles.
SHUFFLINGLY. adv. [from shuffle.] With an irregular gait.
I may go shufflingly, for I was never before walked in trammels; yet I shall drudge and moil at constancy, 'till I have worn off the hitching in my pace. Dryden.
- TO SHUN. v. a. [arcuman, Saxon.] To avoid; to decline; to endeavour to escape; to eschew.
Consider death in itself, and nature teacheth Christ to shun
it. Hooker.
The lark I shuns on lofty boughs to build,
Her humble nest lies silent in the field. Waller.
Birds and beasts can fly their foe:
So chancieless, who never saw a fox,
Yet shun'd him as a sailor shuns the rocks. Dryden.
Cato will train thee up to great
And virtuous deeds: do but observe him well,
'Thou'lt shun misfortunes, or thou'lt learn to bear them. Addison.

SHU

- SHUNLESS. adj. [from shun.] Inevitable; unavoidable.
Alone he enter'd
The mortal gate of the city, which he painted With shun's destiny. Shakspeare's Coriolanus.
- TO SHUT. v. a. preterite, I shut; part. passive, shut. [scitcan, Saxon; schutten, Dutch.]
1. To close so as to prohibit ingress or regress; to make not open.
Kings shall shut their mouths at him. Isaiah lii. 15.
To a strong tower fled all the men and women, and shut
it to them, and gat them up to the top. Judges ix. 51.
We see more exquisitely with one eye shut than with both open; for that the spirits visual unite more, and become stronger. Bacon's Natural History.
She open'd, but to shut
Excell'd her pow'r; the gates wide open stood. Milton.
2. To inclose; to confine.
Before faith came, we were kept under the law, shut up unto the faith, which should afterwards be revealed. Gal. iii.
They went in male and female of all flesh; and the Lord
shut him in. Gen. vii. 16.
3. To prohibit; to bar.
Shall that be shut to man, which to the beast
Is open? Milton.
4. To exclude.

He in his walls confin'd,
Shut out the woes which he too well divin'd. Dryden's En.
Sometimes the mind fixes itself with so much earnestness on the contemplation of some objects, that it shuts out all other thoughts. Locke.
7. To SHUT up. To close; to confine. Up is sometimes little more than emphatical.
Thou hast known my soul in adversities; and not shut me up into the hand of the enemy. Psalms xxxi. 8.
Woe unto you scribes; for you shut up the kingdom of heaven against men. Matth. xxiii. 13.
Dangerous rocks shut up the passage. Raleigh.
What barbarous customs!
Shut up a desert shore to drowning men,
And drive us to the cruel seas. Dryden's Eneid.
A loss at sea, a fit of sickness, are trifles, when we consider whole families put to the sword, wretches shut up in dungeons. Addison's Spectator.
His mother shut up half the rooms in the house, in which her husband or son had died. Addison.
Lucullus, with a great fleet, shut up Mithridates in Pitany. Arbutnot on Caim.
8. To SHUT up. To conclude;
The king's a-bed,
He is shut up in measureless content. Shakspeare's Macbeth.
Altho' he was patiently heard as he delivered his embassy;
yet, in the shutting up of ail, he received no more but an info-lent answer. Kauller's History of the Turks.
To leave you blest, I would be more accurst,
Than death can make me; for death ends our woes,
And the kind grave shuts up the mournful scene. Dryden.
When the scene of life is shut up, the slave will be above his master, if he has acted better. Collier of Envy.
- TO SHUT. v. n. To be closed; to close itself.
SHUT. Participial adjective. Rid; clear; free.
We must not pray in one breath to find a thief, and in the next to get shut of him. L'Estrange.
- SHUT. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. Close; act of shutting.
I fought him round his palace, made enquiry
Of all the slaves: but had for answer,
'That since the shut of evening none had seen him: Dryden.
2. Small door or cover.
The wind-gun is charged by the forcible compression of air, the imprisoned air serving, by the help of little falls or shuts within, to stop the vents by which it was admitted. Wilk.
In a very dark chamber, at a round hole, about one third part of an inch broad, made in the shut of a window, I placed a glass prism. Newton's Opticks.
There were no shuts or stopples made for the animal's ears, that any loud noise might awaken it. Ray's Creation.

Despair

Tended the sick, buſtled from couch to couch: Milton.
 A ſpark of the man-killing trade

Fell sick. Dryden's Pers.
 Nothing makes a more ridiculous figure in a man's life, than the disparity we often find in him sick and well. Pope.

2. Diſordered in the organs of digeſtion; ill in the ſtomach.

3. Corrupted.

What we oft do beſt,
 By sick interpreters, or weak ones, is
 Not ours, or not allow'd: what worſt, as oft Hitting a groſſer quality, is cried up For our beſt act. Shakeſp. Henry VIII.

4. Diſguiſed.

I do not, as an enemy to peace,
 Troop in the throngs of military men;
 But rather ſhew a-while like fearful war,
 To diet rank minds ſick of happineſs,
 And purge th' obſtructions, which begin to ſtop
 Our very veins of life. Shakeſpear.
 He was not fo sick of his maſter as of his work. L'Eſtrange.
 Why will you break the ſabbath of my days,
 Now ſick alike of envy and of praiſe? Pope.

To SICK. v. n. [from the noun.] To ſicken; to take a diſeaſe. Not in uſe.

A little time before
 Our great grandfire Edward ſick'd and died. Shakeſp. H. IV.

To SICKEN. v. a. [from ſick.]

1. To make ſick; to diſeaſe.

Why ſhould one earth, one clime, one ſtream, one breath,
 Raiſe this to ſtrength, and ſicken that to death? Prior.

2. To weaken; to impair.

Kinſmen of mine have
 By this ſo ſicken'd their eſtates, that never They ſhall abound as formerly. Shak. Henry VIII.

To SICKEN. v. n.

1. To grow ſick; to fall into diſeaſe.

I know the more one ſickens, the worſe he is. Shakeſpear.
 The judges that ſat upon the jail, and thoſe that attended, ſicken'd upon it, and died. Bacon.

Meerly to drive away the time, he ſicken'd,
 Fainted, and died; nor would with ale be quicken'd. Mil.

2. To be fatigued; to be filled to diſguiſt.

Though the treaſure
 Of nature's germins tumble all together,
 Even 'till deſtruction ſicken, anſwer me
 To what I aſk you. Shakeſp. Macbeth.

3. To be diſguiſed, or diſordered with abhorrence.

The ghoſts repine at violated night,
 And curſe th' invading fun, and ſicken at the ſight. Dryden.

4. To grow weak; to decay; to languish.

Ply'd thick and cloſe, as when the ſight begun,
 Their huge unwieldy navy waſtes away:
 So ſicken waining moons too near the fun,
 And blunt their creſcents on the edge of day. Dryden.
 Abſtract what others feel, what others think;
 All pleaſures ſicken, and all glories ſink. Pope.

SICKEN. adj. [ſicer, Welſh; ſiker, Dutch.] Sure; certain; firm.

Being ſome honeſt curate, or ſome vicar,
 Content with little, in condition ſicker. Hubbard's Tale.

SICKEN. adv. Surely; certainly.

Sicker thou'ſt but a lazy loord,
 And rekes much of thy fwiſk,
 That with fond forms and wileſs words,
 To bleer mine eyes do'ſt think. Spencer.

SICKLE. n. f. [ſicel, Saxon; ſickel, Dutch, from ſealo, or ſcula, Latin.] The hook with which corn is cut; a reaping hook.

God's harveſt is even ready for the ſickle, and all the fields yellow long ago. Spencer on Ireland.

Time ſhould never,
 In life or death, their fortunes fever;
 But with their ruſty ſickle mow
 Both down together at a blow. Hudibras.

When corn has once felt the ſickle, it has no more benefit from the ſunſhine. South's Sermons.

O'er whom time gently ſhakes his wings of down,
 'Till with his ſilent ſickle they are mown. Dryden.

SICKLEMAN. } n. f. [from ſickle.] A reaper.

SICKLER. }

You ſunburnt ſickleman, of Auguſt weary,
 Come hither from the furrow, and be merry. Shakeſpear.

Their ſicklers reap the corn another ſows. Sandys.

SICKLINESS. n. f. [from ſickly.] Diſpoſition to ſickneſs; habitual diſeaſe.

Impute
 His words to wayward ſicklineſs and age. Shakeſp. R. II.

Men he always took to be
His friends, and dogs his enemy ;
Who never so much hurt had done him ;
As his own side did falling on him. Hudibras.

In the serious part of poetry the advantage is wholly on Chaucer's side. Dryden.

That person, who fills their chair, has justly gained the esteem of all sides by the impartiality of his behaviour. Addison.

Let not our James, though foil'd in arms, despair,
Whilst on his side he reckons fall the fair. Tickell.

Some valuing those of their own side, or mind,
Still make themselves the measure of mankind :
Fondly we think we honour merit then,
When we but praise ourselves in other men. Pope.

He from the taite obscene reclaims our youth,
And sets the passions on the side of truth ;
Forms the soft bosom with the gentle art,
And pours each human virtue in the heart. Pope.

Any place placed in contradistinction or opposition to another.
It is used of persons, or propositions respecting each other.

There began a sharp and cruel fight, many being slain and wounded on both sides. Knolles's Hist. of the Turks.

The plague is not easily received by such as continually are about them that have it : on the other side, the plague taketh soonest hold of those that come out of a fresh air. Bacon.

I am too well satisfied of my own weakness to be pleased with any thing I have written ; but, on the other side, my reason tells me, that what I have long considered may be as just as what an ordinary judge will condemn. Dryden.

My secret wishes would my choice decide ;
But open justice tends to neither side. Dryden.

It is granted on both sides, that the fear of a Deity doth universally possess the minds of men. Tillotson's Sermons.

Two nations fill pursuit
Peculiar ends, on each side resolute
To fly conjunction. Philips.

SIDE. Adj. [from the noun.] Lateral ; oblique ; not direct ;
being on either side.

They presume that the law doth speak with all indifferency, that the law hath no side respect to their persons. Hobbes.

Take of the blood, and strike it on the two sides posts, and on the upper door post of the houfes. Ex. xii. 7.

People are sooner reclaimed by the side wind of a surprize, than by downright admonition. L'Estrange.

One mighty quadron with a side wind sped. Dryden.

The parts of water, being easily separable from each other, will, by a side motion, be easily removed, and give way to the approach of two pieces of marble. Locke.

What natural agent could turn them aside, could impel them so strongly with a transverse side blow against that tremendous weight and rapidity, when whole worlds are a falling. Bentley's Sermons.

He not only gives us the full prospects, but several unexpected peculiarities, and side views, unobserved by any painter but Homer. Pope's Preface to the Iliad.

My secret enemies could not forbear some expressions, which by a side wind reflected on me. Swift.

TO SIDE. v. n. [from the noun.] To take a party ; to engage in a faction.

Vex'd are the nobles who have sided
In his behalf. Shaksf. Coriolanus.

All rising to great place is by a winding stair ; and if there be factions, it is good to side a man's self whilst rising, and balance himself when plac'd. Bacon.

As soon as discontents drove men into sidings, as ill humours fall to the disaffected part, which causes inflammations, so did all who affected novelties adhere to that side. King Charles.

Terms rightly conceived, and notions duly fitted to them, require a brain free from all inclination to siding, or affection to opinions for the authors fakes, where they be well understood. Digby on Bodies.

Not yet so dully desperate
To side against ourselves with fate ;
As criminals, condemn'd to suffer,
Are blinded first, and then turn'd o'v'r. Hudibras.

The princes side and divide ;
Some follow law, and some with beauty side. Granville.

It is pleasant to fee a verse of an old poet revelling from its original sense, and siding with a modern subject. Addison.

All side in parties, and begin th' attack. Pope.

Those who pretended to be in with the principles upon which her majesty proceeded, either absented themselves where the whole cause depended, or sided with the enemy. Swift.

The equitable part of those who now side against the court, will probably be more temperate. Swift.

SIDEBORD. n. f. [side and board.] The side table on which conveniences are placed for those that eat at the other table.

At a lately sideboard by the wine
That fragrant smell diffus'd. Milt. Paradise Regain'd.

No sideboards then with gilded plate were dress'd,
No sweating slaves with massive dishes press'd. Dryden.

Arbutnot.
SIDERON. n. f. [side and box.] Seat for the ladies on the side of the theatre.
Why round our coaches crowd the white-glov'd beauts?
Why bows the sidebox from its inmost rows?
SIDERLY. n. f. An insect.
From a rough whitish maggot, in the intestine rectum of horses, the sidely proceeds.
To SIDLY. v. n. [from side.] To go with the body the narrowest way.
The chaffering with dissenters is but like opening a few wickets, and leaving them no more than one can get in at a time, and that not without flopping and sidling, and squeezing his body.
I passed very gently and sidling through the two principal streets.
A fellow nailed up maps in a gentleman's closet, some sidling, and others upside down, the better to adjust them to the pannels.
SIDELONG. adj. [side and long.] Lateral; oblique; not in front; not direct.
She darted from her eyes a sidelong glance,
Just as she spoke, and, like her words, it flew;
Seem'd not to beg what she then bid me do.
The deadly wound is in thy soul:
When thou a tempting harlot do'st behold,
And when the casts on thee a sidelong glance,
Then try thy heart, and tell me if it dance?
The reason of the planets motions in curve lines is the attraction of the sun, and an oblique or sidelong impulse.
The kids snatch'd hasty from the sidelong maid.
SIDELONG. adv.
1. Laterally; obliquely; not in pursuit; not in opposition.
As if on earth
Winds under ground, or waters, forcing way,
Sidelong had push'd a mountain from his seat,
Half sunk with all his pines.
As a lion, bounding in his way,
With force augmented bears against his prey,
Sidelong to seize.
2. On the side.
If it prove too wet, lay your pots sidelong; but shade those which blow from the afternoon sun.
SIDER. n. f. See CIDER.
SIDERAL. adj. [from sidus, Latin.] Starry; astral.
These changes in the heav'ns, though slow, produc'd
Like change on sea, and land; sidereal blast,
Vapour and mist, and exhalation hot,
Corrupt and pestilent!
Sure hopes of racy wine, and in its youth,
Its tender nonage, loads the spreading boughs
With large and juicy offsprings, that defies
The vernal nippings and cold sidereal blasts.
SIDERATED. adj. [from sideratus, Latin.] Blasted; planet struck.
Parts cauterized, gangrenated, siderated, and mortified, become black; the radical moisture, or vital sulphur, suffering an extinction.
SIDERATION. n. f. [sideration, French; sideratio, Latin.]
A sudden mortification, or, as the common people call it, a blast; or a sudden deprivation of sense, as in an apoplexy.
The contagious vapour of the very eggs produce a mortification or sideration in the parts of plants on which they are laid.
SIDESADDLE. n. f. [side and saddle.] A woman's seat on horseback.
SIDESMAN. n. f. [side and man.] An assistant to the church-warden.
A gift of such goods, made by them with the consent of the sidemen or vestry, is void.
SIDWAYS. } adv. [from side and way, or wise.] Laterally;
SIDWISE. } on one side.
The fair blossom hangs the head of the rays, or other casual inequality of the refraction *side-

Stegē. n. f. [siège, French.]
1. The act of besetting a fortified place; a leaguer.
Our cattle's strength
Will laugh a siège to scorn: here let them lie,
Till famine eat them up.
It seem'd, by the manner of their proceeding, that the Turks purposed rather by long siège than by assault to take the town.
The more I see pleasures about me, so much more I feel Torment within me, as from the hateful siège
Of contraries.
2. Any continued endeavour to gain possession.
Beat away the busy meddling fiend,
That lays strong siège unto this wretch's soul,
And from his bosom purge this black despair.
Give me so much of your time, in exchange of it, as to lay an amiable siège to the honesty of Ford's wife.
Love flood the siège, and would not yield his breast.
3. [Siège, French.] Seat; throne.
Drawing to him the eyes of all around,
From lofty siège began these words aloud to found.
4. Place; class; rank.
I fetch my life and being
From men of royal siège.
Your sum of parts
Did not together pluck such envy from him,
As did that one, and that in my regard
Of the unworthiest siège.
5. [Siège, French.] Stool.
It entereth not the veins, but taketh leave of the permeant parts, as the mouths of the meftricks, and accompanieth the inconvertible portion unto the siège.
To SIEGE. v. a. [siège, Fr. from the noun.] To besiege. A word not now in use.
Him he had long oppress'd with tort,
And fast imprison'd in sieged fort.
SIEVE. n. f. [from sift.] Hair or lawn strain'd upon a hoop, by which flower is separated from bran, or fine powder from coarse; a boulder; a scarce.
Thy counsel
Falls now into my ears as profuseless
As water in a sieve.
In a sieve I'll thither sail,
And like a rat without a tail,
I'll do—I'll do—I'll do.
An innocent found a sieve, and presently fell to flopping the holes.
If life sunk through you like a leaky sieve,
Accuse yourself you liv'd not while you might.
To SIFT. v. a. [sipian, Saxon; siften, Dutch.]
1. To separate by a sieve.
In the sifting of such favour all that came out could not be expected to be pure meal, but must have a mixture of pader and bran.
2. To separate; to part.
When yellow sands are sifted from below,
The glittering billows give a golden show.
3. To examine; to try.
We have sifted your objections against those pre-eminences royal.
All which the wit of Calvin could from thence draw, by sifting the very utmost sentence and syllable, is no more than that certain speeches seem to intimate, that all Christian churches ought to have their elderships.
I fear me, if thy thoughts were sifted,
The king thy sovereign is not quite exempt
From envious malice of thy swelling heart.
As near as I could sift him on that argument.
Opportunity I here have had
To try thee, sift thee, and confels have found thee
Proof against all temptation as a rock
Of adamant.
One would think, that every member who embraces with vehemence the principles of either of these parties, had thoroughly sifted and examined them, and was secretly convinced of their preference to those he rejects.
SIFTER. n. f. [from sift.] He who sifts.
SIG was used by the Saxons for victory: Stegert, famous for victory; Stegward, victorious preserver; Sigard, conquering temper; and almost in the same sense are Nicodes, Nicomys, chus, Nicander, Victor, Victorinus, Vincencius, &c.
To SIGH. v. n. [sican, sicetan, Saxon; sichien, Dutch.]
To emit the breath audibly, as in grief.
I lov'd the maid I married; never man
Sigh'd truer breath.
I'll not be made a soft and dull-eyed fool,
To shake the head, relent, and sigh, and yield
To Christian intercessors.
He sighed deeply in his spirit, and faith, why doth this generation seek after a sign?
For the oppression of the poor, for the sighing of the needy will I arise.

Happier he,

Than such as once on slipp'ry thrones were plac'd,
And chafing, sigh to think themselves are chas'd.
The nymph too long to be alone;
Leaves all the swains, and sighs for one.
Thus sighed he away the melancholy night.
To SIGH. v. a. To lament; to mourn. Not in use.
Ages to come, and men unborn,
Shall bless her name, and sigh her fate.
SIGH. n. f. [from the verb.] A violent and audible emission of the breath which has been long retained, as in sadness.
Full often has my heart swoll with keeping my sighs imprisoned; full often have the tears I drove back from mine eyes, turned back to drown my heart.
Love is a smoke rais'd with the fume of sighs;
Being purg'd, a fire sparkling in lovers eyes.
What a sigh is there! The heart is forely charg'd.
Laughing, if loud, ends in a deep sigh; and all pleasures have a sting in the tail, though they carry beauty on the face.
In Venus' temple, on the sides were seen
Issuing sighs, that smok'd along the wall.
SIGHT. n. f. [zēpēde, Saxon; sicht, gesicht, Dutch.]
1. Perception by the eye; the sense of seeing.
If bees go forth right to a place, they must needs have sight.
O loss of sight, of thee I most complain!
Blind among enemies, O worse than chains,
Dungeon or beggary, decrepit age!
Things invisible to mortal sight.
'Tis still the same, although their airy shape
All but a quick poetick sight escape.
My eyes are somewhat dimly grown;
For nature, always in the right,
To your decays adapts my sight.
2. Open view; a situation in which nothing obstructs the eye.
Undaunted Hotspur
Brings on his army, eager unto fight,
And plac'd the same before the king in sight.
Æneas cast his wondering eyes around,
And all the Tyrrhene army had in sight.
Stretch'd on the spacious plain from left to right.
I met Brutus in a mortal fight;
He's dipt for certain, and plays least in sight.
3. Act of seeing or beholding.
Nine things to sight required are;
The pow'r to see, the light, the visible thing,
Being not too small, too thin, too high, too far,
Clear space and time, the form distinct to bring.
Mine eye purf'd him still, but under shade
Lost sight of him.
What form of death could him affright,
Who unconcern'd, with steadfast sight,
Could view the furies mounting steep,
And monsters rolling in the deep!
Having little knowledge of the circumstances of those St.
Paul writ to, it is not strange that many things lie concealed to us, which they who were concerned in the letter understood at first sight.
4. Notice; knowledge.
It was writ as a private letter to a person of piety, upon an assurance that it should never come to any one's sight but her own.
5. Eye; instrument of seeing.
From the depth of hell they lift their sight,
And at a distance see superior light.
6. Aperture perview to the eye, or other point fixed to guide the eye: as, the sights of a quadrant.
Their armed staves in charge, their beavers down,
Their eyes of fire sparkling through sights of steel.
7. Spectacle; show; thing wonderful to be seen.
Thus are my eyes still captive to one sight;
Thus all my thoughts are slaves to one thought still.
Them seem'd they never saw a sight so fair
Of fowls so lovely, that they fure did deem Them heavenly born.
Not an eye
But is a-weary of thy common sight,
Save mine, which hath desir'd to see thee more.
Moses said, I will turn aside and see this great sight, why the bush is not burnt.
I took a felucca at Naples to carry me to Rome, that I might not run over the same sights a second time.
Not proud Olympus yields a nobler sight,
Though gods assembled grace his tow'ring height,
Than what more humble mountains offer here,
Where, in their blessings, all those gods appear.
Before you pass th' imaginary sights
Of lords and earls, and dukes and garter'd knights,
While the spread fan o'er shades your closing eyes,
Then give one sight, and all the vision flies.

SIGHTED. adj. [from sight.] Seeing in a particular manner;
It is used only in composition, as quick-sighted, short-sighted.
As they might, to avoid the weather, pull the joints of the coach up close, so they might put each end down, and remain as discovered and open sighted as on horseback.
The king was very quick sighted in discerning difficulties, and raising objections, and very slow in mastering them.
SIGHTFULNESS. n. f. [from sight and full.] Perspicuity; clearness of sight. Not in use.
But still, although we fail of perfect rightfulness,
Seek we to tame these childish superfluities;
Let us not wink, though void of purest sightfulness.
SIGHTLESS. adj. [from sight.]
1. Wanting sight; blind.
The latent tracts, the giddy heights explore,
Of all who blindly creep, or sightless soar.
2. Not sightly; offensive to the eye; unpleasing to look at.
Full of unpleasing blots and sightless stains,
Patch'd with foul moles, and eye-offending marks.
SIGHTLY. adj. [from sight.] Pleasing to the eye; striking to the view.
It lies as sightly on the back of him,
As great Alcides shews upon an ass.
Their having two eyes and two ears so placed, is more
sightly and useful.
A great many brave sightly horses were brought out, and only one plain nag that made sport.
We have thirty members, the most sightly of all her majesty's subjects: we elected a president by his height.
SIGHT. n. f. [sigillum, Latin.] Seal.
Sorceries to raise th' infernal pow'rs,
And sights fram'd in planetary hours.
SIGN. n. f. [signe, French; signum, Latin.]
1. A token of any thing; that by which any thing is shown.
Signs must resemble the things they signify.
Signs for communication may be contrived from any variety of objects of one kind appertaining to either sense.
To express the passions which are seated in the heart by outward signs, is one great precept of the painters, and very difficult to perform.
When any one uses any term, he may have in his mind a determined idea which he makes it the sign of, and to which he should keep it steadily annexed.
2. A wonder; a miracle.
If they will not hearken to the voice of the first sign, they will not believe the latter sign.
Cover thy face that thou see not; for I have set thee for a sign unto Israel.
Compell'd by signs and judgments dire.
3. A picture hung at a door, to give notice what is sold within.
I found my mis, struck hands, and pray'd him tell,
To hold acquaintance still, where he did dwell;
He barely nam'd the street, promis'd the wine;
But his kind wife gave me the very sign.
Underneath an alehouse' paltry sign.
True sorrow's like to wine,
That which is good does never need a sign.
Wit and fancy are not employed in any one article so much as that of contriving signs to hang over houses.
4. A monument; a memorial.
The fire devoured two hundred and fifty men, and they became a sign.
5. A constellation in the zodiac.
There stay until the twelve celestial signs
Have brought about their annual reckoning.
Now did the sign reign, and the constellation was come,
under which Perkin should appear.
After ev'ry foe subdu'd, the sun
Thrice through the signs his annual race shall run.
6. Note of resemblance.
7. Ensign.
The ensign of Messiah blaz'd,
Aloft by angels borne, his sign in heaven.
8. Typical representation; symbol.
The holy symbols or signs are not barely significative; but what they represent is as certainly delivered to us as the symbols themselves.
9. A subscription of one's name: as, a sign manual.
To SIGN. v. a. [signo, Latin.]
1. To mark.
You sign your place and calling in full seeming
With meekness and humility; but your heart
Is cramm'd with arrogance.
2. [Signer, French.] To ratify by hand or seal.
Be pleas'd to sign these papers: they are all
Of great concern!
3. To betoken; to signify; to represent typically.
The sacraments and symbols are just such as they seem;
but because they are made to be signs of a secret mystery, they receive the names of what themselves do sign.
SIGNAL. n. f. [signal, French; señale, Spanish.] Notice given by a sign; a sign that gives notice.

SIG

- The weary sun hath made a golden set,
And, by the bright track of his fiery car,
Gives signal of a goodly day to-morrow. Shakesp. R. III.
Scarce the dawning day began to spring,
As at a signal giv'n, the streets with clamours ring. Dryden.
SIGNAL. adj. [from signal, French.] Eminent; memorable; remarkable.
He was esteemed more by the parliament, for the signal acts of cruelty committed upon the Irish. Clarendon.
The Thames frozen twice in one year, so as men to walk on it, is a very signal accident. Swift.
SIGNALITY. n. f. [from signal.] Quality of something remarkable or memorable.
Of the ways whereby they enquired and determined its signal-ity, the first was natural, arising from physical causes. Brown.
It seems a signal in providence, in erecting your society in such a juncture of dangerous humours. Glauco. Scis. Pref.
To SIGNALIZE. v. a. [from signal, French.] To make eminent;
to make remarkable.
Many, who have endeavoured to signalize themselves by works of this nature, plainly discover that they are not acquainted with the most common systems of arts and sciences.
Addison's Spectator.
Some one eminent spirit, having signalized his valour and fortune in defence of his country, or by the practice of popular arts at home, becomes to have great influence on the people. Swift.
SIGNALLY. adv. [from signal.] Eminently; remarkably;
memorably.
Persons signally and eminently obliged, yet missing of the utmost of their greedy designs in swallowing both gifts and giver too, instead of thanks for received kindnesses, have betook themselves to barbarous threatnings. South's Sermons.
SIGNATION. n. f. [from signum, Latin.] Sign given; act of betokening.
A horsehoe Baptista Porta hath thought too low a signa-tion, he raised unto a lunar representation. Brown.
SIGNATURE. n. f. [from signature, Fr. signatura, from signum, Lat.]
A sign or mark impressed upon any thing; a stamp; a mark.
The brain being well furnished with various traces, signatures, and images, will have a rich treasure always ready to be offered to the soul. Watts.
That natural and indelible signature of God, which human souls, in their first origin, are supposed to be stamped with,
we have no need of in disputes against atheism. Bentley.
Vulgar parents cannot stamp their race
With signatures of such majestic grace. Pope's Odyssey.
A mark upon any matter, particularly upon plants, by which their nature or medicinal use is pointed out.
All bodies work by the communication of their nature, or by the impression and signatures of their motions: the diffusion of species visible, seemeth to participate more of the former,
and the species audible of the latter. Bacon's Nat. History.
Some plants bear a very evident signature of their nature and use. More against Atheism.
Seek out for plants, and signatures,
To quack of universal cures. Hudibras.
Herbs are described by marks and signatures, so far as to distinguish them from one another. Baker on Learning.
3. Proof; evidence.
The most despicable pieces of decayed nature are curiously wrought with eminent signatures of divine wisdom. Glauco.
Some rely on certain marks and signatures of their election, and others on their belonging to some particular church or sect. Rogers's Sermons.
4. [Among printers.] Some letter or figure to distinguish different sheets.
SIGNATURIST. n. f. [from signature.] One who holds the doctrine of signatures.
Signaturists seldom omit what the ancients delivered, drawing into inference received distinctions. Brown.
SIGNET. n. f. [from signet, French.] A seal commonly used for the seal-manual of a king.
I've been bold,
For that I knew it the most gen'ral way,
To them to use your signet and your name. Shakesp. Timon.
Here is the hand and seal of the duke: you know the character, I doubt not, and the signet. Shakesp. Meas. for Meas.
Give thy signet, bracelets, and staff. Gen. xxxviii. 18.
He delivered him his private signet. Knolles.
He knew my pleasure to discharge his hands:
Proof of my life my royal signet made,
Yet still he arm'd. Dryden's Aurengzebe.
The impression of a signet ring.
Ayliffe's Parergon.
SIGNIFICANCE. n. f. [from signify.]
SIGNIFICANCY. n. f. [from signify.]
1. Power of signifying; meaning.
Speaking is a sensible expression of the notions of the mind by discriminations of utterance of voice, used as signs, having by consent several determinate significances. Holder.
If he declares he intends it for the honour of another, he takes away by his words the significance of his action. Stillingsf.

SIG

2. Force; energy; power of impressing the mind.
The clearness of conception and expression, the boldness maintained to majesty, the significance and sound of words, not strained into bombast, must escape our transient view upon the theatre. Dryden.
As far as this duty will admit of privacy, our Saviour hath enjoined it in terms of particular significance and force. Atterb.
I have been admiring the wonderful significance of that word perfection, and what various interpretations it hath acquired. Swift.
3. Importance; moment; consequence.
How fatal would such a distinction have proved in former reigns, when many a circumstance of less significance has been construed into an overt act of high treason? Addison.
SIGNIFICANT. adj. [from significans, Fr. significans, Latin.]
1. Expressive of something beyond the external mark.
Since you are tongue-ty'd, and so loth to speak,
In dumb significant proclaim your thoughts. Shakesp. H. VI.
2. Betokening; standing as a sign of something.
It was well said of Plotinus, that the stars were significant,
but not efficient. Ralph.
3. Expressive or representative in an eminent degree; forcible to impress the intended meaning.
Whereas it may be objected, that to add to religious duties such rites and ceremonies as are significant, is to institute new sacraments. Holder.
Common life is full of this kind of significant expressions, by knocking, beckoning, frowning, and pointing; and dumb persons are sagacious in the use of them. Holder on Speech.
The Romans joined both devices, to make the emblem the more significant; as, indeed, they could not too much extol the learning and military virtues of this emperor. Addison.
4. Important; momentous. A low word.
SIGNIFICANTLY. adv. [from significant.] With force of expression.
Christianity is known in Scripture by no name to significantly as by the simplicity of the Gospel. South's Sermons.
SIGNIFICATION. n. f. [from significatio, French; significatio, Latin;
from signify.]
1. The act of making known by signs.
A lie is properly a species of injustice, and a violation of the right of that person to whom the false speech is directed; for all speaking, or signification of one's mind, implies an act or address of one man to another. South.
2. Meaning expressed by a sign or word.
An adjective requirereth another word to be joined with him, to shew his signification. Academe.
Brute animals make divers motions to have several significations, to call, warn, cherish, and threaten. Holder.
SIGNIFICATIVE. adj. [from significativus, Fr. from signify.]
1. Betokening by an external sign.
The holy symbols or signs are not barely significative, but what by divine institution they represent and testify unto our souls, is truly and certainly delivered unto us. Brerewood.
2. Forcible; strongly expressive.
Neither in the degrees of kindred they were destitute of significative words; for whom we call grandfather, they called caldader; whom we call great-grandfather, they called thirda-dader. Camden's Remains.
SIGNIFICATORY. n. f. [from significatus.] That which signifies or betokens.
Here is a double significatory of the spirit, a word and a sign. Taylor.
To SIGNIFY. v. a. [from signifier, French; significo, Latin.]
1. To declare by some token or sign.
The maid from that ill omen turn'd her eyes,
Nor knew what signify'd the boding sign,
But found the pow'r displeas'd. Dryden.
Those parts of nature, into which the chaos was divided, they signified by dark and obscure names; as the night, tartarus, and oceanus. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
2. To mean; to express.
Life's but a walking shadow; a poor player,
That struts and frets his hour upon the stage,
And then is heard no more! It is a tale,
Told by an idiot, full of sound and fury, Signifying nothing! Shakesp. Macbeth.
Stephano, signify
Within the house your mistress is at hand. Shakesp. Tempest.
3. To import; to weigh. This is seldom used but interroga-tively, what signifies? or with much, little, or nothing.
Though he that sins frequently, and repents frequently, gives reason to believe his repentances before God signify nothing; yet that is nothing to us.
What signifies the splendor of courts, considering the flimsy attendances that go along with it? L'Estrange.
He hath one way more, which although it signify little to men of sober reason, yet unhappily hits the suspicious humour of men, that governors have a design to impose. Tillson.
If the first of these fail, the power of Adam, were it never so great, will signify nothing to the present societies in the world. Locke.
What

SIL

- What signifies the people's consent in making and repealing laws, if the person who administers hath no tie. Swift.
4. To make known.
I'll to the king, and signify to him,
That thus I have resign'd to you my charge. Shakesp. R. III.
He sent and signified it by his angel unto John. Rev. i. 1.
The government should signify to the protestants of Ireland, that want of silver is not to be remedied. Swift.
To SIGNIFY. v. n. To express meaning with force.
If the words be but comely and signifying, and the sense gentle, there is juice; but where that wanteth, the language is thin. Ben. Johnson.
SIGNIORY. n. f. [from signoria, Italian.] Lordship; dominion.
If ancient sorrow be most reverent,
Give mine the benefit of signiory,
And let my griefs frown on the upper hand. Shakesp. R. III.
At that time
Through all the signiories it was the first,
And Prospero the prime duke. Shakesp. Tempest.
The earls, their titles and their signiories
They must restore again.
My brave progenitors, by valour, zeal,
Gain'd those high honours, princely signiories,
And proud prerogatives. West.
SIGNPOST. n. f. [from signum and post.] That upon which a sign hangs.
He should share with them in the preserving
A shed or signpost. Ben. Johnson's Catiline.
This noble invention of our author's hath been copied by so many signpost dawblers, that now 'tis grown fullsome, rather by their want of skill than by the commonness. Dryden.
SICK. adv. The old word for sure, or surely. Spenfer.
SICKNESS. n. f. [from siker.] Surenels; safety.
SILENCE. n. f. [from silence, French; silentium, Latin.]
1. The state of holding peace.
Unto me men gave ear, and waited and kept silence at my counsel. Job xxix. 21.
I suffer not a woman to teach, nor to usurp authority over the man, but to be in silence. 1 Tim. ii. 12.
First to himself he inward silence broke. Milton.
2. Habitual taciturnity; not loquacity.
I think the best grace of wit will shortly turn into silence,
And discourse grow commendable in none but parrots. Shak.
3. Secrecy.
4. Stiness; not noise.
Here all their rage, and ev'n their murmurs cease,
And sacred silence reigns, and universal peace. Pope.
5. Not mention.
Thus fame shall be achiev'd,
And what most merits fame in silence hid. Milton.
SILENCE. interj. An authoritative restraint of speech.
Sir, have pity; I'll be his surety.—
—Silence: one word more Shall make me chide thee, if not hate thee. Shakesp. Lear.
To SILENCE. v. a. [from the noun.] To still; to oblige to hold peace.
We must suggest the people, that to's pow'r
He wou'd have made them mules, silenc'd their pleaders, and disproportioned their freedoms. Shakesp. Lear.
The ambassador is silenc'd. Shakesp. Hen. VIII.
Silence that dreadful bell; it frights the life
From her propriety. Shakesp. Othello.
This pallid as an oracle, and silenced those that moved the question. Bacon's Hen. VII.
Thus could not the mouths of worthy martyrs be silenced, who being expost unto wolves, gave loud expressions of their faith, and were heard as high as heaven. Brown's Vulgar Err.
This would silence all further opposition. Clarendon.
Since in dark sorrow I my days did spend,
I could not silence my complaints. Denham.
These dying lovers, and their floating sons,
Suspend the sight and silence all our guns. Waller.
Had they duly considered the extent of infinite knowledge and power, these would have silenced their scruples, and they had adored the amazing mystery. Rogers's Sermons.
If it please him altogether to silence me, so that I shall not only speak with difficulty, but wholly be disabled to open my mouth, to any articulate utterance; yet I hope he will give me grace, even in my thoughts, to praise him. Wake.
The thunder spoke, nor durst the queen reply;
A reverend horror silenc'd all the sky. Pope's Iliad.
SILENT. adj. [from silens, Latin.]
1. Not speaking; mute.
O my God, I cry in the day time, and in the night season I am not silent. Psalms xxii. 2.
Silent, and in face
Confounded long they sat as stricken mute. Milton.
Be not silent to me: left if thou be silent, I become like those that go down into the pit. Psalms xxviii. 1.
2. Not talkative; not loquacious.
Ulysses, adds he, was the most eloquent and most silent of men; he knew that a word spoken never wrought so much good as a word conceal'd. Notes on the Odyssey.

SIL

3. Still; having no noise.
Deep night, dark night, the silent of the night,
The time of night when Troy was set on fire,
The time when screech-owls cry, and ban-dogs howl. Shak.
Now is the pleasant time,
The cool, the silent, save where silence yields
To the night-warbling bird. Milton.
4. Wanting efficacy. I think an Hebraism.
Second and instrumental causes, together with nature itself, without that operative faculty which God gave them, would become silent, virtueless and dead. Raleigh's History.
The sun to me is dark,
And silent as the moon,
When she deserts the night,
Hid in her vacant interlunar cave. Milton.
5. Not mentioning.
This new created world, whereof in hell
Fame is not silent. Milton.
SILENTLY. adv. [from silent.]
1. Without speech.
When with one three nations join to fight,
They silently confess that one more brave. Dryden.
For me they beg, each silently
Demands thy grace, and seems to watch thy eye. Dryden.
2. Without noise.
You to a certain victory are led;
Your men all arm'd stand silently within. Dryden.
3. Without mention.
The difficulties remain still, till he can show who is meant by right heir, in all those cases where the present possessor hath no son: this he silently passes over. Locke.
SILICIOUS. adj. [from silicium.] It should be therefore written silicious. Made of hair.
The silicious and hairy vests of the strictest orders of friars, derive their institution from St. John and Elias. Brown.
SILICULOSE. adj. [from silicula, Latin.] Husky; full of husks. Diét.
SILICINOSE. adj. [from siliginosus, Latin.] Made of fine wheat. Diét.
SILICULOSA. n. f. [Latin.]
1. [With gold finers.] A carat of which six make a scruple.
2. [Silique, French, with botanists.] The seed-vessel, husk, cod, or shell of such plants as are of the pulse kind. Diét.
SILIQUE. n. f. [from silique, Latin.] Having a pod, or siliqueous; capula.
All the tetrapetalous siliqueous plants are alkalescent. Arbuth.
SILK. n. f. [from seolc, Saxon.]
1. The thread of the worm that turns afterwards to a butterfly.
The worms were hallow'd that did breed the silk;
And it was dy'd in mummy, which the skillful Confer'd of maiden's hearts. Shakesp. Othello.
2. The stuff made of the worms thread.
Let not the creaking of shoes, or rustling of silks betray thy poor heart to woman. Shakesp. Lear.
He caus'd the shore to be covered with Persian silk for him to tread upon. Knolles.
Without the worm, in Persian silks we shine. Waller.
SILKEN. adj. [from silk.]
1. Made of silk.
Men counsel and give comfort to that grief
Which they themselves not feel; but tasting it,
Their counsel turns to passion, which before
Would give preceptual medicine to rage;
Fetter strong madness in a silken thread;
Charm ach with air, and agony with words. Shakesp. Lear.
Now, will we revel it
With silken coats, and caps, and golden rings. Shakesp. Lear.
She weeps,
And words address'd seem tears diffus'd,
Wetting the borders of her silken veil. Milton.
2. Soft; tender.
Full many a lady fair, in court full oft
Beholding them, him secretly envide,
And whilst that two such fans, so silken soft,
And golden fair, her love would her provide. Spenfer.
All the youth of England are on fire,
And silken dalliance in the wardrobe lies. Shakesp. Hen. V.
For then the hills with pleasing shades are crown'd,
And sleeps are sweeter on the silken ground. Dryden.
Dress up virtue in all the beauties of oratory, and you will find the wild passions of men too violent to be restrained by such mild and silken language. Watts's Improv. of the Mind.
3. Dressed in silk.
Shall a beardless boy,
A cocker'd, silken wanton, brave our fields,
And feth his spirit in a warlike foil,
Mocking the air with colours idly spread,
And find no check? Shakesp. King John.
SILKMERCE. n. f. [from silk and mercer.] A dealer in silk.
SILKWEAVER. n. f. [from silk and weaver.] One whose trade is to weave silken stuffs.
True English hate your monies paltry arts;
For you are all silk-weavers in your hearts. Dryden.
The Chinese are ingenious silk-weavers. Watts.
24 C
SILK WORM.

SIL

- SILK WORM. n. f. [silk and worm.] The worm that spins silk. Grasshoppers eat up the green of whole countries, and silk-worms devour leaves swiftly. Bacon's Natural History.
Broad were the banners, and of snowy hue,
A purer web the silk-worm never drew. Dryden.
- SILKY. adj. [from silk.]
1. Made of silk.
2. Soft; pliant.
These kind of knaves, in plainness,
Harbour more craft, and more corrupt ends
Than twenty silly ducking observants,
That stretch their duties nicely. Shakespeare's K. Lear.
- SILL. n. f. [syl, Sax. suil, French; fulle, Dutch; fulgan, to found, Gothick.] The timber or stone at the foot of the door.
The farmer's goose,
Grown fat with corn and sitting still,
Can scarce get o'er the barn-door sill:
And hardly waddles forth. Swift.
- SILLABUB. n. f. [This word has exercised the etymologists. Minshew thinks it corrupted from swillingbubbles. Junius omits it. Henshaw, whom Skinner follows, deduces it from the Dutch fulle, a pipe, and buck, a paunch; because sillabubs are commonly drunk through a spout, out of a jug with a large belly. It seems more probably derived from esil, in old English vinegar, esil a bouc, vinegar for the mouth, vinegar made pleasant.] Curds made by milking upon vinegar.
Joan takes her neat rubb'd pail, and now
She trips to milk the fad-red cow;
Where, for some sturdy foot-ball swain,
Joan strokes a sillabub or twain. Watson.
- A feat,
By some rich farmer's wife and sister dreft,
Might be resembled to a sick man's dream,
Where all ideas huddling run to fast,
That sillabubs come first, and soups the last. King.
- SILBLY. adv. [from silly.] In a silly manner; simply; foolishly.
I wonder, what thou and I Did, till we lov'd? were we not wean'd till then,
But suck'd on childish pleasures silly?
Or slumber'd we in the seven sleepers den?
We are caught as silly as the bird in the net. L'Estrange.
Do, do, look silly, good colonel; 'tis a decent melancholy after an absolute defeat. Dryden's Spanish Friar.
- SILLINESS. n. f. [from silly.] Simplicity; weakness; harmfulness folly.
The silliness of the person does not derogate from the dignity of his character. L'Estrange.
- SILLY. adj. [selig, German. Skinner.]
1. Harmless; innocent; inoffensive; plain; artless.
2. Weak; helpless.
After long storms,
In dread of death and dangerous dismay,
With which my silly bark was tossed fore,
I do at length desery the happy shore. Spenser.
3. Foolish; witless.
Perhaps their loves, or else their sheep,
Was that did their silly thoughts to busy keep.
The meanest subjects censure the actions of the greatest prince; the silliest servants, of the wisest master. Temple.
I have no discontent at living here; besides what arises from a silly spirit of liberty, which I resolve to throw off. Swift.
Such parts of writings as are stupid or silly, false or mistaken, should become subjects of occasional criticism. Watts.
- SILLYHOW. n. f. [Perhaps from pelz, happy, and peopt, the head.] The membrane that covers the head of the fetus.
Great conceits are raised, of the membranous covering called the sillyhow, sometimes found about the heads of children upon their birth. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
- SILT. n. f. Mud; slime.
Several trees of oak and fir stand in firm earth below the moor, near Thorny, in all probability covered by inundation, and the silt and morish earth exaggerated upon them. Hale.
- SILVAN. adj. [from silva, Latin.] Woody; full of woods.
Betwixt two rows of rocks, a silvan scene
Appears above, and groves for ever green. Dryden.
- SILVER. n. f. [ireolpen, Saxon; silver, Dutch.]
1. Silver is a white and hard metal, next in weight to gold. Watts's Logick.
2. Any thing of soft splendour.
Pallas, piteous of her plaintive cries,
In slumber clos'd her silver-streaming eyes. Pope.
3. Money made of silver.
SILVER. adj.
1. Made of silver.
Put my silver cup in the sack's mouth. Gen. xlv. 2.
Hence had the huntress Dian her dread bow,
Fair silver-shafted queen for ever chaste.
The silver-shafted goddess of the place. Pope's Odyssey.
2. White like silver.
Of all the race of silver-winged flies
Was none more favourable, nor more fair,
Than Clarion. Spenser.

SIM

- Old Salisbury, shame to thy silver hair,
Thou mad misleader of thy brain-sick son.
The great in honour are not always wise,
Nor judgment under silver tresses lies.
Others on silver-lakes and rivers bath'd
Their downy breast. Shakespeare.
3. Having a pale lustre.
So sweet a kiss the golden sun gives not
To those fresh morning drops upon the rose,
As thy eye beams, when their fresh rays have smote
The night of dew that on my cheeks down flows;
Nor shines the silver moon one half so bright,
Through the transparent bosom of the deep,
As doth thy face through tears of mine give light. Shakespeare.
4. Soft of voice. This phrase is Italian, voce argentina.
From all their groves, which with the heavenly noises,
Of their sweet instruments were wont to found,
And th' hollow hills, from which their silver voices
Were wont redoubled echoes to rebound,
Did now rebound with nought but rueful cries,
And yelling shrieks thrown up into the skies. Spenser.
It is my love that calls upon my name,
How silver sweet found lovers tongues by night,
Like softest musick to attending ears. Shakespeare.
- To SILVER. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To cover superficially with silver.
There be fools alive, I wis,
Silver'd o'er, and so was this. Shakespeare.
The splendour of silver is more pleasing to some eyes, than that of gold; as in cloth of silver, and silver'd rapiers. Bacon.
Silvering will fully and canker more than gilding. Bacon.
A gilder shew'd me a ring silver'd over with mercurial fumes, which he was then to refigure to its native yellow. Boyle.
2. To adorn with mild lustre.
Here retir'd the sinking billows deep,
And smiling calmness silver'd o'er the deep. Pope.
- SILVERBEATER. n. f. [silver and beat.] One that foliates silver.
Silverbeaters chuse the finest coin, as that which is most extensive under the hammer. Boyle.
- SILVERLING. n. f.
A thousand vines, at a thousand silverlings, shall be for briars and thorns. Isaiah vii. 23.
- SILVERLY. adv. [from silver.] With the appearance of silver.
Let me wipe off this honourable dew
That silverly doth progress on thy cheeks. Shakespeare.
- SILVERSMITH. n. f. [silver and smith.] One that works in silver.
Demetrius a silversmith, made shrines for Diana. Acts xix.
- SILVERTHISTLE. n. f. Plants.
SILVERWEED. n. f. Plants.
SILVERTREE. n. f. [conocarpodendron, Latin.] A plant.
The leaves throughout the year are of a fine silver colour; it hath an apetalous flameous flower, which is surrounded by a number of long leaves immediately under the flower-cup, which consists of five narrow leaves; these are succeeded by cones, in shape like those of the larchtree; the seeds are each of them included in a square cell. Miller.
- SILVERY. adj. [from silver.] Besprinkled with silver.
A gritty stone, with small spangles of a white silvery tale in it. Woodward on Bessil.
Of all th' enamel'd race whose silvery wing
Waves to the tepid zephyrs of the spring,
Once brightest thin'd this child of heat and air. Dunciad.
- SIMAR. n. f. [simarra, French.] A woman's robe.
The ladies dress'd in rich simars were seen,
Of Florence tatin, flower'd with white and green. Dryden.
- SIMILAR. adj. [similaire, French; from similis, Latin.]
SIMILARY. adj. [similaire, French; from similis, Latin.]
1. Homogeneous; having one part like another.
Minerals appear to the eye to be perfectly similar, as metals; or at least to consist but of two or three distinct ingredients, as cinnabar. Boyle.
2. Resembling; having resemblance.
The laws of England, relative to those matters, were the original and exemplar from whence those similar or parallel laws of Scotland were derived. Hale's Hist. of Com. Law of En.
- SIMILARITY. n. f. [from similar.] Likeness.
The blood and chyle are intimately mixed, and by attrition attenuated; by which the mixture acquires a greater degree of fluidity and similarity, or homogeneity. Arbuthnot.
- SIMILE. n. f. [simile, Latin.] A comparison by which any thing is illustrated or aggrandized.
Their rhimes,
Full of protest, of oath, and big compare,
Want similes. Shakespeare's Troilus and Cressida.
Lucentio slip'd me, like his greyhound,
Which runs himself, and catches for his master:
A good swift simile, but something curriish. Shakespeare.

SIM

- In argument,
Similes are like songs in love,
They much describe; they nothing prove. Prior.
Poets, to give a loofe to a warm fancy, not only expatiate in their similes, but introduce them too frequently. Garth.
- SIMILITUDE. n. f. [similitudo, French; similitudo, Latin.]
1. Likeness; resemblance.
Similitudo of substance would cause attraction, where the body is wholly freed from the motion of gravity; for then lead would draw lead. Bacon's Natural History.
Our immortal souls, while righteous, are by God himself beautified with the title of his own image and similitudo. Ral.
Let us make man in our image, man
In our similitudo, and let them rule
Over the fish and fowl. Milton.
Similitudo to the Deity was not regarded in the things they gave divine worship to, and looked on as symbols of the god they worshipped. Stillingfleet.
If we compare the picture of a man, drawn at the years of seventeen, with that of the same person at the years of threescore, hardly the least trace or similitudo of one face can be found in the other. South's Sermons.
Fate some future bard shall join,
In sad similitudo of griefs to mine,
Condemn'd whole years in absence to deplore,
And image charms he must behold no more. Pope.
2. Comparison; simile.
Plutarch, in the first of his tractates, by sundry similitudes, shews us the force of education. Watson.
Tasso, in his similitudes, never departed from the woods; that is, all his comparisons were taken from the country. Dryd.
- SIMITAR. n. f. [See CRIMETER.] A crooked or falcated sword with a convex edge.
To SIMMER. v. n. [A word made probably from the sound, but written by Skinner, simber.] To boil gently; to boil with a gentle hissing.
Place a vessel in warm sand, increasing the heat by degrees, till the spirit simmer or boil a little. Boyle.
Their vital heat and moisture may always not only simber in one sluggish tenour, but sometimes boil up higher, and seeth over, the fire of life being more than ordinarily kindled upon some emergent occasion. More's Antidote against Atheism.
- SIMNEL. [n. f. [simnellus, low Latin.] A kind of sweet bread or cake.
SIMON'ACK. n. f. [simoniaque, French; simoniacus, Latin.] One who buys or sells preferment in the church.
If the bishop alleges that the person presented is a simoniac, or unlearned, they are to proceed to trial. Ayliffe.
- SIMON'ACAL. adj. [from simoniac.] Guilty of buying or selling ecclesiastical preferment.
Add to your criminals the simoniacal ladies, who seduce the sacred order into the difficulty of breaking their troth. Speet.
- SIMONY. n. f. [simonia, French; simonia, Latin.] The crime of buying or selling church preferment.
One that by suggestion
Tied all the kingdom; simony was fair play.
His own opinion was his law. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.
Many papers remain in private hands, of which one is of simony; and I wish the world might see it, that it might undeceive some patrons, who think they have discharged that great trust to God and man, if they take no money for a living, though it may be parted with for other ends less justifiable. Walton's Life of Bishop Sanderfon.
No simony nor sinecure is known;
There works the bee, no honey for the drone. Garth.
- To SIMPER. v. n. [from rymbelan, Saxon, to keep holiday, Skinner.] He derives simper from the same word, and confirms his etymology by writing it simier. It is perhaps derived from simmer, as it may seem to imitate the dimples of water gently boiling.] To smile; generally to smile foolishly.
A made countenance about her mouth between simpering and smiling, her head bowed somewhat down, seemed to languish with over much idleness. Sidney.
I charge you, O men, for the love you bear to women, as I perceive by your simpering none of you hate them, to like as much as pleases them. Shakespeare's As you like it.
Stars above simper and shine,
As having keys unto thy love, while poor I pine. Herbert.
Drest in smiles of sweet Cecilia shine,
With simpering angels, palms and harps divine. Pope.
- SIMPER. n. f. [from the verb.] Smile; generally a foolish smile.
The wit at his elbow stared him in the face, with so bewitching a grin, that the whistler relaxed his fibres into a kind of simper, and at length burst out into an open laugh. Add.
Great Tibbald nods: the proud Parnassian sneer,
The conscious simper, and the jealous leer,
Mix on his look. Pope's Dunciad.

SIM

- SIMPLE. adj. [simplex, Latin; simple, French.]
1. Plain; artless; unskilled; undeignings; sincere; harmless.
Were it not to satisfy the minds of the simpler sort of men, these nice curiosities are not worthy the labour which we bestow to answer them. Hooker.
They meet upon the way,
A simple husbandman in garments grey. Hubbard's Tale.
I am a simple woman, much too weak
To oppose your cunning. Shakespeare's Hen. VIII.
O Ethelinda,
My heart was made to fit and pair with thine,
Simple and plain, and fraught with artless tenderness. Rare.
2. Uncompounded; unmingled; single; only one; plain; not complicated.
To make the compound pass for the rich metal simple, is an adulteration or counterfeiting. Bacon.
Simple philosophically signifies single, but vulgarly foolish. Watts.
Among substances some are called simple, some compound, whether taken in a philosophical or vulgar sense. Watts.
If we take simple and compound in a vulgar sense, then all those are simple substances which are generally esteemed uniform in their natures; to every herb is called a simple, and every metal a mineral; though the chymist perhaps may find all his several elements in each of them. Watts's Logick.
Let Newton, pure intelligence, whom God
To mortals lent, to trace his boundless works,
From laws, sublimely simple, speak thy fame
In all philosophy. Thomson's Summer.
3. Silly; not wise; not cunning.
The simple believeth every word; but the prudent man looketh well to his going. Prov. xv.
I would have you wise unto that which is good, and simple concerning evil. Rom. xvi. 19.
Dick, simple odes too many shew
My servile complaisance to Cloc. Prior.
- SIMPLE. n. f. [simple, French.] A single ingredient in a medicine; a drug. It is popularly used for an herb.
Of simples in these groves that grow,
We'll learn the perfect skill;
The nature of each herb to know,
Which cures, and which can kill. Dryden's 2. of Cynthia.
Our softer nurse of nature is repose,
The which he lacks; that to provoke in him,
Are many simples operative, whose power
Will close the eye of anguish. Shakespeare's K. Lear.
He would ope his leathern scrip,
And shew me simples of a thousand names,
Telling their strange and vigorous faculties. Milton.
What virtue is in this remedy lies in the naked simple itself, as it comes over from the Indies. Temple.
Around its entries nodding poppies grow,
And all cool simples that sweet rest bestow;
Night from the plants their sleepy virtue drains,
And passing, sheds it on the silent plains.
Med'cine is mine: what herbs and simples grow
In fields and forests, all their powers I know,
And am the great physician call'd. Dryden.
- To SIMPLE. v. n. To gather simples.
As once the foaming boar he chas'd,
Lascivious Circe well the youth survey'd,
As simpling on the flow'ry hills he stray'd. Garth.
- SIMPLESS. n. f. [simpless, French.] Simplicity; filliness; folly.
An obsolete word.
Their weeds been not so nighly were,
Such simpless mought them thend,
They been yclad in purple and pall,
They reign and ruler over all. Spenser's Pastorals.
- SIMPLENESS. n. f. [from simple.] The quality of being simple.
I will hear that play:
For never any thing can be amiss,
When simpleness and duty tender it. Shakespeare.
Such perfect elements may be found in these four known bodies that we call pure ones; for they are least compounded, and approach most to the simpleness of the elements. Digby.
- SIMPLER. n. f. [from simple.] A simplist. An herbarist.
SIMPLETON. n. f. [from simple.] A silly mortal; a trifier; a foolish fellow. A low word.
A country farmer sent his man to look after an ox; the simpleton went hunting up and down till he found him in a wood. L'Estrange.
Those letters may prove a discredit, as lasting as mercenary scribblers, or curious simpletons can make it. Pope.
- SIMPLYCITY. n. f. [simplicitas, Latin; simplicité, French.]
1. Plainness; artlessness; not subtilty; not cunning; not deceit.
The sweet-minded Philoclea was in their degree of well doing, to whom the not knowing of evil serveth for a ground of virtue, and hold their inward powers in better form, with an unpotted simplicity, than many who rather cunningly seek to know what goodness is, than willingly take unto themselves the following of it. Sidney.

SIN

In low simplicity,
He lends out money gratis, and brings down
The rate of usance. Shakespeare.
Marquis Dorset, a man for his harmless simplicity, neither miffed nor much regarded, was created Duke. Haywood.
Suspicion sleeps
At wisdom's gate, and to simplicity
Religions her charge. Milton.
Of manners gentle, of affections mild;
In wit a man, simplicity a child. Pope.
Beauty is their own,
The feeling heart, simplicity of life,
And elegance and taste. Thomson's Summer.
The native elegance and simplicity of her manners, were accompanied with real benevolence of heart. Female Quixote.
2. Plainness; not subtilty; not abstruseness.
They keep the reverend simplicity of ancient times. Hooker.
Those enter into farther speculations herein, which is the itch of curiosity, and content not themselves with the sim- plicity of that doctrine, within which this church hath contained herself. Hammond's Fundamentals.
3. Plainness; not finery.
They represent our poet, when he left Mantua for Rome, dressed in his best habit, too fine for the place whence he came,
and yet retaining part of its simplicity. Dryden.
4. Singleness; not composition; state of being uncompounded.
Mandrakes afford a papaverous and unpleasant odour in the leaf or apple, as is discoverable in their simplicity and mixture.
Brown's Vulg. Errors.
We are led to conceive that great machine of the world, to have been once in a state of greater simplicity than now it is, as to conceive a watch once in its first and simple materials. Burnet.
5. Weakness; silliness.
Many that know what they should do, would nevertheless dissemble it, and to excuse themselves, pretend ignorance and simplicity, which now they cannot. Hooker.
How long ye simple ones will ye love simplicity? and fools hate knowledge? Prov. i. 22.
SIMPLIST. n. f. [from simple.] One skilled in simples.
A plant so unlike a rose, it hath been mistaken by some good simplicists for amomum. Brown's Vulg. Errors.
SIMPLY. adv. [from simple.]
1. Without art; without subtilty; plainly; artlessly.
Accomplishing great things by things deem'd weak;
Subverting worldly strong and worldly wise,
By simply meek. Milton's Paradise Lost.
2. Of itself; without addition.
This question about the changing of laws concerneth only such laws as are positive, and do make that now good or evil, by being commanded or forbidden, which otherwise of itself were not simply the one or the other. Hooker.
3. Merely; solely.
Under man, no creature in the world is capable of felicity and bliss; because their chiefest perfection consisteth in that which is best for them, but not in that which is simply best, as ours doth. Hooker.
I will eat and drink, and sleep as soft
As captain shall; simply the thing I am
Shall make me live. Shakespeare.
To say, or to do ought with memory and imitation, no purpose or respect should sooner move us, than simply the love of God and of mankind. Milton.
4. Foolishly; sillily.
SIMULAR. n. f. [from simulus, Latin.] One that counterfeits.
Hide thee, thou bloody hand,
Thou perjuror, thou simular of virtue,
That art incestuous. Shakespeare's King Lear.
SIMULATION. n. f. [from simulation, French; simulatio from simulus, Latin.] That part of hypocrisy which pretends that to be which is not.
Simulation is a vice rising of a natural falseness, or fear-fulness; or of a mind that hath some main faults; which because a man must needs disguise, it maketh him practise simulation. Bacon.
For the unquestionable virtues of her person and mind, he well expressed his love in an act and time of no simula- tion towards his end, bequeathing her all his mansion-houses, and a power to dispose of his whole personal estate. Watson.
For distinction fake, a deceiving by word is commonly called a lie; and deceiving by actions, gestures, or behaviour, is called simulation or hypocrisy. South's Sermons.
SIMULTANEOUS. adj. [from simultaneus, Latin.] Acting together; existing at the same time.
If the parts may all change places at the same time, without any respect of priority or posteriority to each other's motion, why may not bullets, closely crowded in a box, move by a like mutual and simultaneous exchange? Glanville.
SIN. n. f. [from syn, Saxon.]
1. An act against the laws of God; a violation of the laws of religion.
How hast thou the heart,
Being a divine, a ghostly confessor,
4

SIN

A sin abolver, and my friend profess,
To mangle me with that word banishment. Shakespeare.
But those that sleep, and think not on their sin,
Pinch them. Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.
Thou knowest, Lord, that I am pure from all sin with man. Tob. iii. 14.
2. Habitual negligence of religion.
Sin, death, and hell, have set their marks upon him,
And all their ministers attend on him. Shakespeare.
Dishonest shame
Of nature's works: honour dishonourable!
Sin-bred! how have ye troubled all mankind?
Is there no means, but that a sin-fick land
Should be let blood with such a boisterous hand? Milton.
Vice or virtue chiefly imply the relation of our actions to men in this world: sin and holiness rather imply their relation to God and the other world. Watson's Legick.
Light from her thought, as summer's careless robe,
Fell each affection of this sin-worn globe. Brooke.
3. It is used by Shakespeare emphatically for a man enormously wicked.
Thy ambition,
Thou scarlet sin, rob'd this bewailing land
Of noble Buckingham. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.
TO SIN. v. n. [from the noun.]
1. To neglect the laws of religion; to violate the laws of religion.
Stand in awe and sin not. Psalms iv. 4.
Many also have perished, err'd, and sin'd for women. Esdr.
He shall ask, and he shall give him life for them that sin not unto death. 1 John v. 16.
2. To offend against right.
I am a man,
More sin'd against than sinning. Shakespeare.
And who but wishes to invert the laws
Of order, sin against th' eternal cause. Pope's Essay on Man.
SINWORM. n. f. [from sin and worm.] A vile sinful creature.
I would not soil these pure ambrosial weeds,
With the rank vapours of the sin-worm mould. Milton.
SINCE. adv. [formed by contraction from sithence, or sith thence, from sith, Saxon.]
1. Because that.
Since the clearest discoveries we have of other spirits, besides God and our own souls, are imparted by revelation, the information of them should be taken from thence. Lake.
Since truth and constancy are vain,
Since neither love, nor sense of pain,
Nor force of reason can persuade,
Then let example be obey'd. Glanville.
2. From the time that.
Am not I thine ass, upon which thou hast ridden ever since
I was thine unto this day? Numb. xxii. 30.
He is the most improved mind since you saw him, that ever was, without shifting into a new body. Pope.
3. Ago; before this.
About two years since, it so fell out, that he was brought to a great lady's house. Sidney.
Spies held me in chafe, that I was forc'd to wheel
Three or four miles about; else had I, fir,
Half an hour since, brought my report. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
A law was made no longer since than the twenty eighth of Henry the eighth. Davies's Hist. of Ireland.
How many ages since has Virgil writ?
How many ages since has Virgil writ?
SINCE. preposition. After; reckoning from some time past to the time present.
He since the morning hour set out from heav'n. Milton.
If such a man arise, I have a model by which he may build a nobler poem than any extant since the ancients. Dryden.
SINCERE. adj. [from sincerus, Latin; sincerus, French.]
1. Unhurt; uninjured.
He try'd a tough well chosen spear;
Th' inviolable body flood sincere. Dryden.
2. Pure; unmingled.
Pardon my tears, 'tis joy which bids them flow:
A joy which never was sincere till now;
That which my conquest gave, I could not prize,
Or 'twas imperfect till I saw your eyes. Dryden.
The pleasures of sense best taste sincere and pure always, without mixture or alloy, without being distracted in the pursuit, or disquieted in the use of them. Autobary.
Animal substances differ from vegetable, in that being reduced to ashes, they are perfectly insipid, and in that there is no sincere acid in any animal juice. Arbutnot on Aliments.
3. Honest; undissembling; uncorrupt.
This top proud fellow,
Whom from the flow of gall I name not, but
From sincere motions by intelligence
I do know to be corrupt. Shakespeare's Hen. VIII.
Nor troubled at these tidings from the earth,
Which your sincerest care could not prevent;
Foretold so lately what would come to pass,
When first this temper cross'd the gulf from hell. Milton.

SIN

In English I would have all Gallicisms avoided, that our tongue may be sincere, and that we may keep to our own language. Felton on the Clafficks.
SINCERELY. adv. [from sincere.] Honestly; without hypocrisy;
with purity of heart.
The purer and perfecter our religion is, the worthier effects it hath in them who stedfastly and sincerely embrace it. Hooker.
That you may, fair lady,
Perceive I speak sincerely, the king's majesty
Does purpose honour to you. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.
In your whole reasoning, keep your mind sincerely intent in the pursuit of truth. Watson's Legick.
SINCERENESS. n. f. [from sincere, French; from sincere.]
SINCERITY. n. f. [from sincere, French; from sincere.]
1. Honesty of intention; purity of mind.
Jesus Christ has purchased for us terms of reconciliation, who will accept of sincerity instead of perfection; but then this sincerity implies our honest endeavours to do our utmost. Rogers.
2. Freedom from hypocrisy.
In thy consort cease to fear a foe;
For thee the feels sincerity of woe. Pope's Odyssey.
SIN. n. f. [Latin.] A fold; a wrapper.
There were found a book and a letter, both written in fine parchment, and wrapped in sindons of linen. Bacon.
SINE. n. f. [from sinus, Latin.] A right sine, in geometry, is a right line drawn from one end of an arch perpendicularly upon the diameter drawn from the other end of that arch; or it is half the chord of twice the arch. Harris.
Whatever inclinations the rays have to the plane of incidence, the sine of the angle of incidence of every ray, considered apart, shall have to the sine of the angle of refraction a constant ratio. Cheyne's Phil. Princ.
SINCURE. n. f. [from sine, without, and cura, care, Latin.] An office which has revenue without any employment.
A sincure is a benefice without cure of souls. Ayliffe.
No sycamore nor sincure were known,
Nor would the bee work honey for the drone. Garrth.
SINEW. n. f. [from senpe, Saxon; sinewen, Dutch.]
1. A tendon; the ligament by which the joints are moved.
The torrent roar'd, and we did buffet it
With lusty sinews. Shakespeare's Julius Caesar.
The rooted fibres rose, and from the wound
Black bloody drops distill'd upon the ground:
Mute and amaz'd, my hair with terror stood;
Fear shrunk my sinews, and congeal'd my blood. Dryden.
A sinew cracked, seldom recovers its former strength. Locke.
2. Applied to whatever gives strength or compactness: as, money is the sinew of war.
Some other sinews there are, from which that overplus of strength in persuasion doth arise. Hooker.
Such discouraging of men in the ways of an active conformity to the church's rules, cracks the sinews of government; for it weakens and damps the spirits of the obedient. South.
In the principal figures of a picture the painter is to employ the sinews of his art; for in them consists the principal beauties of his work. Dryden's Dufresnoy.
3. Muscle or nerve.
The feeling pow'r, which is life's root,
Through ev'ry living part itself doth shed
By sinews, which extend from head to foot;
And, like a net, all o'er the body spread. Davies.
TO SINEW. v. a. [from the noun.] To knit as by sinews.
Not in use.
Ask the lady Bona for thy queen;
So shalt thou sinew both these lands together. Shak. H. VI.
SINUED. adj. [from sinew.]
1. Furnished with sinews.
Strong sinew'd was the youth, and big of bone. Dryden.
2. Strong; firm; vigorous.
He will the rather do it, when he sees Ourselves well sinew'd to our defence. Shakespeare's King John.
SINUS. n. f. [from sinus, Latin; sinus, French.] A horse is said to be sinus when he has been over-ridden, and so fatigued that he becomes gaunt-bellied by a stiffness and contraction of the two sinews which are under his belly. Farriers Dict.
SINUS. adj. [from sinew.]
1. Consisting of a sinew; nervous. The nerves and sinews are in poetry often confounded, from nervus, Latin, which signifies a sinew.
The sinew thread my brain lets fall
Through every part,
Can tie those parts, and make me one of all. Dome.
2. Strong; nervous; vigorous; forcible.
And for thy vigour, bull-bearing Milo his addition yields
To sinew Ajax. Shakespeare's Troilus and Cressida.
Worthy fellows, and like to prove Most sinew swordsmen. Shakespeare.
The northern people are large, fair-complexioned, strong,
sinewy, and courageous. Hale's Origin of Mankind.
Fainting as he reach'd the shore,
He dropt his sinewy arms: his knees no more Perform'd their office. Pope's Odyssey.

SIN

SINFUL. adj. [from sin and full.]
1. Alien from God; not holy; un sanctified.
Drive out the sinful pair,
From hallow'd ground th' unholy. Milton.
2. Wicked; not observant of religion; contrary to religion. It is used both of persons and things.
Thrice happy man, said then the father grave,
Whose staggering steps thy steady hand doth lead,
And shews the way his sinful soul to save,
Who better can the way to heaven arad? Fairy Queen.
It is great sin to swear unto a sin;
But greater sin to keep a sinful oath. Shakespeare's Henry VI.
Nature herself, though pure of sinful thought,
Wrought in her so, that, seeing me, she turn'd. Milton.
The stocks looked upon all passions as sinful defects and irregularities, as so many deviations from right reason, making passion to be only another word for perturbation. South.
SINFULLY. adv. [from sinful.] Wickedly; not piously; not according to the ordinance of God.
All this from my remembrance brutish wrath
Sinfully pluckt, and not a man of you Had so much grace to put it in my mind. Shakespeare's R. III.
The humble and contented man pleases himself innocently and easily, while the ambitious man attempts to please others
sinfully and difficultly, and perhaps unsuccessfully too. South.
SINFULNESS. n. f. [from sinful.] Alienation from God; neglect or violation of the duties of religion; contrariety to religious goodness.
I am sent
To shew thee what shall come in future days
To thee, and to thy offspring: good with bad
Expect to hear; supernal grace contending With sinfulness of men. Milton.
Peccableness, the general fault of sick persons, is equally to be avoided for the folly and sinfulness. Wake.
TO SING. v. n. preterite I sang, or sung; participle pass. sung.
[from sin, Saxon; singia, Islandick; singen, Dutch.]
1. To form the voice to melody; to articulate musically.
Orpheus with his lute made trees,
And the mountain tops that freeze,
Bow themselves when he did sing:
To his musick plants and flowers
Ever sprung, as sun and showers
There had made a lasting spring.
Then they for sudden joy did weep,
And some for sorrow sung. Shakespeare's King Lear.
They rather had beheld
Diffident numbers peffering streets, than see
Our tradesmen singing in their shops, and going About their functions friendly. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
The morning stars sang together. Job.
Then shall the trees of the wood sing out at the presence of the Lord. 1 Chron. xvi. 33.
Their airy limbs in sports they exercise,
Some in heroic verse divinely sung. Dryden.
2. To utter sweet sounds inarticulately.
The time of the singing of birds is come. Cant. ii. 12.
You will sooner bind a bird from singing than from flying. Bac.
Join voices all ye birds,
That singing up to heav'n's gate ascend. Milton.
And parrots, imitating human tongue,
And singing birds, in silver cages hung. Dryden's Ovid.
Oh! were I made, by some transforming pow'r,
The captive bird that sings within thy bow'r,
Then might my voice thy list'ning ears employ,
And I those kisses he receives enjoy. Pope's Summer.
3. To make any small or shrill noise.
A man may hear this shower sing in the wind. Shakespeare.
You leaden messengers,
Fly with false aim; pierce the still moving air,
That sings with piercing; do not touch my lord. Shakespeare.
We hear this fearful tempest sing. Shakespeare.
4. To tell in poetry.
Bid her exalt her melancholy wings,
And rais'd from earth, and fav'd from passion, sing
Of human hope by cross event destroy'd,
Of useless wealth and greatness unenjoy'd. Prior.
TO SING. v. a.
1. To relate or mention in poetry.
All the prophets in their age the times
Of great Messiah sing. Milton.
Arms and the man I sing. Dryden's Æn.
Well might he sing the day he could not fear,
And paint the glories he was sure to wear. Smith.
2. To celebrate; to give praises to.
3. To utter harmoniously.
Incles, caddises, cambricks, lawns, why
He sings them over as they were gods and goddesses. Shakespeare.
They that wasted us required of us mirth, saying, sing us one of the songs of Zion. Pf. cxxxvii. 3.
How could we to his godhead sing
Fore'd hallelujahs? Milton.

SIN

They bound the doctor,
Whose beard they have sing'd off with brands of fire. Shak.
You sulph'rous and thought-executing fires,
Singe my white head. Shakespeare.
Drake, in the vaulting file of a soldier, would call this enterprize the singing of the king of Spain's beard. Bacon.
That neither was singed in the combustion of Phaeton, nor overwhelmed by the inundation of Deucalion. Brown.
They leave a singed bottom all involv'd
With stench and smoke. Milton's Paradise Lost.
I singed the toes of an ape through a burning glass, and he never would endure it after. L'Estrange.

Thus riding on his curls he seem'd to pass
A rolling fire along, and singe the grass. Dryden.
SINGER. n. f. [from sing.] One that sings; one whose profession or business is to sing.

His singing was like an unskillful singer, he kept not time.
Shakespeare. Merry Wives of Windsor.
I gat me men singers and women singers, and the delights of the sons of men. Ecc. ii. 3.

To the chief singer on my stringed instruments. Hab. iii.
Thy heart no ruder than the rugged stone,
I might, like Orpheus, with my num'rous moan
Melt to compassion: now my trait'rous song
With thee conspires to do the singer wrong. Waller.
Cockbirds amongst singing birds are ever the better singers, because they are more lively. Bacon's Natural History.

The birds know how to chufe their fare;
To peck this fruit they all forbear:
Those cheerful singers know not why
They should make any haste to die. Waller.
The Grecian tragedy was at first nothing but a chorus of singers. Dryden.

SINGINGMASTER. n. f. [sing and master.] One who teaches to sing.

He employed an itinerant singingmaster to instruct them rightly in the tunes of the psalms. Addison's Spectator.

SINGLE. adj. [singulus, Latin.]

1. One; not double; not more than one.

The words are clear and easy, and their originals are single signification without any ambiguity. South.

Some were single acts, though each compleat;
But every act stood ready to repeat. Dryden.

Then Theseus join'd with bold Pirithous came,
A single concord in a double name. Dryden.

High Alas,
A lonely desert, and an empty land,
Shall scarce afford, for needful hours of rest,
A single house to their benighted guest. Addison on Italy.

Where the poetry or oratory shines, a single reading is not sufficient to satisfy a mind that has a true taste; nor can we make the fullest improvement of them without proper reviews. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

2. Particular; individual.

As no single man is born with a right of controuling the opinions of all the rest, so the world has no title to demand the whole time of any particular person. Pope.

If one single word were to express but one simple idea, and nothing else, there would be scarce any mistake. Watts.

3. Not compounded.

As simple ideas are opposed to complex, and single ideas to compound, so propositions are distinguished: the English tongue has some advantage above the learned languages, which have no usual word to distinguish single from simple. Watts.

4. Alone; having no companion; having no assistant.

Servant of God, well hast thou fought
The better fight, who single hast maintain'd Against revolted multitudes the cause of truth. Milton.

His wisdom such,
Three kingdoms wonder, and three kingdoms fear,
Whilst single he stood forth. Denham.

In sweet possession of the fairy place,
Single and conscious to myself alone,
Of pleasures to th' excluded world unknown. Dryden.

5. Unmarried.

Is the single man therefore blessed? no: as a walled town is more worthy than a village, so is the forehead of a married man more honourable than the bare brow of a bachelor. Shak.

Pygmalion
Abhor'd all womankind; but most a wife;
So single chose to live, and thunn'd to wed,
Well pleas'd to want a comfort of his bed. Dryden.

6. Not complicated; not duplicated.

To make flowers double is effected by often removing them into new earth; as, on the contrary, double flowers, by neglecting and not removing, prove single. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

7. Pure; uncorrupt; not double minded; simple. A scriptural sense.

The light of the body is the eye: if thine eye be single, thy whole body shall be full of light. Mat. vi. 22.

SIN

8. That in which one is opposed to one.

He, when his country, threaten'd with alarms,
Shall more than once the Punick bands affright,
Shall kill the Gaulish king in single fight. Dryden's Zen.

To SINGLE. v. a. [from the adjective.]

1. To chuse out from among others.

I saw him in the battle range about,
And how he singled Clifford forth. Shakespeare. Henry VI.

Gyves and the mill had tam'd thee. Milton's Agonistes.

Begin, auspicious boy, to cast about Thy infant eyes, and with a smile thy mother single out. Dry.

Single the lowliest of the am'rous youth;
Alk for his vows, but hope not for his truth. Prior.

2. To sequester; to withdraw.

Yea simply, faith Basil, and universally, whether it be in works of nature, or of voluntary choice, I see not any thing done as it should be, if it be wrought by an agent singling it self from consors. Hooker.

3. To take alone.

Many men there are, than whom nothing is more commendable when they are singled; and yet, in society with others, none less fit to answer the duties which are looked for at their hands. Hooker.

4. To separate.

Hardly they heard, which by good hunters singled are. Sidn.
SINGLESNESS. n. f. [from single.] Simplicity; sincerity; honest plainness.

It is not the deepness of their knowledge, but the singleness of their belief, which God accepteth.

SINGLY. adv. [from single.]

1. Individually; particularly.

If the injured person be not righted, every one of them is wholly guilty of the injustice, and therefore bound to retribution singly and intirely. Taylor's Rule of Living holy.

They tend to the perfection of human nature, and to make men singly and personally good, or tend to the happiness of society. Tillotson's Sermons.

2. Only; by himself.

Look thee, 'tis so; thou singly honest man,
Here take: the gods out of my misery
Have sent thee treasure. Shakespeare. Timon of Athens.

Belinda
Burns to encounter two adventurous knights,
At ombre singly to decide their doom. Pope.

4. Honestly; simply; sincerely.

SINGULAR. adj. [singularis, Fr. singularis, Latin.]

1. Single; not complex; not compound.

That idea which represents one particular determinate thing is called a singular idea, whether simple, complex, or compound. Watts.

2. [In grammar.] Expressing only one; not plural.

If St. Paul's speaking of himself in the first person singular has so various meanings, his use of the first person plural has a greater latitude. Lact.

3. Particular; unexampled.

So singular a sadness
Must have a cause as strange as the effect. Denham's Sable.

Doublets, if you are innocent, your case is extremely hard, yet it is not singular. Female Quixote.

4. Having something not common to others. It is commonly used in a sense of disapprobation, whether applied to persons or things.

His zeal
None seconded, as singular and rash. Milton.

It is very commendable to be singular in any excellency, and religion is the greatest excellency: to be singular in any thing that is wise and worthy is not a disparagement, but a praise. Tillotson.

5. Alone; that of which there is but one.

These bulls of the emperors and empresses are all very scarce, and some of them almost singular in their kind. Addison.

SINGULARITY. n. f. [singularitas, Fr. singular.]

1. Some character or quality by which one is distinguished from others.

Pliny addeth this singularity to that foil, that the second year the very falling down of the seeds yieldeth corn. Raleigh.

Though, according to the practice of the world, it be singular for men thoroughly to live up to the principles of their religion, yet singularity in this matter is a singular commendation of it.

I took notice of this little figure for the singularity of the instrument: it is not unlike a violin. Addison on Ital's.

2. Any thing remarkable; a curiosity.

Your gallery
Have we pass'd through, not without much content
In many singularities; but we saw not
That which my daughter came to look upon,
The statue of her mother. Shakespeare. Winter's Tale.

3. Particular

SIN

3. Particular privilege or prerogative.

St. Gregory, being himself a bishop of Rome, and writing against the title of universal bishop, saith thus: none of all my predecessors ever consented to use this ungodly title; no bishop of Rome ever took upon him this name of singularity. Hooker.

4. Character or manners different from those of others.

The spirit of singularity in a few ought to give place to public judgment.

Singularity in sin puts it out of fashion, since to be alone in any practice seems to make the judgment of the world against it; but the concurrence of others is a tacit approbation of that in which they concur. South.

To SINGULARIZE. v. a. [se singulariser, Fr. from singular.]

To make single. [from singular.] Particularly; in a manner not common to others.

Solitude and singularity can neither daunt nor disgrace him, unless we could suppose it a disgrace to be singularly good. South.

SINGULR. n. f. [singulus, Latin.] A sigh.

SINISTER. adj. [sinister, Latin.]

1. Being on the left hand; left; not right; not dexter.

My mother's blood
Runs on the dexter cheek, and this sinister
Bounds in my fire's. Shakespeare. Troilus and Cressida.

Captain Spurio, with his cicatrice, an emblem of war, here on his sinister cheek. Shakespeare. All's well that ends well.

But a rib, crooked by nature, bent, as now appears,
More to the part sinister from me drawn. Milton's Pa. Lost.

The spleen is unjustly introduced to invigorate the sinister side, which, being dilated, would rather infirm and debilitate it. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

In his sinister hand, instead of ball,
He plac'd a mighty mug of potent ale. Dryden.

2. Bad; perverse; corrupt; deviating from honesty; unfair.

Is it so strange a matter to find a good thing furthered by ill men of a sinister intent and purpose, whose forwardness is not therefore a bribe to such as favour the same cause with a better and sincere meaning. Hooker.

The duke of Clarence was soon after by sinister means made clean away.

When are there more unworthy men chosen to offices, when is there more strife and contention about elections, or when do partial and sinister affections more utter themselves, than when an election is committed to many? Whitgift.

He professes to have received no sinister measure from his judge, but most willingly humbles himself to the determination of justice. Shakespeare. Measure for Measure.

Those may be accounted the left hands of courts; persons that are full of nimble and sinister tricks and shifts, whereby they pervert the plain courses of courts, and bring justice into oblique lines and labyrinths. Bacon's Essays.

The just person has given the world an assurance, by the constant tenor of his practice, that he makes a conscience of his ways, and that he seems to undermine another's interest by any sinister or inferior arts. South.

3. [Sinistre, French.] Unlucky; inauspicious.

Tempt it again: that is thy act, or none:
What all the feral ills that visit earth,
Brought forth by night, with a sinister birth,
Plagues, famine, fire, could not reach unto,
The sword, nor furies, let thy fury do. Ben. Jonson.

SINISTROUS. adj. [sinister, Latin.] Aburd; perverse; wrong-headed.

A knave or fool can do no harm, even by the most sinistrous and absurd choice. Bentley.

SINISTROUSLY. adv. [from sinister.]

SIN

4. To lose height: to fall to a level.

In vain has nature form'd
Mountains and oceans to oppose his passage;
He bounds o'er all, victorious in his march;
The Alps and Pyreneans sink before him. Addison's Cato.

5. To lose or want prominence.

What were his marks?—A lean cheek, a blue eye and sunken. Shakespeare. As you like it.

Deep dinted wrinkles on her cheeks she draws;
Sunk are her eyes, and toothless are her jaws. Dryden.

6. To be overwhelmed or depressed.

Our country sinks beneath the yoke;
It weeps, it bleeds, and each new day a gash
Is added to her wounds. Shakespeare. Macbeth.

They arraign'd shall sink
Beneath thy sentence.
